Stan Clarke, ex-bassist from Return to Forever and possibly the most creative member of that band has released his best album in School Days. Although the title and cover depicting Clarke spray-painting a subway station wall suggest a relaxed, nostalgic disc, the album paradoxically is his most mature release yet. His previous three releases, (the last two on Nemporor), have all been good albums but they were marred by various excesses. On School Days, Clarke as usual is aided by numerous jazz-rock virtuosos, among them Dave Sancious, Gerry Brown, Billy Cobham, George Duke, John McLaughlin, Steve Gadd, and Ray Gomez. As usual, Clarke wrote and arranged all the music here, using brass and strings well when needed.

Side one opens with the album's title track, a song with an incredible bass riff and an even more amazing Clarke solo. "Quiet Afternoon," a mellow tune where Dave Sancious' mini-moog floats on top of Clarke's beautiful bass, is one of the best here. "The Dancer", a driving, yet still very molodious number features a piccolo bass solo. The second side's opener brings Clarke and John McLaughlin together on the excellent acoustic "Desert Song", which shows the depth that can be created by two excellent acoustic musicians. "Hot Fun", a short three minute number which is just that, comes before the closer, "Life is Just a Game." This last tune is true jazz-rock fusion, with Billy Cobham, George Duke and an incredible guitarist named Icarus Johnson joining with Clarke.

There isn't a weak song here. Although he is very young, Mr. Clarke has risen to the top of his profession very quickly. If he continues this way, the next will be even better, but I don't see how it's possible.

James Taylor
Greatest Hits
(Warner Bros.)

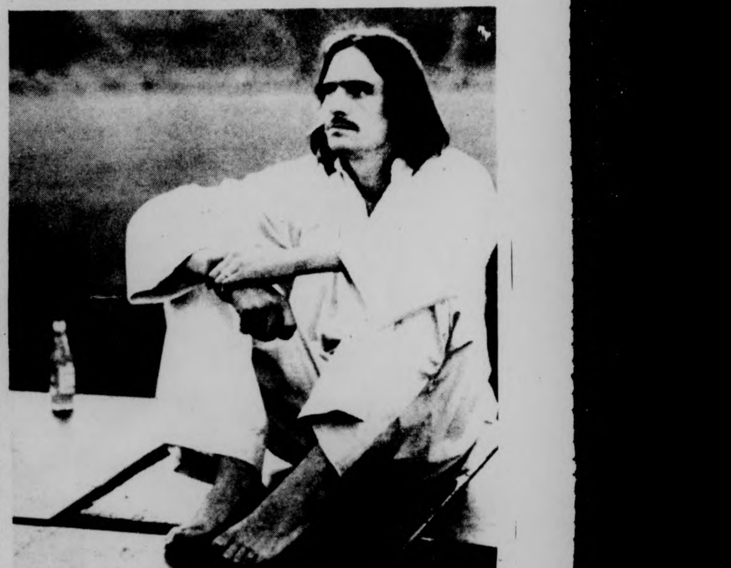
No longer does Sweet Baby James work in the saddle and sleep in the canyons. He sits at home and watches the old mazuma roll in, compliments of the WB tape files.

Taylor re-recorded a scant two of his greatest hits, off his first album with Apple Records, "Something in the Way She Moves" and "Carolina In My Mind." He massacres them, my friends and other old-Taylor lovers.

"Something in the Way She Moves," a beautiful acoustic number featuring that old-Taylor finger-picking, gets absolutely raped by the addition of electric bass, percussion and, believe it or not, the same happens to "Carolina in my Mind." Though it already had bass and drums in the Apple version, the tempo is held back so much that it is almost an ordeal listening to it.

Sometimes, a change is for the better...not this time.

The other tunes, those recorded on WB, come through unscathed, including a lively live version of "Steamroller", Taylor's best-known — I - IV - V.



Overall, I would say that if you have no other Taylor recordings, by all means buy James Taylor's Greatest Hits. But if your heart belongs to those original cuts from Apple, it would more than likely be more painful than it's worth.

Deep European Cuts
by David Santos

STRAWBS: Deep Cuts (Oyster) — After Nomadness bombed out, our beloved Strawbs were indeed in desperate straights. Deep Cuts is a shocking album, though — who'd ever think of the Strawbs Am-ized? But that's what Deep Cuts heralds — the birth of a simpler, more accessible format. "I Only Want My Love To Grow In You" is already somewhat of a hit single, a nice super commercial concession that shows off the Strawbs' inherent knack for the acoustic-electric mix. Like the single, everything sparkles with a clarity and strength that previous Strawbs' lps would be hard pressed to match. "Simple Visions" and "Charmer" outstrip the single for me, while "Beside The Rio Grande" is yet another tale of drama Dave Cousins weaves so well. (Much like "The Hangman," from From The Witchwood). In all, Deep Cuts may not be another Hero & Heroine or Grave New World, but it has its points to make. Here's to accessibility with artistic worth. (B+).

CARAVAN: Blind Dog At St. Dunstins (Arista) — Caravan always seems to get lost in the shuffle — after all, they're not as flamboyant as ELP, or Yes, and not as wickedly wacked out as any of the Virgin groups. Despite this handicap, Caravan has always come up with good music. Blind Dog At St. Dustins seems a lighter and more pop Caravan in spite of the non-commercial attitudes of earlier works. Happily, they've weathered the loss of Dave Sinclair (he wrote most of the Cunning Stunts) and Pye Hastings is rightfully back at the helm. If there was ever a heart to this band, it's Hastings — his sense of melody and wry humor is a unique combination. Side Two is his latest tour-de-force, providing the sweetest and most delightful melodies with the right pinch of Caravan craziness to keep things necessarily off balance. "Jack & Jill" is another tune of sexual games, much like his classic "The Dog, The Dog, He's At It Again" (From For Girls Who Grow Plump In The Night), while the closing, "Giving It All Away", is exquisite. Blind Dog At St. Dustins is definitely one of the better progressive releases of the year. (B+).

BE-BOP DELUXE: Modern Music (Harvest) — If one is an eccentric, one is prone to try and get away with most anything. That is essentially the case with Modern Music. While the music of past American albums was killer rock and roll, Modern Music makes no challenges to top either Futurama or Sunburst Finish. This is Bill Nelson's pet project, especially Side Two where his now subdued sense of time distortion rock coagulates the musical concepts. Modern Music is not a bad lp — Bill Nelson is too smart and too nutty to ruin everything he's built up so far. MM is an experiment which will be understood and appreciated by true Be+Bop Deluxe fans. If the lovely "Kiss Of Light" is a successful single, maybe a few more fans will be brought into the fold. (B-).

KRAAN: Let It Out (Passport) — Germany is known for more bizarre things like Stockhausen, Can and the whole electronic mekanik hordes. Kraan, however, are much more basic. They prefer to rock and roll, but are not without tendencies towards strangeness. (Witness the wonderfully wacked out "Die Maschine" — electronic mind spasms set to rock music! Let It Out is already familiar with import buyers who most likely bought it on the strength of the fantastic Live In Berlin and the Andy Nogger albums. It's a lot tamer than earlier works — cleaned up and more accessible than ever. On the surface it is basic rock and roll, but it's subtle as hell. I was disappointed at first, but it sank in — the teaser guitar licks in the title track, the chugging ummph of "Bandits In The Woods" and the greased sax of Johannes Pappert all combine to make some of the better boogie rock there is. And just to prove they're not about to stagnate, word has it that for their next album they will enlist the services of none other than Magma's Giorgio Gomelski. (Incidently, Andy Nogger is a cutout as of this year). (A-).

GROOTHANDEL ... RUBBER SCHOEISEL
GROOTHANDEL KLOMPEN FABRIEK ... RSTELWERK

BRAND X: Unorthodox Behavior (Passport) — Attention all Genesis fans!: this is drummer Phil Collins' side band. You will like this! But seriously, Brand X is really just a side band, and not just for Phil, but all the other bandmembers too. (Everybody either has a band of their own or is a studio musician). Unorthodox Behavior is the result of Brand X's desire to play something different than they currently do in each one's regular jobs. While the boys accomplish this, Brand X only ends up playing the usual jazz-rock route. It's all expertly executed and attractive to the ears, but as one person aptly put it — "It would be nice to see live, but why bother putting it on record?" (C+).

SYNERGY: Sequencer (Passport) — While Larry Fast (i.e. Synergy) doesn't come from Europe, he does hang around and record with Germany's Nektar — so there. (What? — Nektar's moved to America!) Sequencer is Fast's second album and superior to last year's Rock Realizations For Synthesizer & Orchestra. Things are technically more intense and so are the compositions. Programming those synthesizers must have been one giant headache. A headache I dare say that was extremely worth it. Fast succeeds because he not only has the material, but he knows his axe like the back of his hand. The precious few who play synthesizer correctly are those who know how it works. Larry doesn't play synthesizer like an extension of a Hammond organ or a piano. Of the many things Sequencer accomplishes, its primary success is displaying what great music electronics can create when in the right hands and not at the mercy of unsympathetic fingers a la Keith Emerson or Rick Wakeman. (A-).

FACES: Snakes & Ladders (Warners) — Admittedly, I've never been much of a Faces fan. In fact, I kind of tolerated them. I never thought that Faces material was ever equal to Rod Stewert's and Ron Wood's tenure with the legendary Jeff Beck Group. Well, Snakes and Ladders is the perfect excuse to re-think the Faces case.

As you've probably guessed, I feel a little silly now. Snakes & Ladders, a "Best Of" collection, is a really fine lp. Besides containing my favorite Faces tune — "Stay With Me" — it has some real classic Faces tunes — "Around The Plynth", "Pool Hall Richard," and, of course, what is reputed to be the best song they ever did — "Flying." All in all, Snakes & Ladders, as the final word on the late great Faces, is wholly adequate and damn right great. (B+).

Porn decision postponed

By JOHN MORAN
Collegian Staff

The Student Judiciary will not decide on the showing of pornographic movies in Hampden Student Center until "sometime next week."

The case was argued last night for four hours in the Student Senate Council Chambers. The defense for the Southwest Assembly (SWA) consisted of Debbie Love, the main advocate, as well as Niki Phaneuf and Louis Copponi. The group which brought the case to a judicial review was led by Student Attorney General Paul Yanowitch and Alan Weiner.

The defense brought three witnesses to the session. The first of these was Chris Durkin, chairperson of the SWA, who explained the positon of the SWA, citing its eight year commitment to "combatting racism and sexism."

The next witness was Leslie Schwann, who represented the Southwest Women's Center. Schwann read a prepared statement before the judiciary. In that statement she said that motion pictures, "leave very visible images," on people seeing them and that these impressions have a decided effect in shaping people's attitudes.

Schwann was interrupted several times by Yanowitch, but in each case was allowed to continue by the justices.

The final witness called by representative of the SWA was Gabe Heilig, consultant to the director of a newly formed sex-roles institute in Washington D.C.

When asked how he saw pornography, Heilig said that since most pornography, "was filmed by men from a male point of view," it served to, "lock in a man's perception of who he is and how he should view women."

"It is equally damaging in that men often can't see this oppression," when confronted with it, he said.

In his closing statement, Yanowitch rested his case on two main points. One charged that the bille passed by the SWA recently to ban the showing of porno in the area, was vague and uncertain and should be struck down as unconstitutional according to many judicial precedents.

The second point was that the bill was an example of "prior restraint," where a person or group was being forbidden from performing an act showing a pornographic film before it had broken a law.

As part of the case, Yanowitch repeatedly cited Article IV, sec. 3 of the SGA Constitution which reads in part, "No student shall be denied the right to receive and express ideas, opinions or facts."

The defense contended, however, that section 3 was subordinate to the second sentence in the main body which read, "The enumeration of these rights shall not be construed as in any way nullifying or otherwise limiting any other rights posessed by students severally or together."

Debbie Love, in her closing remarks, listed four main arguments for the defense:

—that there were precedents set for the limiting and restriction of the showing of pornographic films in United States and Massachusetts law,

—that "a level of UMass law" (Article IV) provided for it, —that students whether they be male or female have the right to live without oppression, and —that the community had the right of self-government to determine what is best for that community.

"United States history is filled with instances of the majority silencing the minority and abridging the rights of the minority simply because the majority felt it was in the right," said Yanowitch in his closing remarks which lasted a full hour and eight minutes.

Love, in her somewhat shorter closing remarks for the defense, termed Hampden as a kind of "living room for Southwest" emphasizing the right of the SWA to restrict what activities may take place in the center.

Wednesday, the Undergraduate Student Senate voted to "...endorse and support the Southwest Area Government in their right to restrict the showing of motion pictures with racist and sexist natures in their area."

The three justices who will review the case are Rosemary McCarthy, Jeffery Lutsky, with Bruce Wingate presiding.

Mashpee reps seek support

By DEBORAH J. ALLIEGRO
Collegian Staff

Americans have always had a fear for the Indians and the sound of the Indians' drums. But the drum is part of the religion; it is the heartbeat of the people, said Earl Mills Jr., a Wampanoag Indian.

Mills, a freshman in the Stockbridge School of Agriculture here, will go to court on Dec. 27 with nine other young Native Americans, because they alledgedly violated the anti-noise bylaw in Mashpee, Massachusetts in July.

Members of the Mashpee community came to UMass last night in an effort to raise money for their lawyers' court fees and traveling expenses. Their defense lawyer, Lew Gertwitz, isn't charging lawyers fee.

Besides being arrested for supposedly violating the bylaw, the "Mashpee Nine", as they call themselves, are facing court charges including assault on a police officer, resisting arrest and disorderly conduct.

But, Mills said, at the time of their arrest they were only "celebrating the roots of their tradition."

"We were singing songs and using the drum when police came and told us to stop. Later in the night we were surrounded by state and local police who conducted a completely manufactured and trumped-up raid," Mills said.

There are 250 Native Americans living in Mashpee. In 1790, the Federal Congress gave 20,000 acres to the Indians in the area of the town.

Members of the community are now going through the Federal Courts to get the land back into the hands of the Native Americans.

"We're not suing for damages or for money; we filed suit for the recovery of the land. To the Native American, land is part of our religion, the land is Mother Nature, and she rules," said Russell Peters, a citizens of Mashpee and a member of the Tribal Council there.

The solution to our problem lies in the restoration of the cultures, traditions and values of Native Americans, Peters said.

"The whole goal of the United States is to make the Indian white. We have to educate people so they can respect our ways," Mills said.

According to Peters, the land suit could take 10 years in court. "But our case looks better every day," he added. UMass professor in the Legal Studies Program, Peter d'Errico, is supporting the Native Americans with legal advice and raising money for the defense.

"There is something involved with being native to the country. The land is important and essential to the survival of the people," d'Errico said. "Indian control over Indian land. It is their right to control the land that was theirs in the beginning of the country."

"It is important to support any group of people that are beginning to stand-up to their rights," Peters said.

Mills said the upcoming trial was just another way for some people "to tell us our ways are wrong and their ways are right."

"But the native way is the only way man will survive after the year 2000, and we have the right on this earth for pride and dignity," Mills added.

Gay Head votes Wampanoags land

GAY HEAD, Mass. [AP] — Citizens of this tiny town on the southwestern tip of Martha's Vineyard voted Thursday night to give up 250 acres of "common land" to the Wampanoag Indian tribe.

The 50-28 vote gave this tribe land it sought in a suit filed in U.S. District Court in Boston three years ago. The Indians claimed the town violated the 1790 Nonintercourse Act by failing to incorporate the 250 acres of Indian land in the 1870s.

The legislature still must approve the transfer, however. Thomas Tureen, attorney for the tribal council, said once the Indians received title to the land the federal suit would be dropped.

The land includes Gay Head's only cranberry bog, Herring Creek and coastal frontage.

Tribal council president Wenonah Silva told the town meeting the tribe planned to seek federal aid to use the land for agriculture purposes.

In addition to Brown's hearing, Jean Cahill and 16 others will be in Hampshire County District Court today at 9 a.m. concerning their alleged interference in Cahill's recent eviction from Puffton Village Apartments.

University, merchant problems cleared up

By ARNOLD WARSHAW
Collegian Staff

Problems between the University and some Amherst merchants, apparently the result of poor communication between the two, have been cleared up in recent months.

"We're happy with the situation now," said James Lumley, president of the Amherst Chamber of Commerce.

Both Lumley and Gerald Grady, UMass community relations coordinator said they felt there was never much of a problem between the merchants and the University to begin with. "It's more of a myth than reality," said Lumley.

A misleading headline on a Oct. 29 Collegian story, said some merchants were threatening to sue the University.

"We were shocked," said Lumley. "There was never any thought to do that. Things would have to be pretty tight to do that."

Adrian Wilkins, chairperson of the retail division of the chamber, said "there was never any way that the merchants could sue the University."

According to Lumley, merchants, especially the newer ones, were concerned about the University Store. They felt that certain actions the store was taking were cutting into their businessses.

Merchants were worried most about the University Store doing too much advertising outside of the University, which they claimed attracted people to the store who weren't students.

In addition, merchants felt the store was planning to expand its line of products, which would attract still more people from outside the academic community to the store. They thought this would give on-campus students even less reason for leaving campus to shop.

Lumley said the merchants were not too upset about the other businesses on the UMass campus, which are privately run. He said that to complain about competition from them would be like complaining about competition from any other merchant in town.

One big advantage the University Store has, Lumley said, is that since it is run by the state, it doesn't have to pay any taxes.

About a month ago, Lumley, Wilkins and two other merchants met with Winthrop Cummings, manager of the University Store, William F. Field, dean of students, and Gerald Grady.

At the meeting, the merchants expressed their concern about the University Store.

UMass representatives explained that the reason the University Store advertises outside the University is to reach the 15,000 UMass students who live off-campus.

The merchants were assured there are no plans to expand the line of products to be sold at the University Store.

The meeting was "very helpful," Lumley said. "After listening to them, we realized a little more of what their perspective is."

Grady said Amherst merchants would never to totally happy about the situation with business on the UMass campus, but that this is inevitable.

"As long as we have a free enterprise system, there's bound to be concerns," said Grady.

BOG ups non-student table fee

By JOHN BERGMAN
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors (BOG) released a new table policy at its meeting last night which will charge outside merchants $75 per day to occupy a table on the Campus Center Concourse.

The new policy constitutes a drastic increase from the old one, which charged outside merchants $10 for a table.

"The idea," said Stephen A. Latter, a BOG member, "is to prevent outside merchants from coming to the Campus Center and using table space that should be given to student groups and students who sell handmade goods that they make themselves."

"Handcrafted goods made by UMass students will be given top priority, along with RSO groups, Students William F. Field and Bud packed house, those lucky in-Latter. UMass students who want to sell their own handcrafted items do not have to pay in order to get table space.

TOC Inc. will meet with Amherst selectmen Monday night to find out if their application for a liquor license has been approved or not. The application is being contested by Gerald J. Grady, UMass coordinator of community relations, on the grounds that the manager of the TOC, Thomas J. Kerrins, is a student.

Grady was quoted earlier this week as saying it was his understanding through Dean of Students William F. Field and Bud F. Wilkes, acting director of the Campus Center, that it was not the policy of the University to allow students to hold liquor licenses.

"The people at the TOC knew this. It's not something new. This question has come up before," he had said.

Jane E. Steinberg, co-president of TOC Inc., stressed that "We're (TOC Inc.) trying to establish a good relationship with the Campus Center management and the Board of Governors, while achieving the goals of the TOC."

"It was apparent during a meeting we had with Field and Wilkes that this relationship needs clarification. We want to know what reason there is for a policy which prevents a student (Kerrins) from being the holder of a liquor license."

Stevenson Fletcher from the school of Hotel, Restaraunt and Travel Administration, will chair the board's Search Committee for a Campus Center director.

Search committees for a Campus Center financial manager and a print shop manager have also been formed.

Santa Claus, Index here

The Index has arrived and Santa Claus will be distributing them in front of the Student Union Monday through Wednesday. (Staff photo by Dan Smith)

By JOHN ANTONELLI
Collegian Staff

Many UMass students have been waiting for the University's yearbook, Index, to arrive, but they need wait no longer.

The 1976 yearbooks, 10,000 strong, will be distributed Monday through Wednesday next week. The Index will be handed out in front of the Student Union by Santa Claus.

Students wanting a copy must present an Index computer card (sophomores, juniors and seniors received them in their September registration packets) and a dollar. This is the first time the yearbook has this additional cost, which is necessitated by last year's deficit of about $2,300.

The Index is a little late this year, having come out last year in November and in October of '74.

Dan Smith, Index photo editor and last year's editor, said a small staff contributed to the delay. "We have done things that have never been done in a yearbook before," he said.

For instance, Smith said, "we have tried to get away from the standard lines of copy. Some of the graphics and special effects were time-consuming."

Smith said he believes this year's book is better than last year's award winner.It has a basic theme of 'We the People', with capsule reports of different aspects of campus life. After all, "It's the people who make this place what it is," reasoned Smith.

This year's Index also features a surprise — something no other yearbook anywhere has ever had, according to Smith.

The 1975 Index sold out, making it somewhat of a collector's item.

Equus: Real theatre

By JAMES F. B. SAWYER
Below the Salt Staff

Last night, a real theatre event took the stage in the Concert Hall of the Fine Arts Center at UMass. EQUUS, by Peter Schaffer, was presented for the enjoyment of a packedhouse, those lucky individuals fortunate enough to have secured tickets before the single and singular performance was sold out.

The action centers around the treatment by a psychiatrist of a 17-year-old boy who has gouged the eyes out of six horses. The story finally comes around to the psychiatrist who questions his own motives in treating the boy. Alan, (that's the boy's name), it seems, worshipped a God known only to him as Equus.

Everything that Alan did, he saw the eyes of Equus staring, condemning,...owning.

But to Alan, Equus was the only God. The psychiatrist, Dr. Martin Dysart, recognizes this and sees that the myth of Equus is the only real fulfillment Alan can achieve.

He recognizes this, but also must admit to himself that since his role in life is to restore "normality" to Alan's mind, he must destroy the only happiness that Alan has ever attained.

In the end, Dysart resigns himself to this fact, but he does not accept it. As the horses in the play have sharp chains in their mouths, so figuratively does Dysart, through his guilt feelings.

As he says at the play's conclusion, "There is now, in my mouth, this sharp chain. And it never comes out."

David Leary stars as Dr. Martin Dysart. With Burton-like intonation, Leary was the most powerful character onstage.

Bill Barrett portrayed Alan Strang, the worshipper and ultimate disfigurer of Equus.

Walter Kerr of the New York Times says of EQUUS, "Remarkable... it is powerfully close-to reanimating the spirit of mystery that makes the stage a place of breathless discovery." I would like to add my name of the bottom of the list of critics applauding EQUUS.

Applauding EQUUS, and standing, with the rest of the audience as the stage lights dim.

And the audience that had sat there three hours, and all of a sudden, 'Well, these two girls,' and I said, 'Wait, it's got somthing'."

"Laverne & Shirley" was airborne, mid-season, overnight.

"We were terrified. I mean we were terrified either direction it might take," recalls Cindy Williams, who became Shirley Feeney to Miss Marshall's Laverne DeFazio. "We were certain we were going to go into the toilet."

The sudden success of the ABC-TV series, born of another ABC hit, "Happy Days", has the stars still mystified. "We gave it 13 weeks," says Miss Marshall.

"The phenomena of that kind of popularity where you're before 50 million people one night each week, it's something you dream about when you have inklings of becoming an actress," says Miss Williams, who has a string of movies — "Travels With My Aunt," "American Graffiti," "The Conversation" — to her credit.

"And then it happens to you and the dangdest sort of chemical reaction takes place. You love it and at the same time you're frightened of it, scared one day maybe they'll take it away."

"We didn't know whether they'd like us," says Miss Marshall, whose own career included lots of TV work — co-star in "Friends and Lovers" with Paul Sand, appearances in "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," "The Bob Newhart Show", "The Odd Couple," many others.

"To go into a show for two very insecure girls, and the show does hinge on the people liking us, and to say this show will be a hit, first-rate, I mean, I don't feel that. And to be told what makes it is they like you two girls and the girls you are playing..."

And it was in that frame of mind the girls tackled "Laverne & Shirley Sing," and LP album of "oldies" just out from Atlantic.

"Our reaction to the album was very mixed," says Miss Marshall. "We were working very hard on our show, so the thought of doing an album cut into the time we were devoting to a show and still trying to figure out what the heck we were doing there.

"And we kept saying no on the premise we didn't feel we could sing and, yeah, we didn't have the time to do it."

But Paramount Television was insistent.

So Laverne & Shirley cut "Laverne & Shirley Sing" in a couple days. The "oldies" were picked — by the girls — for a variety of reasons: They liked the sound of "Easier Said Than Done" and "Da Do Ron Ron." They wanted a fast one — "I'm Walkin." Some were in "character" — Laverne & Shirley character.

Space pot pie

AMES, Iowa [UPI] — To Allen Kraft, the dark, cold recesses of space a few hundred miles above earth are just a big refrigerator.

And Kraft, a professor of food technology at Iowa State University, wants to shoot a chicken or beef pot pie into space to test his theory that space could be a natural refrigerator for storing perishable foods for extended periods of time.

Kraft has outlined his project as SPAM — "Space Preservation Applied to Meat" — but it is also known informally as "Hitch Your Chuck Wagon to a Star."

To check out his supposition, the university has formally requested that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration include its test meat products, including the pot pie, on its 1979 space shuttle.

Kraft said NASA is considering the application and the agency is "very interested."

"We think there is a good chance it will be accepted," he said.

The purpose of such an experiment is to find if storing foods in space is feasible, but also to determine if it maintains a good taste when it returns to earth, Kraft said.

The space storage idea currently is not feasible, Kraft said, but in the future when NASA is considering establishing space colonies, space dwellers could eat space-stored food instead of the dried foods consumed by earlier astronauts.

He said it might come to a time later when it would be cheaper to transport perishable items aboard the shuttles than it would be to meet the soaring energy costs of preserving the food on the planet.

In addition to the pot pie, the proposed package would also include hamburger and possibly some cured meats. The food would be vacuum packed and then sent into space via the shuttle to be exposed for a number of months. They would then be returned to Earth via another rocket.

If the food passes radiation and dangerous micro-organism tests, it would then be fed to control animals.

The ultimate test, Kraft said, would be left to humans who would taste the meats and pot pie to see if they were as good as before they were stored in space.

PIE IN THE SKY — Space-shot Professor Allen Kraft, inter-stellar meat specialist, fingers meat pot pies which he claims will alter the "main course" of the American space program. Extra terrestrial "pantry raids" by foreign countries seeking the valuable "Moon Pies", are expected. (UPI Wirephoto)

Rats now drinking

COLUMBIA, Mo. [UPI] — A neurochemist laboring over vials of alcohol and cages of white rats at the University of Missouri is trying to create an alcoholic rat to see what happens to its brain.

Dr. Ezio Moscatelli has been feeding a group of 54 rats a sugar-water solution that is 45 per cent pure ethanol, laboratory alcohol, for about three months. After they become hooked on alcohol, which Moscatelli says is difficult, he plans to keep them on the drink.

"It took us about a year to get the rats' drinking going," Moscatelli said in an interview.

"The animals are pretty smart. They don't want to get brain damage. But we've gotten the rats in the stride in drinking, and when we take them off in three or four months and remove their brains, we expect brain damage."

Moscatelli said he placed the rat diet's alcoholic content at 45 per cent as an approximation of the percentage of alcohol in a human alcoholic's test.

"Human alcoholics — the real alkies, the ones that die from it — show 45 to 60 per cent. With the experimental rats undernourished like human alcoholics, and the control group super-nourished, we should be able to sort out exactly what the alcohol is doing."

Moscatelli and Dr. Myron Tumbleson are experimenting with rats in an effort to discover a relation between alcohol abuse and fatty substances, especially myelin, in the brain. Myelin surrounds nerves and acts as an insulator.

"Myelin is necessary for fine tuning of the nervous system," Moscatelli said. "When it is gone, the system is not tuned. Multiple sclerosis victims are an example. They have a lack of myelin, and their systems are acting as if they have electronic short-circuits."

Moscatelli said alcohol abuse affects myelin, but researchers are unsure to what degree. The rat experiments should help determine this.

"The brain damage we expect? Well, brains shrink slightly under extreme alcoholism ... in those people who have really socked it away for years. Psychometric tests run on them show a lack of abstracting and difficulties in passing along information. All of this has to be reflected at the molecular level."

The National Institute of Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism gave Moscatelli $6,173 to try to show this molecular damage. The researcher is applying to the government agency for $250,000 for a similar five-year study using miniature pigs.

Moscatelli said the rat experiment was undertaken especially to show the NIAAA that animals could become alcohol abusers. His first choice for subjects were rats because they were $4 each compared to $200 for pigs.

What the alcohol is doing, at least outwardly, is making the rats lethargic while they are getting hooked. Moscatelli said it is hard to tell whether they are enjoying their drinking.

Token political story

'Mountain of mail'

MINNEAPOLIS [UPI] — Ray Halvorson if 67 and he's been the postmaster at the tiny village of Ceylon, Minn., for 20 years.

But he's sure he's never seen a day like the one looming on Jan. 20, 1977.

The U.S. Postal Service has decreed that Inauguration Day cancellations will be available on that day in Washington, Jimmy Carter's hometown of Plains, Ga., and Walter F. Mondale's birthplace of Ceylon, Minn. — population 487.

"Gollee," said Halvorson.

"That's way out of my capabilities. I couldn't possibly handle a mountain of mail.

"I've only got one clerk and he comes only on Saturday and besides he just quit on me after 42 years on the job. I'm shaking in my boots."

Halvorson handles an average of 500 pieces of mail a day for 1,500 families in Ceylon and the surrounding rural areas —

"Of course it's a lot heavier now that the Christmas season is here."

Actually, Halvorson will only have to hand stamp letters brought to him in person. The postal service had decreed a limit of 100 letters per person although there is no limit on letters sent by mail.

The mailed pieces will be "trapped" and cancelled with the Ceylon dateline at the sectional postal center at Windom, some 40 miles to the northwest — a bit of deception but the only practical way it can be handled.

"It's going to be a new experience for all of us," said George Freking, 56, the Windom sectional manager. "We've never gone through anything like this before, but I think we can handle it. We'll have to put on at least 20 people — mostly women — on a 21-day basis."

Suicidal squid squirm, writhe on Cape Cod

EASTHAM, Mass [AP] — By the millions, squiggly, squirmy squid are writhing onto the icy beaches of Cape Cod to die, and biologists can only guess what motivates them.

The undersea creatures have been committing mass suicide since mid-October, and residents are hoping the phenomenon ends before it becomes a smelly problem for the resort area's summer tourist trade.

The squid, which range up to two feet long, occasionally come in so thickly that they stack up two or three deep along the shore.

"Some days there are so many of them on the beach that it's impossible to walk without stepping on them," said Robert Prescott of the Cape Cod Museum of Natural History.

If picked up and tossed back into the ocean, the wavy tenticled mollusks immediately head straight back onto the sand.

Theories vary about why the squid become suicidal, but some biologists blame it in part on the Russians and other foreigners who have greatly depleted schools of the squid's natural enemy — the fish.

Dead squid now litter the frigid beaches along the Cape Cod Bay side of the peninsula. The largest concentrations are between Brewster and Eastham about halfway out the Cape, but unusually large numbers are being found along the entire length from Provincetown to Sandwich.

After the squid hit the beaches, they squirt water to people themselves out of the reach of the lapping waves. Then they wriggle on the sand until they die or seagulls flap down and pluck out their eyes.

"This would be a problem if it was summer," Prescott said.

"They would really smell."

But since it is cold, the squid freeze until birds eventually eat them.

Fishermen said that out in the water, squid are also far more plentiful than usual.

"Squid are a popular prey for ground fish like cod and polluck," said Fred Lux of the National Marine Fisheries Service.

"It's possible there is a relationship between the decline of fish and the increase in squid," he said. "If you get an extra large population, they will extend farther north and south than their normal range."

Ordinarily, the squid would spend the winter in warmer waters along the fishing ledges about 100 miles off shore, Lux said. But this year, they could have become confused by the frigid waters that came with an unusually cold fall.

News in Brief

GOP bigwigs meet Ford

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford — acknowledged by Ronald Reagan as the "titular" head of the Republican party — held a post-election summit meeting with Reagan, John Connally and Nelson Rockefeller yesterday "to discuss the future of the party."

Reagan, leaving the Oval Office session early to catch a plane, said selection of a new GOP national chairman was discussed, but neither Connally "nor any of us in that room there are interested in or eligible for... the party chairmanship."

He said they talked about picking a "technician, a man who knows party organization from the ground up," and who would be advised by a separate council of "party leaders from all around the country."

Budget approved

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The special House panel investigating the deaths of John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King Jr. yesterday approved a "bare boned" one year budget of $6.5 million — 13 times the figure suggested three months ago.

The proposal must be approved by the full House, where the price tag is likely to stir strong opposition. The 1973-1974 House impeachment proceedings against Richard M. Nixon, in contrast, cost less than $2.8 million.

Richard A. Sprague, the director of the dual probes by the House Select Committee on Assassinations, testified before the panel "the cost of investigation is high" but insisted it was "the bare boned minimum figure."

He warned Congress "not to play games" and said "any cut... will make the task impossible."

Hearst trial delayed

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Newspaper heiress Patricia Hearst appeared briefly in Superior Court yesterday to gain a three-month delay in her trial on 11 counts of robbery, kidnap and assault stemming from her actions as a member of the Symbionese Liberation Army.

Judge William L. Ritzi granted the motion postponing the scheduled Jan. 10 trial to April 4.

Stalemate in Geneva

BENEVA, Switzerland (UPI) — All sides in the Rhodesia Conference conceded yesterday the talks were stalemated and should recess until the start of the new year.

"We're all good Christians and we want to spend Christmas at home," said Rhodesian Prime Minister Ian Smith. "Thereafter the conference will be reconvened."

Smith reported "some progress" in his second day of talks with British conference Chairman Ivor Richard, but said he was skeptical about the chances for a final settlement of Rhodesia's transition to black majority rule.

"This year, next year, maybe the following year?" he said.

Police battle squatters

TORREON, Mexico (UPI) — Four hundred policemen riding trucks and bulldozers battled hundreds of squatters yesterday in an attempt to evict them from private land.

Police lawyer Vicente V. Mireles said two policemen and four squatters were reported injured in the fighting in Torreon, capital of Coahuila state, about 240 miles from the Texas border.

Many of the squatters were reported still on the land at nightfall.

Informed sources said police reinforcements were being rushed to Torreon from the city of Saltillo, 180 miles to the east.

Hundreds of squatters have been on the land for about five months and have refused repeated pleas to move off, a police spokesman said.

USSR assured by Carter message

WASHINGTON [AP] — President-elect Jimmy Carter sent a public message of reassurance to the Soviet Union on yesterday, declaring through a former defense secretary that he has a "deep desire to find the basis of understanding" with the Russians.

The informal message was expressed by Clark Clifford, who headed the Pentagon under former President Lyndon Johnson. He told reporters after lunch with the President-elect that he got the impression Carter will instruct his secretaries of state, defense and treasury to "join in finding the basis for this understanding" with the Russians.

Carter's session with Clifford came during a day-long series of back-to-back meetings with his transition advisers, members of Congress, representatives of business and labor, governors from economically — troubled states in the northeast, the outgoing director of the Central Intelligence Agency and potential Cabinet appointees.

A source close to Carter said he is considering Rep. Barbara Jordan, D-Tex., to be his ambassador to the United Nations. A Jordan aide said no one on Carter's staff had approached her with any suggestion about that post or any other.

During his sessions with advisers:

—Carter expressed new concern that the economy is in "an extremely difficult position" and discussed tax cut and spending options. He was told the government easily could have a record budget deficit in fiscal 1977 because of the ailing economy.

"One of the strongest things to come out...is that we're in an extremely difficult position as far as the economy is concerned, and as far as the federal budget is concerned," said a staff member, who asked not to be identified.

Kissinger warns of Soviet threat

BRUSSELS, Belgium [AP] — Growing Soviet military power is the greatest long-term threat facing the West, U.S. Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger told North Atlantic Treaty Organization NATO foreign ministers yesterday in his farewell message, sources said.

Kisssnger, who leaves office Jan. 20, also brought assurances from President-elect Jimmy Carter that the United States will strengthen military and diplomatic ties with the alliance.

The secretary's 45-minute speech came in a closed-door session, but officials who attended passed its substance to reporters.

According to those officials, Kissinger stressed the importance of detente, but said accom odations with Moscow, no matter how successful, are no substitute for military security.

He urged NATO to reject a Warsaw Pact proposal that the two blocs agree by treaty not to be the first to use nuclear weapons. Kissinger said the proposal is an unacceptable restraint on Western options in the event of attack, according to U.S. delegation sources.

Task force furthers plans

By MELANIE JOHNSON
Collegian Staff

"We want to bring people of all nationalities together," said Irene E. Richard, member of the Title IX Task Force for the Campus Center-Student Union Complex. The task force, currently planning International Women's Week for March 6 to 12, met yesterday in the Campus Center to discuss possible speakers and workshops as well as to make funding reports.

The task force is making reservations for the Student Union Ballroom, the Campus Center Auditorium, the Fine Arts Center, and conference rooms on the first floor of the Campus Center for the entire week.

This space will be used for workshops, films and speakers dealing with a variety of women's issues. "We want to make a 'workshop mall' on the first floor," said Richard.

The task force hopes to run some workshops and films more than once so that more people will have time to attend. It also hopes to have women's bands perform in the Hatch, the Blue Wall, and the Top of the Campus during that week.

The Distinguished Visitors Program has allocated $5000 for speakers for the week's events. Richard said she hopes, "this money could be spread out over more than one speaker." Suggested speakers include comedienne Lily Tomlin, author Mary Daly, and former U.S. Congresswoman Bella Abzug.

Richard warned that the speakers they get depends on the amount of money they receive from other campus organizations.

The task force hopes to receive funds from the area governments, the undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates, and the Campus Center Board of Governors. Anne Thorkleson, a task force member, reported that the Northeast Area Government would not donate money, and that a decision on possible funding from the Grad Senate will be made by the body next month.

The task force agreed to try to get a "big name" performer to kick off the week's events on Sunday, March 6. Richard said the task force should try to get people from outside the University because, "we need the big names to draw people to other events." Phoebe Snow was mentioned as possibility for the March 6th concert in the Fine Arts Center.

Task force members volunteered to find local speakers and workshop leaders for specific issues to be covered during the week. These issues include rape, political prisoners, women in transition, lesbianism, health, child care, art, the media, alcoholism, and women in work.

Jean Cahill, active in the Amherst Tenants' Association and recently evicted from her Pufton apartment, was suggested as one speaker.

CC bill to save students $65 a year

By Sue McDonald
Collegian Staff

A bill which could save every UMass student $65 a year on their fee bill is being sponsored by Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst) in the Mass. State Legislature.

The bill, scheduled to go before the legislature sometime next March, would provide for state takeover of the bond indebtedness of the Campus Center complex.

Students now assume, in effect, 100 per cent of the cost of the Campus Center, according to Brian Harvey, director of communications for the Student Senate. The students pay for the building, directly through a $65 a year mandatory Campus Center fee, and indirectly through supporting the Hatch, Coffee Shop, Blue Wall, and Top of the Campus Club, all which operate at a net profit. The profits generated by these services are deposited in a Campus Center trust fund, which is then used to pay off the interest on the money borrowed to build the complex.

"The money borrowed to pay for the building (the principle) hasn't yet been touched," said Harvey. "We're now paying back only the interest."

"The short-term financing has just this semester been switched to long-term financing," he said. This will reduce the amount of interest on the bonds, but will extend the period of payment.

Takeover of the bonds by the state would mean that students are no longer paying directly for the currrent bond indebtedness.

According to Jay Martus, co-president of Student Government Association (SGA), "a dangerous precedent" was set at Southeastern Massachusetts University when the state assumed payment of their campus center, since the transfer was tied into a tuition raise.

Martus said Collins "made clear" the point that this precedent would not recur here at UMass.

In answer to a question at Wednesday's SGA meeting, Collins said the transfer of payment to the state would not affect the total budget requested by UMass.

Amherst seeks water

By JAMES M. ODATO
Collegian Staff

The future water supply of UMass and four area towns will be the subject of a bill presented to the Mass. State Legislature by Sen. John D. Olver and Rep. James G. Collins, both Democrats from Amherst. The action is the result of a meeting last night at the Amherst Town Hall.

If approved by the legislature, the bill would allow the state Metropolitan District Commission (MDC) to study possible water supply systems which could supplement systems in Amherst, Belchertown, Chicopee, and Pelham.

Amherst selectperson Nancy B. Eddy said three water supply sources are being considered by Amherst. One is the construction of a water line between Quabbin Reservoir and Amherst, which has been approved by the MDC. Chicopee, Belchertown, and Pelham would be able to tie into this line.

Amherst consumes about 3.1 million gallons of water a day, half of which is sold to UMass.

NEAG vote Monday

The election for Northeast Area Government (NEAG) president will be held Monday evening in the Quad, NEAG treasurer John Gross announced last night.

With only one nomination paper turned in, it appears the election will consist of Beth Tibbets, secretary of NEAG, and any write-in candidates, according to Gross. Polls will be in the lobby of each dorm, he said.

Former president John Weisse resigned, effective last night.

There will be a "Holiday Coffeehouse" held in the basement of Hamlin House this Sunday from 8 to 12 p.m. Coffee, donuts, and entertainment will be provided free of charge. The event is sponsored by NEAG and is open to all area residents.

The current NEAG balance of $5,978 was reported by Gross.

NE governors travel to Washington, meet Carter

WASHINGTON: Sen Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., and Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis confer at a news conference yesterday. (UPI Photo)

WASHINGTON [UPI] – Seven northeastern governors emerged from a meeting with President-elect Jimmy Carter Thursday evening expressing confidence the Georgian was familiar with their problems and would place the region's energy needs high on his priority list.

Attending the meeting were Govs. Hugh Carey of N.Y., Milton Shapp of Pa., Brendan Byrne of N.J., Ella Grasso of Conn., Philip Noel of R.I., Thomas Salmon of Vt., and Michael Dukakis of Mass. Also present were Vermont's Republican governor-elect, Richard Snelling.

Salmon said Carter "was very careful on his choice of words" on energy and the economy but indicated strongly that he will "place energy at the top of his list of priorities."

Salmon said Carter "made it clear he'll play out some trump cards early on in his administration on energy."

Shapp also indicated that Carter intended to move quickly to establish a national energy policy that would take into consideration the special needs of the northeast in terms of the current low supplies, big use demands and high prices.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson ignored the meeting in Washington because "he was too busy welcoming new industry to New Hampshire."

MOSCOW: Col. Moammar Khadafy (center), leader of Libya, visits the Military Academy of Armed Forces. UN General Assembly votes to resume Middle East talks

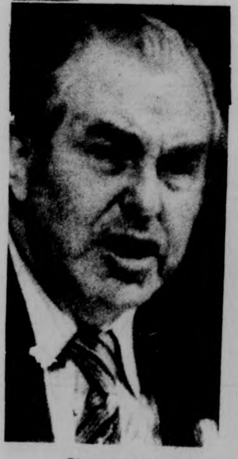
UNITED NATIONS [UPI] — The General Assembly voted 122-2 yesterday to resume the Geneva Middle East peace conference by March, with Palestinian delegates participating. The United States and Israel cast the only "no" votes.

Israel, which refuses to negotiate directly with the Palestinians, earlier withdrew its own resolution to resume the peace talks — the first time the Jewish state had ever made such a proposal at the United Nations.



Chaim Herzog

Ambassador Chaim Herzog said Israel had tried "to cut through the smokescreen and get down to business," but "the automatic majority" of nonaligned nations following the lead of the Arab world doomed the effort to failure.

"We gave you a choice," Herzog said.

Ambassador William W. Scranton said the United States backed Israel to avoid tying the hands of President-elect Jimmy Carter's administration.

Sources close to the U.S. delegation, however, said Scranton's negative votes were not cleared beforehand with Carter's transition team.

PLO observer Zehdi Labib Terzi said the U.S. opposition "is actually creating great problems for the Carter administration."

Israel's original resolution Monday was blocked by an Arab-inspired amendment that called for a PLO seat at the peace talks. "The whip was cracked and the automatic majority of nations sympathetic to the Palestinian cause moved into action," Herzog said.

The resolution passed Thursday was sponsored by nonaligned powers with the behind-the-scenes leadership of Egypt.

Eight countries abstained in the 122-2 vote passing the measure, which called on Secretary General Kurt Waldheim to contact "all the parties" in the Middle East conflict, submit his findings to the Security Council and reconvene the Geneva talks, chaired by the United States and the Soviet Union, by the end of March.

A second resolution backed by Syria was approved 91-11, with 29 abstentions. It specifically called for PLO participation at Geneva and condemned Israel's continued occupation of Arab territories.

THE COLLEGIAN IS AN AFFIRMATIVE ACTION EMPLOYER

BOSTON: John Quarles, the outgoing Deputy Chief of the Environmental Protection Agency (R-center) tells newsmen during a Boston news-conference yesterday that a final decision on the Seabrook, N.H., nuclear power station will be made by the incoming Carter administration. (UPI Photo)

Carter will determine the fate of Seabrook

BOSTON [UPI] — The buck has been passed to the Carter administration on whether a New England power plant can be cooled by open ocean water. The decision will affect 250 power plants nationwide.

"To some extent we would seek to avoid major policy decisions if they are ones that should be more appropriately considered by the incoming administration," John R. Quarles, outgoing deputy chief of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency said yesterday.

While the Ford administration has taken action on the proposed cooling system at a $2 billion nuclear power plant under construction at Seabrook, N.H., Quarles said a final decision won't be made before President-elect Jimmy Carter is inaugurated Jan. 20.

"We who are now in the agency must respond and those coming into the agency must respond," Quarles told a news conference.

"The importance of this case both to New England ... and also the importance of the case as a precedent ... are so great that this has to be a priority of the incoming administration," he said.

EPA Administrator Russell Train said Wednesday he would review the decision by the regional EPA administrator barring the proposed cooling system.

John A.S. McGlennon announced six days before President Ford lost the election open ocean cooling would not be allowed without an $80 million extension of the offshore discharge tunnels.

FCC ruling stings Bellotti

BOSTON [UPI] – Massachusetts Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti yesterday blasted the Federal Communications Commission for rejecting a proposal to ban television drug advertisements.

In the decision issued Thursday, the FCC said Bellotti had failed to prove a casual relationship between drug ads and problems of society.

Calling the decision "cavalier," Bellotti said the decision indicated the agency was "totally insensitive to the problem."

"It is inconceivable to me that the FCC with 1,800 employes did not have a single person they could assign to look into this issue," Bellotti said.

Bellotti, who filed the petition to ban over-the-counter drug ads between 6 a.m. and 9 p.m., said he does not intend to let the matter drop.

"We haven't even seen the decision yet," a spokesman said, "but we do plan to pursue this."

In his statement, Bellotti charged that FCC officials "are either passive or industry oriented. It's no wonder so many federal regulatory officials end up working for private industry."

He said the FCC apparently is content to let the television industry regulate itself. "But how can they be expected to do that when over $300 million a year is spent on television drug advertising."

Judicial changes look good

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — At first glance, the sweeping changes proposed for Massachusetts' court system look good, says State Sen. Alan D. Sisitsky, the new senate chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Public hearings likely will be held in Boston on the proposals before the end of January, the Springfield Democrat said yesterday. Sisitsky said he will recommend a series of regional hearings across the state.

"Everyone is in favor of court reform, but when we get down to specific items, I expect to feel the crunch," he said.

Blue laws challenged

BOSTON (UPI) — Zayre Corp. yesterday filed suit in Suffolk County Superior Court to halt the centuries-old, Massachusetts ban on Sunday sales, said Zayre attorney Edward J. Barshake.

The case, to be heard today at 2 p.m., sought a court injunction against police trying to enforce the so-called "blue laws."

The discount chain, charged last weekend with violating the blue laws when it opened its Springfield and Agawam stores, pleaded innocent Dec. 6 to the charges. A trial was scheduled Jan. 25.

Zayree is suing Paul J. Fenton, police chief of Springfield, Mass. on behalf of several retail stores including CVS, K-Mart, Lafayette Radio and Medi-Mart.

The discount house claims retailers are being adversely affected by competition from stores in neighboring states which allow Sunday operation and sales.

Forced overtime

BOSTON (UPI) — Massachusetts public employes can be forced to accept overtime assignments to emergency situations, the state Labor Relations Commission said yesterday.

The panel said that public employers "have certain residual authority, in an emergency situation to protect the public interest by requiring services which would otherwise be voluntary."

The ruling, stemming from ongoing disputes in Arlington and Medford, could have an immediate impact on several other communities where labor disputes are continuing.

The commission said it felt clarification was necessary due to apparent confusion over a prior ruling involving the town of Beverly. In that case, Beverly police officers were not challenged when they refused to work overtime.

Vote on school budget

PUTNAM, Conn. (AP) — Voters in this northeastern Connecticut town — where schools were closed for lack of a budget — went to the polls yesterday to decide if they will accept a third budget proposal.

The lates proposal was for $2.7 million, about $33,000 less than the last rejected budget plan.

First Selectman William H. St. Onge said there was a big turnout, "a steady stream of voters" during the day. The town has about 5,000 eligible voters.

Schools and some town services were shut down Dec. 1, but the town's 1,600 pupils returned to school Tuesday under a court order.

Dredging operation OK'd

HARDFORD, Conn. (UPI) — The Navy's effort to dredge the Thames River so nuclear submarines can reach its Groton sub base cleared a major roadblock yesterday when all but one group okayed a compromise dumping agreement.

After five hours of closed-door debate, representatives of most groups involved in the hassel agreed the Navy could dump — with certain provisions — some 2.8 million cubic yards of polluted dredges at a site 2.5 miles into Long Island Sound off New London.

N.E. oil drilling study 'sham' group charges

PROVIDENCE (AP) — Conservationists said yesterday a federal environmental impact study on proposed Georges Bank oil drilling is a "sham" and needs to be redone.

Criticism of the 2,000-page document came at a hearing conducted by the U.S. Interior Department. The department's Bureau of Land Management prepared the impact statement, a requirement for the lease of underwater territory to oil firms scheduled for next spring.

Preparation of a new statement would likely delay the auction of leases for at least several months. Present plans call for oil firms to explore an area 100-150 miles east of Cape Cod for oil and natural gas.

Leading the attack on the present statement, which is still in a draft form, was Save The Bay, Inc., a Rhode Island group that monitors industrial development on Narragansett Bay.

Richard A. Sherman, Save The Bay spokesman, said his group was unable to take a position on the conclusions of the present impact statement because its facts were so vague.

For example, he said, the report asserts that New England could recover quickly from oil spills, and cites as evidence the region's experience with oil tankers that sank during World War II.

But Sherman said no one has ever studied the spills from those tankers and it is still unknown how they changed the sea.

Sherman said the statement failed to measure up to standards set by court rulings in other environmental disputes. He called the statement "a sham and a mockery of the process required by law."

Edward S. Van Vleet, representing the University of Rhode Island School of Oceanography, expressed a similar viewpoint.

He said the statement often drew inaccurate conclusions from data, observing that the document tends to be complacent about residue that would be left by an oil spill.

He said the university's research in Narragansett Bay suggests that oil sediment can exist in the water for 50-100 years.

The 'reverse gut' course

By DAVID NEEDLE

During my erratic academic career here at UMass, I've occasionally encountered what's known as the 'gut course.' As most UMies know, the 'Gut' is a course that requires little work and attendance to garner the student an A. They are so popular that I've even heard some overworked students complain that enough of them don't exist. But this column is concerned with a more devious threat to 'higher learning,' namely the teacher's gut or what I've dubbed the 'reverse Gut.'

The reverse gut is a course that is very easy for the professor but almost impossible for the student to fathom. The semester's work usually includes book or treatises written by the professor who smugly dares any student to challenge material he knows inside out.

Of course the teacher's role is to enlighten us ignoramai, but if the Professor merely pontificates without any meaningful give and take with the students we remain in academic darkness. And if I can be so mundane as to mention grades, A's come only to those willing to fully integrate themselves into the professor's pseudo - learning - community (the classroom), by kissassery or some genuine expression of belief in the daily dogma.

I say all this is easy for the professor because he is safe and secure. While the student goes through the semester wondering what the goals of the course are, the professor continues on his inner-directed course or justifying a PhD thesis or perhaps operating on the delusion that UMass teachers con.

Each wandering lecture is more entertaining than the last. Indeed it never ceases to amaze me how enthusiastically amused they seem to be by their wit.

Maybe the course description guides should include small notes like "enjoyed by professor not by students."

Readers respond to 'Prejudice Problems' letter

To the Editor:

This letter is in response to "Prejudice Problems."

My particular situation is that I too am seeing a Black man but as I happen to be a Black woman, the problem is you. Am I suppose to welcome you with open arms as you attempt to steal my man?

Black women, speaking collectively, are not attracted to white men. Whether it be an inborn trait or one instilled in us through the years, we shall always love our Black men. Black women so outnumber Black men [especially here] that even between we sisters the competition for a man is sometimes fierce. Obviously when a white woman steps into the picture Black women become quite upset and may even feel betrayed, confused, and most of all hurt. Yes, we feel it's in very, very poor taste when a Black man becomes involved with a white woman because the Black man is a minority within a minority and you have just made that minority even smaller. Who are we supposed to turn to when you have Our Black men?

I would say that you over-exaggerated when you stated that the brother is being "branded out of his own race", I have not seen any examples of this. I know of many Black men involved with white women but that is not to say that I or we have branded them.

Just because none of your friends hassle you does not mean that they approve of the situation. We, at least, are being honest and straightforward with our feelings but I doubt that all of your friends are, unless they too are white women attracted to Black men.

You might consider these feelings you've evoked within me as prejudice but I perceive them as very important factors in the Essence of Black Womanhood.

In conclusion, let me leave you with this thought. What if a white man you cared for became involved with a Black woman? How would you feel? THINK HARD WHITE WOMAN.

Mary E. Custard
and The Sisters

To the Editor:

In response to "Prejudice Problems" 12-8-76:

I am a white woman who has been seeing a black man for over a year. I have encountered racism focused towards me because of this relationship from white people. By definition, white people are racist because whites live in a society that is racist and is intended to "benefit" white only. I do not believe that racism is a benefit to white people, in fact I believe that racism is very destructive to white people.

White people I know may not disapprove of my relationship openly but when it comes home, it's a different story. My relatives have been unable to deal with me because of my attitudes and ideas. Some white people may feel that an inter-racial relationship is something to admire, without knowledge of the relationship and the people involved. That attitude is racist. White people should not admire blacks because they are black, but for who they are. Their "admiration" may be an act to show, "Hey, I'm not a racist, I accept inter-racial relationships, therefore I'm O.K."

Another thing that must be understood is the problems black men and women face in their own communities when involved with a white person in a relationship as such. The questions begin to arise, "What does he-she feel abo[illegible]s-her blackness?" "Why is he-she dating a white person? Is it because he-she does not love their black brothers and sisters and prefers a white person?" White society has long held the image of a white person as more desirable, more beautiful, to black people, as well as white. Black people have rebelled saying, "black people should love their blackness, not revere whiteness; black is beautiful." That is one reason why there is a feeling against black and white relationships in the black communities.

Black people have been effected in this way as the result of racism which whites are responsible for continually perpetuating. The relationship between the black man and white woman may possibly be viewed to represent a dislike on the part of the black man, of his blackness, which is a negative feeling. A black person should have a positive feeling about his-her blackness, community and identity.

My response to this situation is the following. Black people can love themselves, their brothers and sisters and love a person who is white. Blacks need not let racism deteriorate their feelings of humanism towards all people. The black man or woman need not reject themselves, their blackness, their positive feelings about themselves to be involved with a white person. An authentic and positive inter-racial relationship can exist between black and white people.

As for white people, we should not desire a black-white relationship as a symbol of "not guilty". White people may disgard everything white, reject a racist society, because of their disgust with racism and turn towards gaining acceptance from black people which is another unhealthy reason for a relationship. It's developed out of guilt, not out of sincere feelings. White people can love an image of themselves as being and anti-racist white and have a positive relationship with a black person; all people.

What may seem to be prejudice on the part of the black community is a reaction based on the effects of living in a racist society; that is pro-white and anti-black. The reaction is understandable, but I don't believe healthy. The only way we can overcome that feeling is to develop a society that is anti-racist, a society that serves the needs of all people. Then we may all have authentic inter-racial relationships that are not a reaction to institutional racism or a product of it; a racism that is internal and ingrained in every aspect of our lives.

We must act towards all our brothers and sisters as people in a humanistic manner. We have much to gain in the elimination of racism, white as much as black. Racism is destroying our rights as people to love every and any person without exploitation and fear of ostracism.

Army training in repression

By STEPHEN KINZER

PANAMA CITY, Panama, Dec. 6 — Here in Panama, one of the most controversial elements of the canal dispute is a U.S. Army operation most Americans have probably never heard of: the School of the Americas.

On a spacious tract of Canal Zone land called Ford Amador, cadets and officers from 17 different Latin nations come to learn everything from military intelligence and the use of explosives to jungle warfare and counter-insurgency strategy.

Since many Latin armed forces perform both police and defense functions — and international invasions are unlikely — the greatest value of the school comes in training Latin governments to combat domestic unrest.

And because so many of these governments are right-wing military dictatorships, the existence of the school here troubles many Panamanians — whose government, though itself a military dictatorship, is fiercely nationalistic and populist.

While saying nothing publicly, American military officials are reportedly trying to convince the Panamanians to let the military school remain here.

But Panamanian Foreign Minister Aquilino Boyd is anxious to see it leave — despite the fact that Panama itself continues to send troops to the school. Panama's government defends its use of the school as necessary for the professionalization of its own army, but objects to the training of military and police from countries charged with consistent violation of human rights, like Chile and Brazil, on its soil.

"In Panama, troops are being trained in counter-insurgency and are used against our brother peoples in some countries," says Boyd. "This creates problems for us with those peoples. We do not wish to retain those installations which put us in such a difficult position."

Most Latin American nations, including all the right-wing governments, send troops to the School of the Americas.

The Nicaraguan National Guard, for example — the power base of one of the harshest Latin dictatorships — sends its cadets to the school for a full year before using them in its war against rural guerrillas.

The year after Chile's military junta overthrew the socialist government of Salvador Allende, the U.S. Department of the Army reported that Chilean attendance jumped to 60 per cent of all students.

The Bolivian troops who tracked and killed Che Guevara were trained at USARSA, as the Army calls the school.

And during the Vietnam war, many American and foreign troops received special instruction at the Jungle Operations Training Center before entering combat.

Among the graduates of the school are Presidents Hugo Banzer of Bolivia and Guillermo Rodriguez of Ecuador, both generals. Other alumni include the chief domestic security officer in Chile and the Army Chiefs of Staff in Guatemala, Nicaragua, Paraguay and Uruguay.

At the same time, Panama's own populist leader Gen. Omar Torrijos is also a graduate — as were most of the progressive generals who launched extensive reforms in Peru after their 1968 coup.

Perhaps the closest statement of the importance of the training program to the U.S. comes from former Defense Secretary Robert McNamara. "These students are handpicked by their countries to become instructors when they return home," he told the House Appropriations Committee. "They are the coming leaders ...

"I need not dwell upon the values of having in positions of leadership men who have firsthand knowledge of how Americans do things and how they think. It is beyond price to us to make friends of such men."

All courses at USARSA are taught in Spanish, and the instructors come from the officer corps of both the U.S. Army and selected Latin forces. Each course is modelled after courses taught at military schools in the U.S.

Most of the training is in anti-guerrilla operations, both urban and rural. Students are taught commando techniques that can be applied in the jungle or highland terrains that characterize the continent.

In addition to USARSA, which last year graduated 1,681 students, there are also Navy and Air Force instructional schools. The three schools operate on a budget of nearly $5 million, paid for by the respective U.S. services.

What will happen if the schools are forced to close?

"That is not our concern," says Foreign Minister Boyd. "Perhaps they can be moved to Florida."

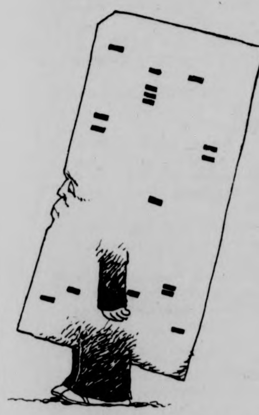
Automaton education

By MICHAEL ROBERTS

My parents were beautiful blue-collar workers. They worked for my opportunities and education. They overwhelmed me with pride and sternly berated my errors. I rebelled against their laudable intentions, perhaps to be like them.

I tried to be a worker once. I lasted one year on the third shift in a plastic factory. I was out of place. I had no college degree, but I had an education my parents never had. School had taught me to be truculent; I possessed a disenchantment no fellow worker had.

It was not just an assembly line that disturbed me, there was wasted time. I wanted to write. I left the factory.



I returned to school. Again I floundered. I had a different approach to education coupled with a passion for building sentences. I had found school stifling.

Where do I go now? I suspect some would suggest hell, or at least the "University Without Walls". So onward to hell to contemplate language. Writing will not bestow any success upon me, but it will help. After my death, when I reach the afterlife, be it heaven, hell, or purgatory, I can apply to Dante's School for Hapless Writers.

In my delusions of semantical grandeur, I have flunked many courses. I wanted it to be more important to read and write, than to cite statistics, to amass power, or to accrue wealth. I have sacrificed a major in political science to learn meager words, only to watch a technological world obsolete free expression.

I have hoped that when it became painfully evident that schools no longer taught correct language, I could reap rewards, such as a job. It seems I will not. Free expression depends on those who can form, express and recognize ideas. It is meaningless in a society of television illiterates.

I wonder what society will be like fecund with automatons who have forgotten how to speak?

At least I will have an education my parents never had. I hope that I could be wrong in reflecting, "Your college education is only worth the computer tape that remembers it."

Machinini a distinguished visitor

To the Editor:

The Distinguished Visitors Program distinguished itself this past Wednesday, when it brought Tsieitsi Machinini to the UMass campus.

Those who heard Mr. Machinini speak will not soon forget him or his message. Mr. Machinini is in forced exile from South Africa, a marked man. He is President of the South African Students Union, one of the chief irritants of the apartheid government. He is 19.

To those of us who saw and heard him, Mr. Machinini provided a compelling example of both courage and courtesy. He might have harangued his American audience, but he did not. He did not shout or indulge himself in the easy rhetoric of "revolution". Mr. Machinini knows first-hand that revolution is not easy.

Only once did Mr. Machinini raise his voice, to answer his final questioner, who inquired as to how Americans in the struggle for liberation were perceived in South Africa. Mr. Machinini's response was swift and angry. "You are lazy, you are self-conceited. You do very little to support the struggle in South Africa."

Earlier, Mr. Machinini was asked, "How does it feel to be so young and yet so old?"

"I never think about it," he replied. "So many of my people have died in the struggle. I want to die too. There is no me any more — there is only the struggle."

Those who heard and saw Tsieitsi Machinini Wednesday afternoon had the rare privilege to come into the presence of one who puts his life directly on the line in the service of a long and difficult struggle. Mr. Machinini did not have to shout. His life and courage speak for themselves. His words were delivered quietly, like depth-charges. I suspect they will be going off for some time.

Iranian counselors express thanks

To the Editor:

We are a group of Iranian counselors who have come to UMass to improve our skills in counseling and guidance during fall term.

Hereby, we appreciate the humanistic behavior and effective management style of Professor Alfred Alshuler, new principal investigator of the program.

We are specially thankful to Mr. Darionsh Dehghan, coordinator of the program, who has been very capable and has done more than his duty for the betterment of the program.

We also appreciate the UMass School of Education, which has provided us with its means and resources, enabling us to benefit more from this learning opportunity.

A valuable friendship

By BONNIE CHWALEK

I remember reading an article once, which offered some reasons as to why women's friendships could never be as understanding and valuable as that of friendships between men. The main reasons offered were: women felt the need to compete, and often a friendship between two women was a surrogate relationship to compensate for the absence of a man. I dismissed the article as one-sided and ridiculous. My defense and evidence was our friendship.

The understanding which has been built between us during these four years has been the most valuable benefit of my "college education." How could I ever place academic credit on the same scale as the times we've been through?

—Helping each other through drunk nights and hung-over mornings.

—The discussions concluding that God created all men equal assholes.

—The appreciated silences when we realized that neither of us wanted to talk.

—Leaving the Cape in tears after those crazy summers.

—Not having to tell each other that one of us was being impossible.

—Gordon Lightfoot, morning, noon, and night.

—Checking out each other's choices in men and sometimes lying about our opinions.

—Pigging out as we discussed our diets.

The good times made up for the bad, or at least made them easier to forget.

Yesterday it finally dawned on me that you weren't here. I started crying in the middle of a class. The poor professor thought it was because of his boring lecture.

I guess that's what friendship really is; wanting the best for, and the happiness of someone even if it means that they may not be around much anymore. All I can say Jodes, is that I'm still with you. With all we've been through, something as trivial as this couldn't possibly make our friendship any less valuable?

Love,
Bonnie.

Column taken out of context

To the Editor:

Having been a close friend to Martha Newcomb for many years and a "collaborator" on some of her columns, I can say without a doubt that in her column entitled "Sharp-Art" she meant no insult to the students at the Belchertown School. What she was trying to say was that exploiting the sickness of Willoughby Sharp for entertainment purposes is every bit as perverse as mocking and destroying the dignity of the Belchertown students. She was questioning the motives for this grim grasping at others sickness by comparing it to the horror and perversity of using the mentally ill and retarded for entertainment purposes: A thing Martha would never do.

Ms. Bolger picked sentences out of Martha's column without looking at them in the context they were placed in. When criticizing literature it is a good idea to know the type of literary devices that the author employs. Otherwise the type of distorted view presented by Ms. Bolger occurs.

When Martha said that the Belchertown school was full of unpaid artists she meant that if we were sick enough to enjoy Mr. Sharp then we should also be sick and insensitive enough to exploit the mentally ill and destroy their dignity for our own entertainment.

The life of a sex star; Harry Reems tells all

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. [UPI] — Nobody noticed Harry Reems as he scurried nervously past the ivy-covered halls of Harvard University.

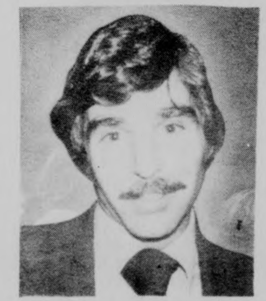
Carrying a leather attache case and dressed in blue jeans and a heavy, beige turtleneck, he looked like one of a dozen preppies rushing to class.

But Reems is not a Harvard student. He's the superstar of dirty movies.

The male lead of Deep Throat and Devil In Miss Jones was on his way to address Harvard law students Wednesday night on the First Amendment. He was late and that made him nervous.

Earlier, chainsmoking and pacing his hotel room, Reems, 29, was attractive, articulate and soft-spoken.

The sandy brown haired actor, who trained with the National Shakespeare Company and the Senior Dramatic Workshop of Carnegie Hall, was at Harvard to defend his notoriety as a sex star.



Harry Reems

"What kind of film is Deep Throat? Well, it's a sex film," he said seriously. "I guess I'd call it a film with a strong sexual theme. It's hardcore, explicit sex."

"Hell, I guess it's a porno flick," he laughed.

Earlier this year, Reems was one of 11 defendants convicted in Memphis, Tenn., of participating in a "national conspiracy to transport interstate an obscene motion picture "Deep Throat."

He awaits sentencing and faces another trial in Memphis for the "Devil In Miss Jones."

"I got involved with Deep Throat out of curiosity, titilation, financial gain. I never thought it would further my career or become another test case of the First Amendment.

"Now I'm a convicted felon. I've had my passport taken away from me and I'm involved with a political situation far over my head. On top of that, I'm bankrupt."

Reems grabbed a handful of clothes and ducked into the bathroom. "You don't mind if I change while we talk, do you?

"I'm not saying Deep Throat is a masterpiece. It isn't. It has moments of artistic expression, but it's basically infantile, amateurish and boring. It's indicative of how young the porno industry is and what its prime concern is — making money.

"But this whole thing is more than just me. It's about the rights of artists to explore the subject of sexuality. I don't know if I want to do another porno film, but I sure want the right to choose to do one.

"I'm not an advocate of the sexual revolution — whatever that is. But this country is so repressed. The laws are structured so that when new ideas are thrust upon this society, it can't cope with it.

"I think that's going to be this country's downfall." Emerging dressed now in a three-piece suit, Reems pulled four tennis balls out of his luggage and began juggling.

"It's my only plaything in life now. Running around trying to raise money to defend myself, living in hotels," he said.

Before Sound Guard®, the only way to prevent your records from wearing out was not to play them.

Unprotected

Magnified, you can see record vinyl wearing away.

With Sound Guard

With same magnification, record vinyl shows no wear.

If you've played any record often enough, you've heard the inevitable occur. It wore out.

While "pops," "hisses," and other surface noises began making their appearance on your favorite records, high frequency sounds—like violins and flutes—began disappearing.

The villain behind this destruction is friction. (If a diamond cuts through steel, you can imagine what a diamond stylus does to vinyl records.) Fortunately, from outer space has come a solution to record degradation. It's called Sound Guard.*

A by-product of research into dry lubricants for aerospace applications, Sound Guard record preservative puts a microscopically-thin (less than 0.000003") dry film on records to protect the grooves from damage. Yet, remarkably, it does not degrade fidelity.

Independent tests show that Sound Guard preservative maintains full amplitude at all audible frequencies, while at the same time significantly retarding increases in surface noise and harmonic distortion.

In other words, when applied according to instructions, a new record treated with Sound Guard preservative and played 100 times sounds the same as one in "mint" condition played the first time!

Sound Guard preservative comes in a kit (complete with non-aerosol pump sprayer and velvet buffing pad). It is completely safe and effective for all discs, from precious old 78's to the newest LP's including CD-4's.

Recently introduced to audiophiles, Sound Guard preservative is now available in audio and record outlets.

For complete test results write: Sound Guard, Box 5001, Muncie, Indiana 43702.

bluebird forecast

It all depends...

By JACOB LOVE

The astrological weather for today depends upon how much we got out of yesterday. If we had a beautiful day yesterday, today may be a mild drag but we can float over it into the weekend. But if we had difficulties yesterday, then today will accentuate our hang-overs.

We may feel a bit unloved as we get out of bed. Unexpected hassles and challenges with partners may pop out around noon. If we're not moving towards our target this afternoon, we may feel guilty for letting ourselves down.

Ol'Sol is focusing our soul energy on Sagittarius, the sign of The Archer. So if we're aiming at a distant target, we'll be in tune with the season. The Moon, our emoceanl focus, flowed into the sign of Leo early this morning. Leo, like "Sag" is a fire sign, so if we're burning with creative purpose we'll flow best. Leo is symbolized by The Royal Lion who always acts proud, brave, and noble. So we could feel like a Queen or King for the day — but the Moon makes four difficult planetary connections thru the day — so we'll have to earn the right to act royal.

With Venus, the goddess of love, in the opoosite sign of humanitarian Aquarius, we'll find our greatest nobility by treating others like equals.

With that in mind, here's a brief run-down on the weekend:

—hidden insecurities may lead to unexpected outbursts late tonight.

—Saturday morning could be happily energetic, especially if we're moving towards our dream-target.

—Saturday afternoon may bring headaches if we're not happy with our progress.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Friday, December 10 — Born today, you are one to whom peace and quiet, especially in the home, are extremely important. You cannot know happiness if you are surrounded by unrest; you cannot know personal satisfaction if you must act from a center of chaos. You will have to be especially careful in your selection of a marriage partner; one given to tantrums, to small-minded dissatisfaction, to unprovoked anger, frustration, or long periods of depression would bring into your private life only confusion and, ultimately, the failure of affection and the diminution of loyalty. Such a mate would, in short, drive you to a state of personal misery.

You have many qualities that endear you to friend and stranger alike. You are able, for example, to make others feel their own worth in extremely positive terms. You have no need to be on top if the career or social "heap"; so long as you can maintain good personal relationships with those with whom your own situation and circumstances dictate association, you are happy. A good listener, you know how to make others feel important simply by lending an ear to what they have to say. As for accepting others' advice, you feel free to do so.

Basically a calm and quiet person, you tend to have a soothing effect upon all with whom you come into contact.

Saturday, December 11

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — The more creative you can be in your approach to present problems on the home front, the more certain you can be of solutions by evening.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You will have to work out your own difficulties on the employment scene. Coworkers seem to be having enough trouble of their own now.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — If you can put a good face on things early in the day, you stand a chance of impressing higher-ups as you would wish to impress them.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — This is a Saturday for putting the pressures of employment behind you while you concentrate on family activity. Children need guidance.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Follow your whim if you must – but don't expect success to come out of misplaced energy. Consult a friend for help at evening.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — If the bold attack is what is needed to bring down the fort of the opposition, begin now to choose your weapons. Consider verbal argument.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Goals come within grasping distance today if you are careful to select supporters from among the few who really know what you're after.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Take the time to thank another for his contribution to your present happiness on the home front. There is much to be thankful for.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — A desire toward candidness must not be allowed to turn you toward brutality of speech. Consider another's feelings at this particular time.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — You will do yourself the greatest of harm today if you allow your attention to wander from the pursuit of your goal. Acquaint friends of yours to one another.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Employ force of language if you wish, but don't be talked into actually throwing your weight around physically. Tact gains points.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Select the wheat from the chaff today as others make for personal gain. There is much to forgive in another's actions.

Swim men host weak BU team

By MARK MARCHAND
Collegian Staff

Currently sporting a 1-1 record after its first two meets, Bei Melamed's men's swim team faces a relatively inexperienced Boston University team tonight at 7 o'clock in Boyden Pool.

Coached by Ray Wetmore, the Terrier swimmers are only in their 2nd year of existence and sport an 0-1 record so far this year.

"We're currently in the building stage and we're just trying to become competitive with the average teams in the league" said Wetmore. He listed his top performers which included Ross Gerry, an I.M. specialist, and William Kirkpatrick, a diving specialist. The BU loss came against the New England champions, Maine, as the Terriers were dominated by a 94-18 score.

According to Melamed, this should be a relatively easy meet for the Minutemen who are coming off a close win over Worcester Polytechnic Institute, 49-46. "This is probably the only team on our schedule that we can be 100 per cent sure of beating" said Melamed as he discussed the weak Terrier team. Last year, the Minutemen easily defeated the Terriers as UMass won every event except the high diving competition.

With this the last competition for the Minutemen before the long intersession break, it will do a lot of good for the swimmers to go into the long month of practice with a winning record. Also, the student body should take advantage of this home meet as a good chance to see the swimmers in competition before the long break.

UMass grapplers visit Cortland St.

The UMass wrestling team hopes to overcome its losing trend by beating some competitive teams in a quadrangular match to be held at Cortland New York tomorrow. The Minutemen will grapple with Cortland State, Potsdam State, and Binghamton State.

UMass head coach Dave Amato will be placed in a unique situation in regards to the match. He was last year's head coach at Potsdam and will be facing his old team in a new light.

"The matches will be very close but we expect to win all three" Amato commented.

The meet will consist of three straight dual matches, the first beginning at 2:00.

The Sox trade—get with it Mr. O'Connell

By KIRK LEWIS
Collegian Staff

Well fans, it's happened again. Yes, the Red Sox have made yet another dumbfounded trade that will leave the sports world gazing and wondering for quite some time. And it was once agaan the work of Dick O'Connell, who still does not know how to leave a good thing alone.

This time, Dick went back to his favorite team, the Milwaukee Brewers, and gave them an early Christmas present that will probably keep the Brewers a respectable team for 5-7 more years. It seems that O'Connell has a soft heart for the ill-ridden Brewers, or why else would he pursue that line of thought. And that thought train has brought back to Boston a man who started his career here, and would like very much to end it in the same place. That man is George "The Boomer" Scott.

The trade with the Brewers brought Scott, and not forgotten Bernardo Carbo, back to the BoSox for Cecil Cooper, one of the brightest and youngest hitting prospects the Sox have had in quite some time. And why? It seems that O'Connell doesn't know where to stop! In 1971, he made a very interesting trade with Milwaukee that was so one-sided, the fans wondered what was going on back then. That was when Scott, Jim Lonborg, Billy Conigliaro, Ken Brett and Joe Lahoud went to the Brewers as part of a gift from Mr. O'Connell that was a steal in favor of Milwaukee from the start.

Scott, then, was the Red Sox hero, the "Tater-Man" as he was called, who was also the best gloveman in the entire circuit. When they traded him, Scott was in his prime. Now, they've gotten him back and it's too late. The Boomer isn't going to change this team around, contrary to popular belief. In fact, the Sox would've been better off sticking with the younger Cooper. Last year in part-time duty as a first baseman, the "Coop" batted .282 with 15 homers and 78 RBI's, compared to Scotts figures of .274-18-77. And in fielding percentage, Cooper had a .994 (seventh in the league of starting first baseman), compared to Scotts .991 which was good for 11th place in the American League.

Commentary

And what about the third party in this trade, Bernie Carbo. Sure, Carbo was a very exciting player in the 1975 World Series, especially when he hit the historic home run, but what now? Why bring him back to Boston where everybody knows an outfielder is not what the club needs. And as an example, the Sox, as a result of the trade, have an interesting problem with Carl Yastrzemski, who was the Sox' first baseman last season. With Scott here, first base appears to be filled. So, where does that leave Yaz? His only other position is in left field.

But Jim Rice, the 23 year old outfielder-DH, doesn't appear ready to give up his left field spot. "A guy like Yaz has got 16 years in," Rice said. "You've got to look to the future. I'm not only shocked over this trade, I'm disappointed," Rice went on to say. "The DH is for the older guy."

But how do you tell a guy like Yaz, to move over after a great career like the one he's had? Which all brings us back to Carbo.

Where do the Sox go from here? Methinks there's something else lurking in the back of Dick O'Connell's mind. A possible BoSox trade involving a Red Sox pitcher and-or outfielder. Bringing names into the projection, Bill Lee, Rick Krueger, Rick Miller, and Bob Montgomery to Oakland for Vida Blue and Phil Garner. It is evident that the Sox need a good lefthanded starter to keep pace with the Yanks, but why trade away two lefties to get one? Only Mr. O'Connell can answer that!

Gymnastic teams visit Lion den

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

The women's gymnastics team opens its season with a very tough away meet against Penn State Saturday evening at Penn State. In the preseason ratings, Penn State is ranked fourth while UMass is seventh which should indicate just how close the competition will be.

The competition will be the first for both teams and it is quite a way to start the season off. UMass assistant coach John Calabria says such strong competition so early "goes both ways".

"We're never really completely ready but it sets up a strong standard for the rest of the season," he said.

The gymwomen are slightly hampered by some minor injuries but coach Virginia Evans is confident that three of her all around performers will be in good condition. Susan Cantwell, Jill Heggie, and Karen Hemberger are all definite four-event performers. Stephanie Jones will probably only compete in three events as she is still having slight problems with a foot injury she sustained earlier this semester.

Minor injuries leave the remainder of the positions in doubt until the competition on Saturday. Diane Laurenson hyper-extended her elbow in practice this week, but is expected to see action on the floor and in vaulting. Barbara Burmeister injured her neck slightly in a fall on Monday, but she may still see competition in three events. Cheryl Morrier also suffered a minor injury to her wrist this week but is expected to compete on the beam.

The entire squad of twelve gymnasts will make the trip to Penn State. Barring any last minute injuries Evans hopes that all gymwomen will perform. Intra-squad meets were still taking place in yesterday's practice so all the positions have yet to be decided.

Penn State's strength lies in its all around performers. The likes of Karen Schuckman and Amy Carr grace the Nittany Lion's squad. Shuckman finished second in the individual competition in the Eastern Region last year and Carr has made the United States team several times. With the additional fourth score counting in the team scores this year the overall depth of the team will be important.

Consistency, concentration and strength of execution will be the deciding factor of Saturday's meet. Both teams have equal caliber and potential and the true strength of the teams will be tested. Long hours are already behind the gymwomen; let the season begin!

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

Sitting behind his office desk yesterday, UMass men's gymnastics coach Dick Swetman leaned back in his chair, gazed up towards the ceiling and said, "well, this is it, our biggest meet is coming up."

The big meet Swetman was refering to is tomorrow night's UMass-Penn St. men's gymnastics meet scheduled for 7:30 p.m. in the Recreation Hall on the Penn St. campus.

"They'll packing them in the Rec Hall tomorrow night," Swetman said. "Penn St. usually averages 6,000 people for a gymnastics dual meet and the people who attend the meets are the most knowledgable gymnastics crowd in the country."

Swetman, a 1970 graduate of Penn St. where he was an All-American gymnast, is looking very forward to the Penn St. meet and strongly believes his UMass team has as good an opportunity as any to upset the nationally-ranked Nittany Lions.

"I definitely feel that we will give Penn St. more than just a run for its money," Swetman said. "I talked to Penn St. head coach Karl Schwensfare yesterday and he said that they were hurting from injuries, which should significantly affect the meet."

Penn St. will be without the services of two of its top all-around performers and one of its best side horse men.

"Penn State's coach also told me yesterday that there is a lot more of a problem on his team other than injuries," Swetman said. "He also told me that his team had a lot of patching up to do before they are ready to meet us."

UMass will go into tomorrow night's meet realitively free from injuries. Co-captain Steve Marks, who was forced to sit out the Lowell meet because of problems with his knees, is in good health and will return to action tomorrow night.

"All week we have been working on the little things that should pick up a tenth of a point here and a tenth of a point there," Swetman said. "We've been concentrating on these little things because we're going to need every point we can get. We still have to hit on all our events if we plan on beating them."

If all goes as planned for the Minutemen, Swetman predicted that the UMass gymnasts will score around 202. Further incentive for the UMass gymnasts is the fact that former UMass head coach Tom Dunn is now an assistant coach at Penn St. Some of the player's want to show Dunn how they've improved.

"It will be a great boost to our program if we win," Swetman said. "If we hit on all our performances and maintain the concentration we have had the past meets, I think we will have a great opportunity to pull an upset."

A homecoming for men's coach Swetman

By SUSAN CANTWELL

When the UMass men's gymnastics team meets Penn State this weekend, coach Dick Swetman may have trouble with where his loyalities lie.

For it was while he was a member of the Penn State team in 1969 that he was named an All-American competitor, and later during his senior year in 1970 he was elected captain of the Nittany Lion gymnastic team.

Swetman's impressive list of gymnastic achievements, ranging from national to international honors, represents the traditional excellence associated with Penn State.

The slender, 5-7, 135 lb. Swetman said, "Penn State and UMass have always been rivals with the former usually winning. This year UMass may be the victor. "We have the ability to capture this meet if each man attains his potential."

When asked which team he wanted to win, from the immediate and dynamic response there is no doubt that his loyalaties are with his team, UMass.

"Nothing could please me more than to have UMass win. Looking at our capability realistically, both the men and myself know we can do it. We've had three meets already which I feel we have won," Swetman said.

Swetman attributes his positive gymnastic attitudes to his high school coach, Bill Roetzhiem, who managed to transform high school deliquents into top notch gymnastics through his ability to draw the creativity out of each performer.

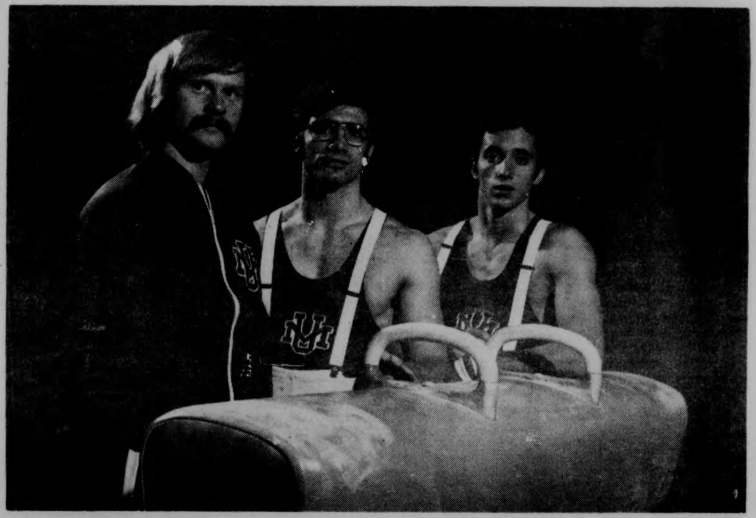
"Roetzheim expected you to do better with each performance, having everyone pulling his own weight," Swetman said. "If we didn't, he asked, 'why?' His expectations were realistic but demanding. I've adopted the same philosophy.

"After I was graduated from Penn State in 1970, I continued competing until 1972," he continued. "I've just completed my Master's Thesis in Physical Education (Sport Sociology) at the Univ. of Washington."

While Swetman was in graduate school in Washington he was the men's assistant gymnastic coach from 1974-1975. Prior to attending graduate school he was the men's assistant coach at the Univ. of Illinois Chicago Circle.

After a moments silence, he said, "I enjoy coaching at UMass much more than I had expected. With the caliber of gymnastics apparent at UMass, coaching is more fulfilling, allowing me to instruct as well as learn."

Regardless of the outcome, Swetman is looking forward to his Penn State homecoming, once again, participating in "Rec Hall."



For UMass gymnastic's coach Dick Swetman (L), pictured with co-caps Angelo Scuderi (C) and Steve Marks, tomorrow will be a bit of a homecoming as he returns to his alma mater, Penn State, where he was an All-American in his college days.

UMass meets Cross PC and BC on tap

A Classic at the Garden

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

The setting — ancient, decrepit, but mystical Boston Garden. The act — New England college basketball at its best. The participants — UMass, Holy Cross, Providence College, and Boston College.

No, post season tournament play has not arrived early in time for the holiday season, folks. Yet it just may be an early Christmas present for the winner as these four teams vye for early season recognition as the king of New England courts in this weekend's first-ever Colonial Classic beginnining tomorrow night at the home of the Celtics.

The Minutemen, back into the swing of things after their two recent wins, draw Holy Cross in the second game (9:00 p.m.) of tomorrow night's opening doubleheader. Providence will tangle with Boston College to tap off tournament play at 6:30. The winners meet for the championship Sunday at 1:00 with the consolation game following.

The Crusaders beat UMass in two crucial meetings last season, and with the addition of All-everything freshman guard Ronnie Perry to a returning cast of seven lettermen, the squad from Worcester capture honors as the pre-tourney favorites — which in a tournament like this means very little. The Cross boast a 3-0 record with wins against Dartmouth, Vermont, and Buffalo and were ranked 18th in Sports Illustrated's preseason poll.

Perry, the much-publicized recruit from Catholic Memorial, has thus far met all his billings. The 6-2 guard has played 101 minutes in the three contests, averaged 23.3 points, and has committed just seven turnovers and one foul in that time. Joining him in the backcourt will be co-captain Bill Doran, who has averaged just over 10 points per game. Sophomore John O'Connor (6-8) mans the center spot, while Mike Vicens (6-5) and Chris Potter (6-8) flank him at the forwards. All five starters average double figures in scoring, while Potter leads HC rebounders with 28 in the three tilts.

"Holy Cross is an excellent team, and underline the word team," UMass coach Jack Leaman stressed. "They play extremely well together. They have eight or nine people who contribute."

Leaman calls Perry an "excellent" player. "He scored 31 points one game (Vermont) and 15 the next, and he played outstanding basketball in each one. He just did different things in each.

"But the key to this team is Potter. He's an aggressive rebounder, especially off the offensive boards. He's a real challenge for us," added Leaman.

UMass will meet that challenge with the same starting lineup as in the BU game. Alex Eldridge and Derick Claiborne will start at the guards, while Mark Donoghue, Mike Pyatt, and Steve Mayfield start in the frontcourt. But expect to see a lot of Jim Town, and ultimately some tough battles underneath.

Leaman is still less than ecstatic over his team. "We're about 75 per cent of what we should be right now," the coach stated. "We rebounded well against BU, but we didn't execute the fast break against them. We shot the ball well, but we still took some bad shots.

"We can get away with that against the BU's and the New Hampshire's, but we'll have to do a lot better against someone like Holy Cross."

Hoopwomen sight Catamounts as target for ice-breaking win

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

It will be both a homecoming and a chance to settle a score when the UMass women's basketball team travels to Vermont tomorrow for a 2:00 game against the Catamounts.

Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski will be returning to the Green Mountain State for the first time in a basketball coaching capacity since her four-year (1972-76) stay at Brattleboro Union High School. Her basketball teams there were involved in state tournament play each year during her coaching tenure.

In fact, Ozdarski said that several of Vermont's current players were opponents of her high school squads during their scholastic days.

But the Minutewomen tomorrow will be facing a team that upset them in the opening round of last year's Eastern Regionals. UMass, ranked third in the tournament, was defeated, 77-75 by the 14th seeded Catamounts.

It was a game which found UMass unable to stop Vermont's then-sophomore center, Gail McWilliam. The 6-2 star scored 25 points and had nine rebounds while forward Karen Green, also a six-footer, came up with 18 points and nine caroms. Another Vermont nemesis, Chris Comeau, threw in 15 points to help out the attack.

The Minutewomen, who were unable to overcome a seven-point deficit with three minutes remaining, were paced by Nancy O'Neil's 18 points and 12 rebounds, 16 apiece from Jo Balletta and Chris Basile, and Lu-Ann Fletcher's 11.

According to reports, Vermont was very well-prepared for the contest as it was able to handle UMass' press with relative ease.

For the Minutewomen tomorrow, though, the objectives are clear to Ozdarski.

"We have to improve upon what happened to us in the Maine game," she said. "In practice, we've been working on eliminating turnovers, blocking out, and stopping ourselves from committing foolish fouls."

Ozdarski added that her team will have to shoot better than last week's 34 per cent mark in order to be effective. Incidentally, UMass also gave the ball away 24 times in its opening-game 58-56 loss while being out-rebounded, 40-34.

The Minutewomen will need all that they can muster tomorrow, as the Catamounts have a big height advantage. In addition to the 6-2 McWilliam, their two starting forwards also stand at least six-feet.

To combat this obvious disadvantage, Ozdarski plans on using a newly-designed full-court press during the tilt, while also sticking with her usual man-to-man defense.

"Because of their height advantage, we're going to block out and start our running game from the defensive board," the coach revealed.

Tentatively, Ozdarski will start the same five players that she went with against Maine. Center Lu-Ann Fletcher, forwards Nancy O'Neil and Chris Basile, and guards Sue Henry and Sue Peters will be on the floor for the opening tip.

"We'll win if we can eliminate the mistakes from our play," Ozdarski said. "We're just hoping to bring our record up to .500."

Icemen host Army tonight

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

The UMass hockey team will try to remain over the .500 mark when it hosts Army in an 8:00 game tonight at Orr Rink.

The Minutemen pucksters are coming off a 10-2 loss to Division II powerhouse Merrimack last Tuesday, and take a 3-2-1 record into the game.

"This game shapes up as a real humdinger," said Minuteman mentor Jack Canniff. "We'll be especially up for this game, since we're at home.

Last year the Minutemen traveled to West Point and defeated the Cadets, 6-2, in a come - from - behind win. They also defeated them the year before in Amherst.

"It was a very physical game last year," added Canniff. "Army is a big physical team. They bang around a lot."

The Cadets were a Division II playoff team last season. They defeated Union College in the opening round before bowing to Merrimack. This year Army was rated fifth in a pre-season Division II poll.

"We had our best recruiting in my 27 years here and we'll make the playoffs," Army coach Jack Riley said earlier this year.

Army's leading scorer from last year, Dave Rost, whose 67 points was second among Division II players, is back, along with brother Tom, who was the Cadet's second leading point getter. Also back are goalie Tom Garver and defenseman Ron Gorzolnik.

Army defeated Bridgewater State earlier this week by the score of 10-4, while the Minutemen will be trying to regroup after the loss to Merrimack.

"We've lost two ball games (the other a 7-0 blanking by St. Anselm's) and we went down heavy both times," said Caniff. "I believe and the kids believe that it's not an indication of how they can play. In both games, penalties contributed to our downfall."

Nick Carney and John Peters are doubtful for the game for UMass. Carney has a back injury and Peters is bothered by a groin pull. Canniff may play Fran Pyco at right wing and move one of the White brothers to center. In the Merrimack game, he had T.J. O'Brien center for the White's.

"For the little ice time Pyco's had, he's come up with a few goals," said Canniff. Pyco played Junior A hockey last year for the Springfield Olympics, the same team goalie Doug Janik played for before joining UMass.

BLUELINE BANTER: Norwich, a team which lost 9-2 to UMass this year, beat St. Anselm's 5-3 the other day. St. Anselm's beat UMass, 7-0, so figure it out ... The Minutemen have one more game before they break for intersession. That one is at home next Tuesday against UConn. After that they were idle until January 22, when they face Boston State.

the spirit of Christmas

The spirit of Christmas has many manifestations . . . it can be the giving of a beautiful diamond, or the gift of a hand-made potholder.

It can be the glow of a fireside, welcoming guests to a home for the holidays.

It can be the delight on a child's face as the newly-decorated tree is lighted for the first time.

The Christmas spirit can be the long hours spent by choir members, rehearsing for that special holiday service.

It can be a wreath upon the door, greeting passers-by and visitors.

It can be the careful counting out of pennies at the dime store by a youngster for that special gift.

It can be a mother's loving preparation of fruit cake and cookies for the coming holidays.

Tree farms produce a 'Perfect' Christmas tree

Christmas expectations always include a "perfect" tree stately, well-shaped, full-branched, fragrant. And, we imagine it will have grown to perfection deep in a quiet forest. Not so, say forestry experts.

The ideal Christmas tree seldom, if ever, exists in nature, according to the American Forest Institute. Virtually all the 35 million evergreens used annually in American homes are raised and carefully groomed for appropriate appearance on special Christmas tree plantations.

Five favorites

There are about 40 varieties of Christmas evergreens, says AFI. But, five or six account for almost three-quarters of the commercially-raised species.

Perennial favorites are: Balsam fir (fragrant, stays longer); Douglas fir (elegant, with ornamental needles); Scotch pine (full branches, clustering needles); red pine (graceful branches with turned-up tips); and blue spruce (symmetrical, with silver-blue color).

Grown on farms

The trees are grown on some 450,000 acres of tree farms in almost every state. It takes about six to 12 years to raise a Christmas tree, and in that time a lot of work goes into the grooming process.

Foresters work almost like cosmeticians to correct esthetic faults. They may brace the tree trunk to eliminate kinks, shear branches to prevent uneven development, and prune them to encourage thicker growth. The trees are also assured just the right amount of sunlight and moisture, and protected against insects, disease, frost or unseasonable warmth.

Suggestions on care

All this care is calculated to bring an attractive Christmas tree to market. If you want to keep it that way through the holidays, AFI offers these suggestions:

Fresh tree

– Be sure the tree is fresh when you buy it. Needles should not break when gently bent. The bottom of the stump should be wet and sticky with sap. Lift the tree a few inches off the ground, then bring it down sharply on the stump end. If substantial numbers of needles drop off, the tree is too dry.

Plenty of water

– When you get the tree home, make a fresh diagonal cut in the stump end to allow greater absorption of water. Be sure water in the tree stand remains above the cut. Place the tree away from all heat sources: radiator, ducts, even the T.V.

Safety checks

– Keep safety in mind. Be sure there are no exposed wires or frayed insulation on the light stands, and no cracked or broken light sockets. After Christmas, you may want to saw the trunk into fragment firewood. But, never burn a bundle of branches in the fireplace. Instead, use the tree limbs and needles for mulch to help your springtime garden grow.

If you're ecologically-minded, says AFI, remember that Christmas evergreens use only solar energy to grow. But manufacturing artificial trees from plastic or aluminum requires use of oil and electricity.

Tree decorations... a family project

Of the many holidays Americans observe, Christmas is the most family-oriented. And the joyful task of decorating the Christmas tree is one that everyone enjoys especially when each one can make a personal contribution.

From simple paper chains which the youngest member of the family can make to the more intricate ornaments, hand-made decorations add a special mood to your tree that are a true reflection of your family and the holiday's celebration.

To get your imagination going, here are several suggestions from designers at the American Greetings Corp. for easy to make ornaments.

Personalize ornaments by using photos of your family and friends. Start with a styrofoam ball. Cut out the portion of the picture you plan to use. Since torn edges fit the ball better, tear ragged edges around the photo before gluing to ball. Cover the rest of the ornament with torn bits of tissue, foil or colorful wrapping paper. Brush with clear plastic to coat the decoration.

Trim with velvet ribbon, chubby yarns or gold braid and bows. Attach a loop for the hanger with a straight pin, imbedded below the surface of the ball.

You might want to vary these ornaments with scenes from Christmas cards or holiday wrapping paper.

Another attractive decoration is a cone ball. You can use one color, several colors, patterned papers or two tones of paper glued together to give a multi-color effect.

To make this ornament, cut out about 16 circles. Cut them in half. Using the straight edge as the base, form a cone. Secure the ends with double-faced tape or glue. Take a piece of string and make a knot in one end. Draw the string through the center of one cone to form the hanger.

Complete the rest of the cones and with glue or double-faced tape join them, row upon row, until a layered ball is formed.

Hang the ornament as is or add sparkle by covering the edges lightly with white glue and dipping into glitter.

The size of the circles will determine the size of your ornaments. Mix colors, sizes and patterns for a colorful look for your tree.

You might also want to combine the balls with other ornaments shaped like candy canes, angels, snowflakes, candles, partridges or other birds, poinsettias or even your own pets.

Cut the desired shapes from cardboard, outline the shapes with ribbons and yarns. Add detailing with bits of colorful wrapping papers, glitter or sequins.

Add a hanger and place on the tree. Mix with strings of popcorn, cranberries, paper chains or tinsel.

You can probably think of additional variations of these basic ornaments, involve the whole family in the tree trimming and create a tree that will be a truly unique family expression for this year's Christmas observance.

Christmas in Times Gone By

Time was when Christmas meant sitting before a crackling fire, as the beautiful story of the Nativity was read from the family bible. Perhaps corn would be popped by the youngsters, to be strung with cranberries and wound around the Christmas tree.

Most likely the tree itself would have been chopped down by Dad and the youngsters, then brought home, in a wheelbarrow or sled with much excitement and anticipation.

And of course, the children's stockings would be "hung by the chimney with care."

The sound of sleigh bells might have been heard outside, as carolers arrived in a horse-drawn sleigh, with shouts of "Merry Christmas" and peals of laughter. Then, as the family clustered about the living room window, the merry group would offer favorite carols like "Deck the Halls" and "Silent Night." All would be invited in for a cup of hot chocolate and some of Mother's home-baked cookies. Then the carolers would once again pile into their sleigh and off they would go, sleigh bells jingling.

Tender loving care for thriving poinsettas

Do you know the origin of the lovely plant we have come to identify with Christmas? These colorful plants were first introduced to America in 1825, by Joel Poinsett, then serving as our Ambassador to Mexico, who brought some 16 plants back to his South Carolina greenhouse. He gave them to friends and botanists with greenhouses who nurtured them carefully.

Poinsettias moved out of doors in the early 1900's when a Swiss horticulturist, Albert Ecke, started to raise them in California for local holiday selling. Now we have come to enjoy poinsettias, not only at the Christmas holiday, but all the year round as well. The most popular is the vivid red, but there are white, pink and marbled flowers as handsome and radiant.

Poinsettias need specific care if they are to flourish, but that care is not really complicated. They are happiest kept at room temperature, near a window, in full daylight, but out of drafts. Water when the top soil feels dry to your touch, keeping the soil moist but not wet.

If you decide to move your poinsettia outdoors for the summer, it will need cutting back to help it retain its shape. To encourage a shorter, fuller plant cut it back between the middle of July and the beginning of August, and repot in a pot one or two sizes larger than the original, and bring indoors again about Labor Day.

Poinsettias are photo-period sensitive plants that flower in response to the length of the day. Ten hours of daylight and fourteen hours of darkness will start flowers on their way, but the least glimmer of light during the dark hours will abort any flowering.

Let's All Sing "Jingle Bells!"

Dashing thru the snow
In a one-horse open sleigh,
O'er the fields we go,
Laughing all the way.
Bells on bob-tail ring,
Making spirits bright.
What fun it is to ride and sing
A sleighing song tonight!

Jingle bells, jingle bells,
Jingle all the way!
Oh, what fun it is to ride
In a one-horse open sleigh!
Jingle bells, jingle bells,
Jingle all the way!
Oh, what fun it is to ride
In a one-horse open sleigh!

A day or two ago
I thought I'd take a ride
And soon Miss Fannie
Bright
Was seated by my side
The horse was lean and lank,
Misfortune seem'd his lot,
He got into a drifted bank,
And we, we got up-sot.

Jingle bells, jingle bells,
Jingle all the way!
Oh, what fun it is to ride
In a one-horse open sleigh!
Jingle bells, jingle bells,
Jingle all the way!
Oh, what fun it is to ride
In a one-horse open sleigh!

Now the ground is white
Go it while you're young
Take the girls tonight
And sing this sleighing song.
Just get a bob-tailed bay
Two-forty for his speed
Then hitch him to an open sleigh,
And crack, you'll take the lead!

Jingle bells, jingle bells,
Jingle all the way!
Oh, what fun it is to ride
In a one-horse open sleigh!

A Christmas made richer by the legends and customs, both religious and secular, of all the peoples of the world, has become a beautiful heritage from the past.

The tree as a symbol of Christmas comes to us from Germany where it is said that Martin Luther first cut a fir tree to bring into his home. But the association of trees at Christmas began in the tenth century. A legend recounts the night that Christ was born wherein all the trees in all the forests, even those in frozen countries, blossomed and bore fruit.

GIFT GIVING MADE EASY

COLLEGIAN CHRISTMAS SHOPPING GUIDE

Santa Has Many Parallels in Other Parts of the World

Christmas to American children conjures up visions of Santa in his red suit, with his sack full of gifts, stuffing stockings merrily on Christmas Eve, while reindeer prance upon the roof.

But in Italy, youngsters eagerly await the arrival of an old woman, called la Befana. Because she was told by the shepherds about the birth of Jesus, legend says, but delayed in following the Christmas star, she is doomed to search ever after for the Holy Child. She leaves gifts at each home, as that might be where the Christ Child is staying.

In Holland, the gift-giver is Sante Klaas, who fills shoes either with sweets and presents or with birch-rods.

The Christ-Child brings gifts to children in Germany, as a messenger for the new-born Infant Jesus. This role is usually enacted by a female member of the family, or a window is left open and youngsters are told that the Christ Child has just left.

The Christ Child is also awaited in Switzerland, but there the representative of the Infant Jesus is drawn through the streets in a sleigh, by small deer.

Swedish youngsters look forward to the gifts brought by Jultomten, a somewhat gnomish figure. However, little elves called Julnissar must be placated with porridge by the young Swedes.

In Spain, little children must wait until the feast of the Epiphany, in January, for their gifts. These are brought by the Three Kings during the night, before the feast. The youngsters put out shoes on balconies or window-sills, and fill them with straw or barley for the camels of the Three Kings. The Kings show their appreciation by leaving gifts in return.

In Syria, the camel that carried one of the Wise Men, brings gifts to children on New Year's Day. The reason for this, so the legend goes, is that the camel, being the youngest of the three that bore the Wise Men, was exhausted by the journey to find the Christ Child. The Holy Infant then blessed it, making it immortal. Thus it is that in Syria little children set out bowls of water and wheat, before going to bed. The good youngsters find gifts in the morning but the naughty find only a black mark on their wrists.

A Story for the Holiday Season

Wink, Dink, and Blink were having a difference of opinion. As the three youngest and newest angels, they were expected to perform a special musical selection for all the other angels on Christmas Eve and they just couldn't agree on what to play.

They were all ready for their debut: Blink had tuned and re-tuned her little violin, Dink had polished his flute till it sparkled and Wink had practiced her scales backwards and forwards. But they couldn't agree on the music.

Wink, with what Blink considered very poor judgment, proposed that they do "Rudolph the Red-nosed Reindeer."

"Really!" sniffed Blink. She thought nothing short of an excerpt from Handel's Messiah would do for such an important occasion but the others didn't like what they called "long-halo" music.

Dink, of course, wanted to play something rousing like the "Stars and Stripes Forever" but even Wink saw the folly of that.

So, when the great day arrived, they were still in a quandary about the whole thing. "We've simply got to make up our minds," said Blink in exasperation. The others agreed. "Let's sit and think and think and think until we come up with an idea," suggested Dink. So they did. They sat and thought and thought and thought but no one could come up with the right song! . . . Suddenly, Wink jumped up. "I'll be right back!" she called as she flew away. "Now isn't that just like Wink to fly off when we have work to do," said Blink crossly.

But soon Wink was back and with a surprise . . . she had learned a new song. They listened to her in amazement. "Why, that's lovely," said Blink. Dink liked it too, even if it wasn't a march.

They quickly learned the music, and without a minute to spare, for the other angels were already beginning to assemble for the Christmas program.

Blink wanted to ask Wink where she had learned the lovely new song but there wasn't time. Finally, after they had performed for all the cherubim and seraphim and had been congratulated on their beautiful rendition, Blink took Wink aside.

"Where did you learn that song?" she asked. Wink smiled mysteriously and said, "I just happened to remember that nice soprano angel who had mentioned singing at a very special Christmas Eve performance. So I had her teach me the new song!" And off she flew.

Blink had to admit that had been very clever of Wink, as she curled up on her little cloud that night.

First Holiday Greeting Cards

Sending and receiving greetings of the season is one of the most enjoyable of Christmas chores, and we can all thank Victorian England for this charming custom.

To be more specific, we can thank a Victorian gentleman who was too busy during the holiday season of 1843 to send his customary notes to friends, wishing them the best of the season. So it was that Henry Cole asked a friend to design a printed card that he could send to friends in place of the usual handwritten note.

The friend, artist John C. Horsley, illustrated a group of celebrants raising their glasses in a toast, flanked by illustrations of others feeding the poor and clothing the needy. The message read, "A merry Christmas and a happy new year to you."

It wasn't long before the printed greeting card appeared in America, designed by one R. J. Pease, a dry goods merchant from New York state, who sent out cards advertising his goods.

However Louis Prang, a lithographer living in Boston during the 1800's is known as the father of the American Christmas card. Charles Dickens is said to have sent Prang a Christmas card received from a friend. Prang printed the card for his family and friends and later began creating his own cards in 1874.

Greeting cards have changed greatly since that first card sent out by Henry Cole, and no doubt that good gentleman would be amazed at the diversity of designs sent through the mails at Christmastime.

His Struggle Continues

Hampshire County Superior Court Judge Paul Tamburello denied "without prejudice" Robert Earl Brown's request for bail pending a new trial. Brown, 23, and a UMass senior, was convicted 14 months ago of the armed robbery of the McDonald's on Route 9 in Hadley. An evidentiary hearing may be held later this month.

Fata Finks on Fellow Faculty

By MICHAEL SIMONS

A UMass romance language teacher is claiming that his department is discriminating against him with its refusal to promote him.

"I believe it can be shown, that people in the department have acted in an underhanded, unprofessional way to deny me promotion to associate professor. They have acted 'Ad Hominem' (against the man) to me," said Dr. Frank J. Fata of the French and Italian Department.

Fata, who was made assistant professor at the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, was tenured at UMass in 1967 only after what he called a "fight".

"I have not been promoted to associate professor because of discrimination in the department. The so-called standards and measures applied to me have not been used for others. People have been promoted to associate and even full professorships with less or equal qualifications.... some even without Ph.D.'s over my protest," Fata claimed.

Fata protests that people in the department of French and Italian and in the University at large have recently been hired and been tenured with full professorship, while year after year they've refused his promotion in the department.

"Some of the criteria that are spoke about specifically in the department of French and Italian and the University for what constitutes proper credentials for an associate professor or a full professor are not in fact followed or followed differently for others.

Jimmy Carter at UMass

By CHRIS BOURNE

"Hi, my name is Jimmy Carter."

Those words have been spoken thousands of times across the country in the past two years by a man from Plains, Ga. But they're also spoken by a man from Stoughton, Mass. UMass sophomore Jimmy Carter.

Jimmy Carter

Carter, whose full name is James Richard Carter, a Journalistic Studies-English major, hopes to go to the University of Alabama next year because he "likes the warm weather".

"I plan to just use my middle name down in Alabama," said Carter, "I can't use it in my home town because there's another Richard Carter."

Carter first heard of the President-elect two or three years ago. "Someone gave me a Jimmy Carter for President button. I thought it was a joke," Carter said.

Asked who he voted for, Carter replied, "I didn't vote for anybody this year. I didn't really like either one of the candidates."

Carter added at the end of the interview: "It's true. I do lust after women."

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif: An unidentified body was found yesterday in the charred penthouse apartment occupied by actor Jack Cassidy after fire swept the four-story building causing $150,000 damage. The victim was so badly burned that it was impossible to determine immediately if it was a man or a woman. Fire truck ladder reaches to the apartment where the body was found.

Actor Cassidy Dead In Fire

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Jack Cassidy, whose entertainment career took him from Broadway musicals to film and television roles, died Sunday when flames and smoke engulfed his penthouse apartment, a coroner's spokesman said.

Cassidy, a handsome Irishman who had starred in dozens of musical comedies, dramas, TV specials and movies, lived alone on the top floor of the four story building in a fashionable section of West Hollywood.

His wallet with credit cards and other identification was found on a dresser of the bedroom. The body was on the floor in the living room beside a couch. The apartment was littered with cigarette butts and friends said there had been a party Saturday night.

Cassidy's car was missing from the garage and for a time it was thought he might have driven away. However, later in the day, a friend, Mike Tasley, returned with the automobile which he had borrowed.

At first, investigators were not certain that the body was Cassidy's but positive identification was made late int he day from dental charts, according to a spokesman for the county coroner's office.

Cause of death was not determined immediately, but the spokesman said there was no evidence that foul play was involved.

Arrest Two Men In Prof's Slaying

BOSTON (AP) — Two young men from Boston's Roxbury section were arrested yesterday on murder charges in the death of a Northeastern University education professor, police reported.

Officers identified the two in custody as Anthony Blalock, 18, and John Hammonds, 28, and said both were arrested at their homes after intense investigation into the case.

Sgt. Joseph Kelly of the police Homicide Division said the two will be arraigned Monday in Roxbury District Court in the death of the professor in a seven-story fall from a building. The fatal fall occurred early Saturday morning.

Detectives said the body of Associate Prof. F. Andre Favat, 38, was found nude, except for black socks, with his hands tied behind his back. The fatal fall occurred early Saturday morning.

Investigators said indications are Favat was lured to the building, stripped and robbed by several persons and stabbed several times in the neck and chest before his fatal fall from the rooftop.

Medical Examiner Dr. George W. Curtis said death was the result of injuries sustained in the fall — severe skull fracture, crush chest and a ruptured main artery.

Police said they found a bloodstained mattress in a vacant third floor apartment, plus some clothing.

Northeastern President Kenneth G. Ryder said Favat was one of the most promising faculty members at the school.

He said, "During the past year he had been working on a project to improve methods of faculty research and performance. Prof. Favat had demonstrated leadership beyond Northeastern through his national association, and was nationally known in the field of education. He will be sorely missed."

PLAINS, Ga. (UPI) — "Miss Lillian" Carter says she still can't believe her son will soon be President of the United States.

"It hasn't hit me yet," she said. "I want it to hit me. I never dreamed he would be the President."

But the white-haired, dynamic mother of the President-elect, a celebrity in her own right, also predicted in an interview "he is going to be our greatest president..."

Stores Defy Blue Law Blues

BOSTON (AP) — A broad spectrum of department stores and other outlets opened for business in Massachusetts yesterday despite the state closing laws, and police enforcement varied from one community to the next.

In most cases the stores reported their aisles were jammed with shoppers from the time the doors opened — generally 1 p.m. — until the closing time, usually five hours later.

"The store is wall-towall people," said Ray Woodard, manager of the Quincy Avenue Zayre store in Braintree, adding that most of the shoppers were families including children.

"There were 75 to 100 people waiting when we opened at 1 p.m., said Pittsfield Zayer manager John Dudzik, "more than I've seen for any sale day... It's a family crowd like you don't get during the week."

In Western Massachusetts, police in Springfield, West Springfield, Agawam and Greenfield had announced Saturday they would not enforce the Sunday sales ban, in line with a request by state Supreme Court Justice Herbert P. Wilkins.

Police in Holyoke and Chicopee joined Sunday in the hands-off policy, and stores in all six communities opened as announced, generally to abundant numbers of shoppers.

However, The Morning Union of Springfield reported a survey of 20 western Massachusetts police departments indicated at least nine made plans for prosecutions and some others reported they would decide later.

No Bail for Brown

By SPENCER VIBBERT

UMass student Robert Earl Brown was denied bail pending new trial Friday by Judge Paul Tamburello in Hampshire County Superior Court.

The 23-year-old black senior, convicted 14 months ago of the armed robbery of the Hadley MacDonald's, is currently attending classes at UMass on a work and study release program from the Hampshire County House of Correction.

While Judge Tamburello denied "without prejudice" Brown's request for bail he held out hope for an evidentiary hearing later this month, a hearing requested by Brown's attorney's in their efforts to get their client a new trial.

In a strong attack Brown's attorney, David Rosenberg of Cambridge, told the Court his client's former counsel, Jerome Farrell of Northampton "did nothing in preparation" for Brown's trial in October of 1975. "We have a prima facie case of ineffective counsel," Rosenberg said, claiming Farrell failed to adquately cross-examine state's witnesses, as well as question the photo-identification process by which eye-witnesses identified Brown in court.

Rosenberg told the Court he had a "further startling fact" by virtue of having contacted by subpoena Mr. Stephen Pratt, now residing on Cape Cod and one of the three eye-witnesses who originally placed Brown at the scene of the crime. According to Rosenberg, in an affidavit submitted to the Court minutes before the hearing, Pratt now says he and the other two eye-witnesses, Deborah Cook and Kathy Clark, actually picked a different face from that of Earl Brown in the original police photo line-up. Rosenberg maintained one of the witnesses actually said, "I don't believe he (Earl Brown) was one of the robbers."

In a related matter, on which the judge said he would not rule until today, Rosenberg and his associate Jeanne Baker asked for transcripts of Brown s first trial (which ended in a hung jury) claiming them necessary as a means of impeaching the credibility of witnesses who testified in the second.

"Mr. Farrell injured Earl Brown's defense when he didn't go after the transcripts of the first trial," said Rosenberg.

At one point the judge quizzed Rosenberg from the bench asking him if he had consulted Jerome Farrell about the case. "Yes, we have your honor," Rosenberg shot back, claiming he had conducted extensive interviews with the former counsel in preparing for the hearing.

For the duration of the two-hour hearing, Rosenberg remained on the offensive, characterizing the District Attorney's office as "hypocritical" in what he saw as its failure to file counter-affidavits to propel its argument that defense motions be denied.

Assistant District Attorney Richard Caplan told the court there was "nothing new of an exculpatory matter" to justify the bail. In regard to charges Rosenberg leveled against Brown's former counsel Caplan said, "a severe injustice has been visited on Mr. Farrell."

Xmas trial?

At the close of the hearing Judge Tamburello told the courtroom he was open to the possibility of an evidentiary hearing, at which time defense could show cause for a new hearing. "I'm willing to come here during my Christmas vacation, if need be," he told the courtroom.

No specific date for a further hearing was given.

Continue Trials of Puffton 17

By FIFI BALL

Friday morning 17 people, who were arrested at Puffton Village for "disturbing the peace", "disorderly persons", and "unlawful assembly", were given continuances until Jan. 7 so probational investigations could be performed on them.

The defendants pleaded "submission to sufficient facts". They were represented by Attorneys David Kaplan, Michelle Leaf, Ellis Landcet, and William Newman speaking for Attorney Thomas Lesser who was absent.

The plea means they agreed there are sufficient facts to conclude they are guilty but their right to trial is not jeopardized.

Kaplan said, "The judge's decision was merely a formality. I don't think anyone has to worry about anything.

"We didn't expect this. We expected to have to pay court costs and to have six to twelve month continuances resulting in dismissals. We have entered into plea bargaining with the prosecuting attorneys," Kaplan said.

Prosecuting Attorney Robert Doyle said he is prepared to give a written recommendation to the judge that the defendants receive six months probation without finding and $50 in court costs.

At the District Court in Northampton, Lt. Clarence R. Babb spoke for Police Chief Donald Maia. He said that on the morning of Dec. 1 the police were "attempting to serve an eviction notice" on Jean Chaill when they encountered 14 people, with their arms linked, barring the entrance to her apartment.

The police officers called the gathering an unlawful assembly and told everyone to disperse.

"The police said that anyone who didn't leave or assist them, media included, could be arrested. Then they arrested us," said one anonymous participant.

"No violence took place. We were arrested, placed in an animal van, and handcuffed. We were then taken to the Northampton jail. There they tightened a couple peoples' handcuffs that were too loose," said the source.

Next they were taken to the Court House for questioning by probation offices. The only things one is required by law to reveal in this situation are names and addresses.

"They told us things like if we didn't answer all the questions we wouldn't get out, and we'd have to go to jail," said a source.

"The woman sitting next to me looked at me after she had been asked a question to see if she had to answer it. I shook my head and Probation Officer Katarba yelled at me saying, 'I was asking her, not you.' I told him her handcuffs were on too tightly. He cut them off. I stood up to have mine cut off too. I had been repeating that they were too tight since the officer put them on as we were arrested. He wouldn't take them off ... my hands were purple ... I didn't have the circulation back in my hands for two days after that," said a source.

Most people remained handcuffed for two hours.

Police Officer Aldrich of the Amherst Police Department said the plastic handcuffs are used only when there are a number of people being arrested at once. To be removed they must be cut off.

Aldrich said that if the handcuffs had been put on too tightly, a person would normally have to tell the officer and "they would be cut off right away".

The probational report will reveal any prior records of the defendants.

"I know for a fact that none of them have records," said Chief Probation Officer William H. Burke. The probation officer customarily submits a report to the Judge including a recommendation of what they think the sentence should be. Burke said this is generally carried out, possibly following discussion initiated by the judge.

Prosecution rests "in limbo" until Jan. 7 when Kaplan assumes a decision will be made.

"It's such a vague statute. Anything that a police officer calls an unlawful assembly becomes an unlawful assembly. It doesn't take into account whether private or public property is involved," said a source.

Sylvanite Kills Self

Kelley G. Carson, 20, a UMass junior, was found dead of a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the head in his Sylvan dorm room about 1 a.m. Saturday by a roommate, according to University police.

Carson, a marketing major from Clarksburg, Mass. (a suburb of North Adams), had been dead in 03B McNamara House for "at least 24 hours", according to a Hampshire County medical examiner.

Sgt. Philip J. Cavanaugh, UMass Department of Public Safety detectives chief, who is investigating the case with Detective Lt. George Powers of the Hampshire County District Attorney's Office, said Saturday that one of Carson's roommates peered through Carson's room window when he became suspicious about Carson's well-being.

The roommate, whom police would not identify because of the confidentiality of the department's investigation, climbed through the window, opened the room door and called police.

Police received the call at 1:13 a.m. Saturday and Cavanaugh said Carson was dead at the scene. The cause of death was determined by Dr. Thomas F. Corriden, a county medical examiner, following an autopsy at Cooley Dickinson Hospital, Northampton.

Corriden said the body was released to a North Adams funeral home director about noon Saturday.

Police said the exact time of death has not been established because no one in the dormitory heard the gunshot.

Carson celebrated his 20th birthday less than two weeks ago.

It is this campus' first suicide since David B. Harpin leapt from the top of the University library in May of 1975.

Cavanaugh praised the efforts of several people Saturday in dealing with the case. "The dean's staff (Dean of Students William F. Field), the Health Services staff, McNamara head of residence (Robin Smith), and the students on Carson's floor were most valuable in assisting the department during the traumatic hours of Saturday morning," he said.

Born in Clarksburg, Carson was the son of George and Alice (Lauzon) Carson. He was a 1974 honors graduate of Drury High School, North Adams. Besides his parents, he leaves two sisters, Mrs. Vanessa Blay of North Adams and Kimberly Carson of Clarksburg, and several aunts, uncles, and cousins.

Funeral services will be held at 11 a.m. Tuesday from Simmons Funeral Home, North Adams. Calling hours at the funeral home are 2 to 4 and 7 to 9 p.m. today.

Memorial contributions may be forwarded in his name to The Santa Fund, care of Simmons Funeral Home.

Carter-Cabinet Nods Coming

PLAINS, Ga. (UPI) — President-elect Jimmy Carter, riding a high tide of national approval, said yesterday he will announce at least two, and possibly three new Cabinet-level appointments this week.

"The Cabinet selection process is going well," Carter said, emphasizing his hope to finish before Christmas assembling the team to run his administration.

Carter issued his assessment of the talent search through a spokesman before a late afternoon flight to Atlanta for two more days of interviews with prospective administration recruits.

Earlier in the day the president-elect attended a men's Bible class and the morning worship service at his hometown Baptist church. Black activist Clennon King waited outside in the rain, refusing to enter because his membership application has not yet been approved.

In his statement Carter said he was "very pleased" with the results of interviews he held last week in Atlanta and Washington with prospective members of the new administration.

"I've also been very happy with the response I've had from the people I've asked to advise me on the possible appointees," he said.

Carter already has named two cabinet-level choices, Budget Director — designate Bert Lance and Secretary of State-designate Cyrus Vance. Press Director Rex Granum said no time or place had been selected for the next appointment announcements, but he said they would not be made until after Monday.

Oil Chiefs Begin PowWow

DOHA, Qatar (UPI) — Economists of the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries yesterday began a three-day meeting in preparation for the summit conference later this week to consider the first oil price increase in a year.

OPEC delegates gathered in the tightly guarded Gulf Hotel, overlooking oil tankers swinging at their anchors in the blue waters of the Persian Gulf.

Guards patroled the hotel grounds to prevent a repetition of the kidnapping of OPEC ministers by guerrillas at Vienna last year. Machine guns were set up behind the hotel.

As a prelude to the full OPEC meeting, the organization's Economy Commission was preparing for the summit by drawing up fresh price recommendations for consideration by their ministers.

A likely increase of 10 per cent in the price of petroleum — enough to add $12 billion to the industrial world's annual fuel bill — has been forecast by many economy experts.

This would be a compromise between moderate increase proposed by Gulf Arab states with large oil surpluses and the 15 per cent more asked by heavily populated countries, including Iran, which have pinned ambitious development programs to oil earnings.

For whom do the Christmas bells toll?

BILL SUNDSTROM

For whom do the Christmas bells toll? They toll for thee.

Christmastime is a paradox. In the final analysis your entire semester may well boil down to two nail-bitten burnt-out hours. Secret Santa, giftgiving and tree-decorating, worship, socializing, learning — all are forgotten in the last-minute cramming, speeding, all-nighting. A shortage of nerve, an overabundance of nerves — high on caffein, low on sleep.

It is some weird mutation of the Protestant ethic that drives us to take our exams — soul salvation via ritualized masochism, or some such sociological rot — or do we all see some relevance in spitting back reconstituted ideas — or are well all like sheep and do it because everyone else does it?

Is this time of year the most Christian, or the least? Brotherhood or fratricide? Do we concentrate more on the message of the son of God or on recalling useless facts in the hopes of a wealthier (better) future? Which is the myth, or are they both? At what other time of year can such conniving merchants sell such hazardous toys to such well-meaning parents of such innocent children at such lucrative profits? For whom do the Christmas bells toll?

If you are lonely and depressed during the other seasons, you will be especially so now. That is why more suicides take place at or near Christmas than any other time of year. Death never hits us harder than it does at Christmas. We must work unusually hard to block the image of people starving to death on Christmas day — even Christian people, even in the "United" States.

We live in a world dominated by people without compassion. Their excuse is that they have replaced sympathy and charity with rationality. But just how rational is their rationality, and is rationality indeed the answer? We must learn to rule ourselves with compassion and rationality. We cannot expect fiscal policy to fully reform a world where babies are eaten by German shepherds.

Christmas is a time of love. Were it not, there would be no Globe Santa, UNICEF drives, gift-giving, or mistletoe. I am no Christian, and I don't believe there is a God of any sort, but I don't need either to believe in Christmas. Once you allow yourself to forget the message of Christmas, to forget your humanity, you will do fine on your exams, and you will lose all your friends. Perhaps this is as it is supposed to be. For whom do the Christmas bells toll? They toll for thee. End of sermon.

Merry Christmas.

Bill Sundstrom is Assistant Executive Editor of the Collegian.

Hey America

KEVIN KNOBLOCH

Hey America, would you please leave me alone?

I am an American Indian, native to this land you call your own. Stop taking my culture and my religion and substituting your own. Stop taking my land and trying to absorb me into your white society, something I refuse to do. Stop taking my children into your middle class homes. Stop invading my land with guns and soldiers and killing our leaders. Stop invading my race.

Hey America, would you please leave me alone?

I am an American Black. Would you please stop your racist oppression. Stop teaching your young that I am a negative people, devoid of having human compassion. Stop forcing me to try and make it in your world using your standards of success. Recognize another culture than your own, my culture. Stop invading my mind.

Hey America, would you please leave me alone?

I am a Puerto Rican living on my island. Would you please take your hotels and casinos and tourists and leave our island intact. Take your corporations and sweatshops and remove them from our land. Stop exploiting our resources and keep your capitalism at home. Stop trying to make our island and its people a part of you. We don't want your citizenship. We want ours. We don't want to be your possession. Stop invading our soveriegnty.

Hey America, would you please leave me alone?

I am an Israeli Jew. Would you please leave your tanks, morters, and advisors on the other side of the ocean? Stop arming my government with weapons of war and destruction. We want to live and you tell us that our life is through death, through the buildup and stockpiling of deadly arms. While you are at it, stop arming our enemies. Leave them alone. Stop pitting us against each other. Stop invading my peace.

I am a middle-class anglo-saxon run of the mill college student. Would you please stop screwing me up? You lied to me about our history and you are still lying today. You made me think we were pure and ideal and the world is full of foreign aggressors, and now I learn that there is no greater aggressor than myself. Let me learn the truth that you so desperately try to keep from me and let me shake off the prejudices and hatred that you have taught me so that you could more easily manipulate my mind. Stop making me compromise my education and my future by devoting my college years to aiming for employment and devoting my life to labor so that I might survive. Stop invading my education.

Hey America, would you please leave me alone?

I am America. I am racism, sexism, hatred, jealousy, destruction, selfishness, exploitation and manipulation.

I am not a dream. I am not the promised land of opportunity.

I am a troubled country that will never shed its heavy burdens until my people start believing in my problems, and understanding what it means to grow up an alien to the society you were born into or going to sleep at night ready to die from your struggles. America. Stop invading and leave me alone.

Graduate student on the stand

NANCY FOLBRE

Editor's note: The Graduate Student Employees Union is now participating in hearings before the State Labor Relations Commission in order to win the right to hold an election (similar to the recent faculty election), to determine whether graduate student employees may hold an election to vote for a formal collective bargaining agent. The University is contesting their right to an election on the grounds that they are not really employees: Their work is considered "superfluous" to the running of the University. The following guest column describes a graduate student's experience taking the stand at these hearings.

In the courtroom, waiting for it to begin. Arthur Menard, the university lawyer, is late. Suddenly he appears, flourishing a cigar. I can't help it. He looks like a capitalist in a 1930's cartoon: a slight paunch, blue pin-stripe suit, polkadotted tie. He exudes confidence.

The first issue, before I take the stand, is whether the hearing officer will quash a subpoena requiring Chancellor Bromery to testify. Our counsel argues that he has made certain statements concerning the nature of graduate student employment, and we require his testimony. The university lawyer argues that his testimony would be "redundant." In his place, they offer Provost Puryear, who came on the job in September. We need Bromery's testimony, not an inexperienced newcomer's. But the hearing officer says, "I don't like to haul in Chancellors or Governors where its not necessary." University one, Grad Student employees zero.

The arguments continue. An older woman sits behind the bench. Her concentrated stare fixes on an imaginary spot in front of the witness stand. She types every word spoken on a silent typewriter. From her fingers come mountains of transcript which the Labor Relations Commission will eventually read. And, then, this Spring, they will come to their decision: Does the GSEU have the right to hold an election or not?

I take the stand. I sit down, then rise to take an oath. In response to questions from Dave Rockwell I describe my work, my pay, and general hiring policies in the Economics department.

Nesta takes the stand. She seems very composed, very articulate. She moves smoothly through her questions. Our other lawyer, Emily, shows her a document. It's an excerpt from our newsletter, Why a Union, that explains our purpose in organizing. Nesta verifies it.

Menard takes over.

"Did you consult with counsel in writing this document?"

Nesta falters. She had no contact with the lawyers in November, but someone else could have. She's not sure. To play it safe, "I don't know."

In a friendly voice, Menard addresses the hearing officer. "This document is clearly self serving. It was written during the course of hearings and counsel might have been consulted."

Emily and David reply: "Surely you don't intend to exclude from evidence all the positions the Union has taken since the hearings began..."

"Off the record," the hearing officer murmurs, and the court reporter relaxes and stops work. He explains why he agrees with Menard." Union officers could have learned what the important legal issues were, and changed their goals to better fit the legal case. Before, they expressed an interest in general issues concerning their own education — issues quite separate from those concerning their employment. Now that they know this might prejudice their case, they are less likely to be open about their real goals. "What we're looking for," he says, is "that pure distillate unsullied by any wisdom of the ways of the world." Document will not be admitted. University three, grad student employees zero.

Driving home from Boston alone, the temperature's down to fifteen. My heater doesn't work, and the cold penetrates my gloves, my scarf, my two sweaters and coat. I'm thinking about what a new VW would cost, and about my slim paycheck. I'm bored. What is there to think about on Route 2? Easy enough, I can mull over what I'm going to teach in my discussion sections on Monday. But it's too cold to think. I shouldn't get bummed out. We can still win. But what we need is more, not less, wisdom of the ways of the world.

Free Santa

St. Nick being held in Whitmore?

MARTHA NEWCOMB

If you haven't heard it yet, the rumor is that Santa is living in Whitmore.

This reporter didn't question so much whether or not Santa is in Whitmore; (because anything is possible in that building), but whether he is there by his own free will.

Utilizing the Holmesian method of investigation, the research began. Evidence was collected and brought back to the lab. A white beard hair was found at an entrance to one of the many tunnels beneath the formidable administration building.

Microscopic analysis determined that the elderly gentleman that had formerly been connected to this hair, had recently made physical contact with a particular type of reindeer; found only in the extreme arctic regions. But, the most important piece of information found through this same analysis was that there was evidence of a glue-like substance — similar to that on masking or adhesive tape.

Deduction: An elderly gentleman from the arctic region, had been bound with mouth taped shut and brought through one of the tunnels to a place unknown. Second deduction: probably kidnap.

Through seduction and deception, this reporter found a student worker in the afore mentioned office that was willing to talk. The taped conversation proves beyond a doubt, that Santa was indeed kidnapped by the Financial Aid Office, using scholarship funds to accomplish the deed. The motive for this heinious crime was to capture the great-gift-giver and use him for purposes of aid allowances.

This reporter requests that you join with me in the quest to free Santa from the clutches of the Financial Aid Office and to demand that we know the truth about the disappearance of the aid funds. Time is of the essence, he must be freed before next semester, not to mention Christmas. Free Santa, Free Santa, Free Santa.

Age of incompetence?

BILL RIORDAN

Besides the weather, there is one difference between the ending of a fall semester and a spring semester. Most people at this time still have at least one semester to go before the Big Step. But in the spring semester a new species of student walks the campus: the 2nd semester senior. One of the biggest surprises I've encountered in my three years here is "graduate gloom". That's the state of a certain (hopefully small) percentage of students about to graduate who aren't exactly ecstatic about leaving the womb. It is a sometimes sad farewell to a loved one.

There is another, perhaps sadder, farewell most of us will have to face: retirement. That is a long way off now but remember when college was a long way off? At Thanksgiving dinner two weeks ago my uncle was very quiet. He is 64 years and 10 months old. That means that in February he must leave his job for good. He can't stay even if he wants to and he wants to very much. The rules say he is through at sixty-five so he'll be through.

There is another man I know of about to celebrate his 65th birthday. His name is Thomas P. O'Neil, and he just became Speaker of the House of Representatives, one of the most powerful positions in the government. His judgement will have considerable impact on the lives of many people, so his thinking had better be lucid. And if it weren't would he realize it? Who would have the courage to say 'Tip, you're too old, it's time to quit?' A person is forced to retire (not eligible to) at age 65 because that is when he is judged incompetent, useless, and senile.

At the time of his death, Mao Tse-Tung was ruler of one fourth of mankind. He was 84. Leonid Breznev is 71. Emperor Hirohito of Japan has been an emperor for fifty years. He is 75. If it's true that sixty-five is the age at which one becomes incompetent, then the world is being run by incompetent people. Maybe it is true.

THE QUESTION

Do you feel that you can get a quality education at UMass?

THE ANSWERS

Jeff Drake, second semester sophomore:

"I feel that the quality of education at UMass is great. You can find teachers that are really great and ones that are really poor. I feel that this can be solved through publicizing the teacher evaluation forms that we filled out last week. We can help the quality of the education by getting rid of the poor students here."

Dianne Quimbly, junior and transfer student:

"I have gotten better education elsewhere However, I feel that if the student is motivated here he can get a good education. It is lacking a bit in the personalness of a smaller school. However, this is a large university."

Bud Chagnon, senior and floor counselor in Kennedy Lower.

"I think that the education is average here and is competitive with other state schools across the country. It is good enough for my needs and for what I want to do with my life.

Linda Levine, sophomore, out-of-state student:

"I think it is a good school because I have a lot of small classes with maybe eight students per teacher. I don't like the giant lecture halls because they are too impersonal.

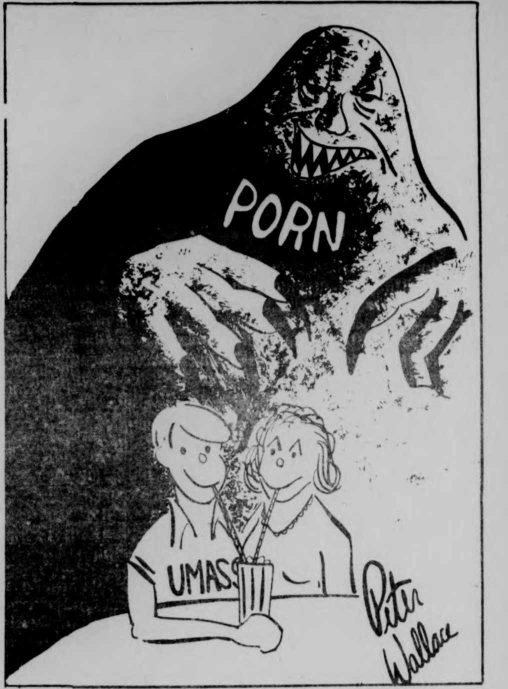
Christopher Shea, freshman:

"I feel that in some departments such as the sciences fantastic education can be gotten: the chemistry department is great. I do feel that because of lack of funds that some of the liberal arts departments are lacking a bit. In general however it is a good education."

Marcia Brooks, sophomore:

This is considered a really good university out of state.

However, being a state school, people tend to put it down quickly.



VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

SIGN-UP UNFAIR

I am angered by the system of signing up for a crafts table in the campus center that ignores the fact that students have classes to attend.

Thursdays begin early for craft vendors; starting in the wee hours of the morn (4 or 5 a.m.) people begin to wait to sign the official pre-sign up list at 8:00 a.m. The real sign up for tables begins at 9:00 and lasts for a couple of hours. If one somehow manages to get their name on a pre-sign up list as No. 17, they are the 17th person in their priority group to choose table spaces for the 3 days of the following week. These turns come up somewhere between 9 and 11 on Thursday morning and no allowance is made for students who must go to a class at this particular time; even if they were there hours before. If you leave, you miss your turn. No substitute person is allowed to sign nor any other provisions made.

Why can't some fair alternative be devised for those of us with classes at this time? Two answers I have received are: that since the campus center allows us to come in and use its space, sign up must be during the hours it pays a staff person to oversee this procedure (M-F, 8-4). So regardless of the fee paid to the campus center by all students, we are merely beneficiaries of the goodwill of the campus center complex. The most infuriating answer of all that I received was: "As long as the majority are satisfied we're not going to change the system."

While standing in line one morn, I mentioned my complaint to the folks around me. Someone responded, "Yeah, we're in the same boat".

We should be able to come up with an equitable solution for all involved i.e. allowing another to choose our spaces; having a rotating system of signing up at different times at least every other week, etc.

Maybe I'm not the majority, but a petition being circulated proves that I'm not the only one. And even if I were, I'd still work for alternatives that satisfy as many people as possible.

QUESTIONS

We are an independent group of students raising questions about the issues, as we see them, surrounding Baroque Enterprises and its affiliates.

Some questions that come to mind ---

1. What is the purpose of Baroque Enterprises?

It appears to us that Baroque Enterprises is a profiteering organization which exists solely for the purpose of making money from the students.

2. Isn't the membership of Baroque Enterprises the same as that of its affiliates?

It appears to us that the membership of Baroque Enterprises is indeed the same as that of Freaks, Good Guys, et al.

3. What is the reason behind Baroque Enterprises establishing numerous duplicate groups?

It appears to us that the reason for these duplicate groups is to acquire additional film dates to maximize profit.

4. Who directly benefits from these profits?

It appears to us that Sparks and the other salaried members are the only people who benefit from these profits.

5. Does Albert Sparks really have the students' best interest at heart?

NO!

The answers presented are the convictions of a concerned group of students who are P.I.S.S.E.D.!

We solicit any reaction to these questions. What are your answers, Mr. Sparks?

Ann Blanders

Singin' D blues

Dear Ann: I have always thought of myself as a person that could handle my own problems, but I've come across one that has me in a quandry. I am getting a "D" in biology. I'm doing okay with the rest of my life; even though my fiancee just told me he's gay, my parent's house just burned down, my scholarship was cancelled, and my roommate left me with a $300 phone bill. All these things I can deal with, it's the "D" that's getting me down. I worked so hard in that class. I just don't think that it is fair that my teacher should give me a low mark just because I wouldn't get drunk after three pitchers of beer. Can I help it if I can hold my liquor? I just don't know what to do, my cum means a lot to me and a "D" might just do me in. HELP!

Quandry

Dear Q: I'm sorry, but I'm afraid I don't have much sympathy for you. Couldn't you have faked that you were drunk for the sake of a better grade? If I remember my college days correctly, it was common practice to get "A's" this way. But, all is not lost, dear, you still have some time left in the semester to rectify the situation. Since you've waited until this late date, you'll probably have to do more than get drunk, but use your imagination, and I'm sure everything will come out allright. Good luck on your cum!

Dear Ann: I have a problem that I can't take to my Peer Sex Counselor. The reason that I can't take it to him is because my problem "is" my Peer Sex Counselor, and also my boyfriend. A lot of girls have been coming to him with their sexual problems and he "shows" them how to remedy their situations. All the girls say that he is a GREAT counselor and I'm proud of him for that, but I'm afraid that I'm starting to get jealous. Also I'm worried because he's so tired all the time. I tried to get him to see a doctor, but he insists that he's never felt better. What should I do?

Jealous

Dear J: I can't see why in the world you should be jealous.

CONFIDENTIAL

Dear S: This is serious. I can't understand how such a pervert could have passed the entrance board to your college to begin with. My advice is that you shouldn't be afraid of dying and go straight to the campus police with the information you've uncovered. It is refreshing to hear that there are still some students of moral character in existence.

Scrooge Lives!

LOS GATOS, Calif. (AP) — It's the time of year when Russ Bernhardt puts on his black stovepipe hat, ill-fitting fur coat and miserly sneer. Then he storms through festive crowds, croaking, "Christmas, humbug: Get away! I want none of your caroling!"

And once attention is drawn, this unmistakably nasty apparition tells the tale that has haunted him for 34 Christmases past and has long outlived its author, Charles Dickens.

The 51-year-old actor figures he has reached about 3 million people in grumping and grimacing through 1,500 performances of his adaptation of "A Christmas Carol."

"With 35 years as Scrooge, I'm the longest running one-man show in the world, but I'm only good between Thanksgiving and Christmas."

We're No Fuels

D.C. says, No Uranium for India

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Ford administration is withholding an overdue shipment of uranium until India agrees to return its entire stockpile of spent nuclear fuel.

American and Indian experts, who disclosed this, estimate 200 metric tons of the spent fuel has piled up in India since 1971 because the United States, lacking adequate storage facilities, has failed to buy it back. The U.S. government is still searching possible waste-burial sites in states such as Illinois, Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin.

An Indian request to retain a small quantity of spent fuel for research and experimental purposes has been flatly refused by the U.S. government, the informats reported.

Sources explained the toughened American position emerged during the election campaign when President Ford was developing a new and more forceful policy to curb the spread of nuclear weapons.

According to informants, India Prime Minister Indira Gandhi has been irked by the Americans on at least Two counts:

—First, India built a $100-million reprocessing plant next door to the Tarapur power station

—Second, the United States, under 1963 and 1966 nuclear cooperation agreements with India, is held to be contractually bound to keep the Tarapur civil atomic power center supplied with non-weapons-grade uranium ore.

Aquamen Easily Defeat Terriers

By MARK MARCHAND

Swimming their last meet before the intersession break, the Minutemen swimmers easily crushed the Terriers from Boston University on Friday night at Boyden pool. UMass never really expected to have any trouble and this was well evidenced by the 81-29 margin that the Minutemen ran up on their way to their second consecutive win to bring their record to 2-1.

Leading the way for the Minutemen were Ben Crooker, Dave Boucher, Tom Bondaruk, Fred Lombardi, diver Jim Antonino and Russ Yarworth. Crooker, a senior co-captain took firsts in the 1,000-yard freestyle (11:10.1), the 200-yard butterfly (2:13.0), and in the 500-yard freestyle (5:21.7). Tom Bondaruk, an exciting newcomer, turned in an excellent night as he notched a win in the 200-yard freestyle (2:02.0) and was a member of the winning 400-yard freestyle relay team (3:48.6).

Diver Jim Antonino also had a good night as he garnered first place in both of the diving events as he continues to look better as the season progresses. Leading the way in the breastroke department was Dave Boucher who took first in the 200-yard breaststroke event (2:23) and placed first in a close 200-yard individual medley race which saw Boucher edge out his opponent by .1 seconds (2:14.7).

Ailing with a sore shoulder, junior Russ Yarworth managed to win the 200-yard backstroke event (2:20.8) and was a member of the winning 400-yard medley relay team (4:09.4) which also included Harry Fulford, Bill Bradley, and Steve Rizzo. Yarworth is well on his way to an excellent season and didn't appear to be too handicapped by his shoulder. Finally, swimming in the 50-yard freestyle, Fred Lombardi easily outdistanced the pack with a speedy time of 24.0 sec.

Grapplers Drop Two Out Of Three Matches

By HEIDI BERENSON

The UMass wrestling team dropped two out of three matches this past weekend participating in a quadrangular match that was held at Cortland State in Cortland New York.

The grapplers met Potsdam State for their first match of the tournament. UMass beat them, by a score of 22-16. The teams were tied when heavyweight Dennis Fenton went up to wrestle and pinned his opponent 4:29.

Incidentally, Potsdam is the team that head coach, Dave Amato formerly coached.

"It felt good to beat them," said Amato in reference to the Potsdam match.

"I thought we looked good as a team," commented Amato.

Binghamton State nipped the Minutemen 21-20 in what Amato termed, a "rooked" match. "The referee was horrible," he continued, "we didn't get one break."

Cortland State choked the matmen 23-14 in the final game of the slate.

The highlights of the match were Heavyweight Fenton's 3 wins, and Larry Otsuka's 3 wins, one of them over Potsdam's former Division 3 All-American.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Monday, December 13 — Born today, you are not one to confine your efforts to your own business. Rather, you make an effort to know what others are involved in, and, perhaps even more important to your sense of self-satisfaction, precisely how well the involvements of others are going. You enjoy being "front and center." You are inclined to feel slighted should others enter upon some activity without informing you of their plans and granting you an opportunity to join them. Nor is your interest always limited to those things for which you are prepared; you are just as eager to enter upon enterprises for which you have little or no training as upon those for which your talents and training suit you.

Because you are interested in everything around you, there is little chance that you will ever become set in your ways. Rather, you will continue to expand your horizons even into old age, and as an "oldster," will earn the admiration and respect of many because of your youthful ways in what you do, what you say, and how you think. You will make an excellent parent, because you will always be able to put yourself in the place of the young and thus be able to understand what they do, how they think and what they feel.

Energetic even beyond your own expectations, you often surprise others by the speed with which you accomplish even difficult chores. You have a reputation for being a "doer."

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Grace is more important that power at this particular time. Whatever you do, do well; otherwise, turn to something else.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — Use words as weapons and you will be able to win your way early in the day. Make sure not to hurt needlessly, however.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Caution is advised in all transactions. Be wary of those who tend to try to be on both sides at once.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Matters of judgment are to be considered early in the day. Don't hesitate to allow children to take part in the proceedings.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Good conditions prevail today — in spite of what might be considered an early morning setback. Set your sights on new goals.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Don't allow another's frustration to have a bearing on your own involvement in activities you particularly enjoy.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Take care not to extend your credit beyond your ability to pay. There is no time like the present for asking for a favor.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — Seek the advice of a good friend. Your standing in the community may well be at stake at the present time.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — This is no day for speculation where financial matters are concerned. A gentleman's bet is the most you should go for now.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — The detrimental aspects of the situation presently at hand on the employment scene may cause you to seek new and greener fields.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Take your time coming to grips with present problems on the home front. If you move too quickly, you may miss the best solution.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Take care not to postpone important plans. Otherwise, you may not be able to take advantage of certain opportunities for gain.

No Surprises in Classic?

By BOB HIGGINS

BOSTON — If you were predicting the outcome of the Colonial Classic last week, you would have planned it just this way.

You would have picked Holy Cross to beat UMass, and Providence over Boston College. UMass would win the consolation game, and Holy Cross would out-battle Providence for the championship.

And that's the way it came out — sort of. But if you just remember that much about it, you'll be forgetting an awful lot of the excitement seen at Boston Garden this weekend.

Holy Cross did win the championship, and certainly looked impressive in doing so. But both UMass and Providence had the chance to beat the Crusaders and win the tournament, only to both suffer heartbreak at the end.

The Minutemen fell victim to the Crusaders Saturday night, losing 92-85 in overtime after watching a 13-point second-half lead get wiped away. Holy Cross came right back yesterday and nipped Providence 67-65 on a short bank shot at the buzzer for the title.

UMass, with Jim Town amassing 27 rebounds, walked all over BC in the consolation game yesterday to take third-place honors, but it was of very little consolation. One controversial referee's call, one less mistake here or there, one more converted foul shot, and the Minutemen could have beaten HC and gone to the championship game. Just one more chance.

"We can spend all of our tomorrows talking about yesterday," said UMass coach Jack Leaman. "But that play's over."

That play came with just three seconds left in regulation time and the score tied Saturday night. Derick Claiborne drove to the hoop, went to lay it up, and was apparently hit from behind by Crusader center John O'Connor, who also allegedly goaltended by pinning the ball against the backboard. But there was no call.

Leaman flew off the bench, and was stopped only by a Jim Town bear hug. "There was no doubt about it — he got hit," said Leaman later.

"I got bumped some, but it was definitely goaltending," said Claiborne.

To no one's surprise, Holy Cross walked away with it in the extra five minutes, outscoring the Minutemen 15-8.

"We were depressed in the overtime — we had no spirit," said guard Alex Eldridge after the contest.

"We were fatigued," said Claiborne. "Most of us played forty minutes." Eldridge and Claiborne each played over 44 (out of 45) minutes against the Crusaders.

The two teams played evenly through the first half, with Holy Cross building the biggest lead (37-32) with 3:04 left. But a 10-2 UMass run, marked by two of Mark Donoghue's many lay-ins gave the Minutemen a 41-39 halftime lead.

Tough UMass defense held the Crusaders scoreless for five minutes early in the second half, as the lead jumped to 47-39.

UMass clung to that lead, and led by as much as 13 (67-54) with 7:52 left. But somehow you knew Holy Cross was going to put up a fight.

Sparked by tournament MVP Mike Vicens and freshman Ronnie Perry, the Crusaders came back. A Vicens drive cut it to five, but a Claiborne drive and a Pyatt stuff (which earned him the Dunkin' Donuts Dunk Award) pushed it back up to nine (75-66) with 3:15 left.

From there, it was all Holy Cross. O'Connor, Perry, and Vicens scored within 45 seconds of each other, and a Perry jumper from the top of the key cut it to three (77-74). Chris Potter scored HC's final three points to send it into overtime.

Rimwomen Power by UVM

By JUDY VAN HANDLE

BURLINGTON, Vt. — It was as if someone had taken a car, kept the chassis the same, but revamped the engine to give it extra power.

For the UMass women's basketball team did a complete turnabout from its opening game performance and rolled over Vermont, 81-62, here Saturday afternoon.

In essence, what it all boiled down to were the facts that UMass placed five scorers in double figures to Vermont's two; aggressive Minutewomen rebounding which offset their opponent's superior height; a pressure defense that forced numerous Catamount turnovers; and the play of one very important starter and substitute.

In the offensive department, forward Nancy O'Neil and center Lu-Ann Fletcher scored 14 and 12 points respectively, while guard Sue Henry added 11 (plus 13 assists) to the UMass cause. But the people who were the main mechanics in the UMass overhaul job were forward Chris Basile and guard Jo Balletta.

Basile hit for 10 points in the rout, but perhaps more importantly "did some steady defensive work," according to coach Mary Ann Ozdarski. The senior limited Sue Murdoch, her frontcourt foe, to a mere four points on the day despite being struck with a small height disadvantage.

And what of Balletta? All she did was come off the bench early in the first half to score 12 points and ignite a Minutewomen charge which saw them turn an early 10-5 disadvantage into a 49-34 halftime lead. Balletta wound up as UMass high scorer with a game total of 16.

"The two B's, Balletta and Basile, really did the job," Ozdarski enthused. "They led us to the win."

But the coach also saw fit to praise the rest of her players' efforts.

"All 12 people played and contributed to the victory," she said. "It was a total team effort."

Indeed it was, as the Minutewomen were forced to start the second half with two starters on the bench.

Cadets Blitz Pucksters, 7-2

By FRAN SYPEK

By about 10:15 p.m. on Friday, UMass hockey fans were asking "Who is Dan Murrett," as they left Orr Rink.

The Minutemen pucksters found out who he was that night. A sophomore forward for the Army hockey team, Murrett scored four goals to lead the Cadets to a 7.2 victory over the Minutemen.

The loss dropped the puckmen's record to 3-3-1, with one game remaining before intersession.

Bob Jefferson and Mike Badger had the goals for UMass, while the other Army goals were scored by Tom Glenn, Dave Rost and John Harrison.

Jefferson gave UMass an early 1-0 lead in the opening period on an assist from Frank Snow at the 7:38 mark. Army tied the score on Glenn's goal at 11:23, when Dana Redmond juggled the puck and lost it when Glenn knocked it behind him. Murrett and Rost added first period goals as the visitors led 3-1 after one period.

The second period was all Army, as Murrett scored twice and Harrison once, to give the men from West Point a 6-1 lead.

Doug Janik replaced Redmond in goal for the third period and was promptly greeted by Mr. Murrett, who registered his fourth goal of the evening. Mike Badger had the second UMass goal, an unassisted tally at the 12:53 mark.

The Minutemen were outshot 31-27 in the game. It's too bad for them that the shots were not as close as the final score.

The referees had a busy night with their shistles, as UMass was hurt by penalties once again.

Gymwomen Lose Opener

By LAURA BASSETT

If a team could be victorious while still losing an athletic competition, that is the category the women's gymnastics team would be in. The gymwomen suffered their first loss of the season in the opener against Penn State 145.40 to 139.80. Coach Virginia Evans was "very pleased" with her team's performance despite the loss.

"We had an average score of 8.73 per performer per event which, last year with the top three scores counting would have given us a team score of around 107, would have been one of our very best performances last season."

"I was very pleased with our performance at Penn State."

"We reached our personal goals of the meet and realized we have even further to go," stated Evans.

The Penn State attack was led by Ann Carr who placed first in every event and took the top spot in the all around competition. She had a total score of 37.95 with scores ranging between 9.40 and 9.55.

UMass Captain Jill Heggie was the top all around performer for the Minutewomen. She finished third behind Penn State's Karen Schuckman with a point total of 36.05. Her best performances came with third place finishes on both the balance beam and in vaulting with scores of 9.00 and 9.05 respectively.

Penn State captures all four of the events for the victory. They won vaulting with a score of 36.00 to 34.95. The visiting gymwomen had three good vaults but missed on the fourth. This year, with the fourth score counting in the team score, having to use an 8.00 vault "really hurts" according to coach Evans.

The uneven parallel bars was the gymnasts strongest event of the meet. Penn State took the event, 36.50 to 35.50, but Karen Hemberger hit her routine for a 9.20 score while Susan Cantwell and Jill Heggie both had good routines for marks of 9.00.

The balance beam was the team's weakest event. Cantwell missed her entire routine, and Hemberger missed her mount but Jill Heggie came through as did Sophomore Cheryl Morrier. Morrier was lauded by Evans as having a "very nice" routine.

Holy Cross Cops Title With Comeback Wins

UMass hoopsters Derick Claiborne (1) and Mike Pyatt (r) soar over their defenders in action from this past weekend's Colonial Classic held in the Boston Garden. As it turned out, the Minutemen weren't exactly jumping for joy, as they had to settle for third place in the tourney. The Minutemen lost a heartbreaker to Holy Cross in overtime on Saturday night, but came back Sunday afternoon to beat Boston College in the consolation game.

The S·African Govt. is Murdering Innocent BLACK Youths

By NANA SHESHIBE

The South African government is murdering innocent Black youths.

Since June 16th, 1976, about 3,000 high school kids have been detained and the official number of the killed students is 300. We know from the Black journalist that almost two hundred were killed in jail and the official reasons given for their deaths by the South African security police are a mockery of the truth.

Heron "Fell down stairs"

N. Khotshe "slipped in a shower.

A. Timbol "suicide" by jumping through the 10th floor window of the police interrogation center.

Most recently the deaths of Soweto student J. Magubane and the trade unionist L. Mazwembe, held in the wake of the mass uprising this summer, were termed "suicide by hanging."

James Matthews a poet and journalist who has been reporting accurate information is himself now detained. He like the thousands at present, is held under South Africa's draconian rioteous assembly act security legislation. The laws allow detainees to be kept incommunicado indefinitely without explanation, without being charged, without access to lawyers, to family priest or doctor. The South African police have the power to make a person disappear because in S.A. Blacks have no right to accuse the S.A. white police.

There are laws under which these students are being held — the latest of them is the "internal security act" and Section 6 of the "Terrorism" act. The former provides for detention of up to one year without requirement in the act at least that the detention would culminate in a trial or a charge — as the act says: 'preventive'. The later act provides for indefinite detention and it is understood from the act that the detainee is held in terms of some or other matter which the security police are investigating. This deos not mean that the detainee is informed of any charge against him-her and many never find out what is being held against them. It is therefore more likely that once a detainee is held under this act that he-she may expect to be charged in the end or that he-she are being "prepared" to appear as state witnesses. Some detainees are released without any charge but a banning order is placed on them. Should one be charged under the above acts. the accused are presumed to be guilty until his-her innocence is proven.

There are minimum jail sentences in terms provided by the terrorism act, and this is five years. The detainees are held under this act in solitary confinement. In the first place some of these detainees comprise the leaders of the black consciousness movement. Most of them are under 25 years. Most of them members of South African Student Organization "SASO" or Black Parent Association "BPA". There are at least six priests and other leaders of church organizations, journalists, academics, doctors and trade unionists.

The treatment of these detainees whilst they are being held in detention is abhoring.

The security police use different harsh methods on the detainees to extract information. Solitary confinement and torture by being struck during interrogation. Arm twisting, and electric pegs plugged on detainees toes.

There are special rooms for such "session" which are equipped to prevent any sound from getting outside.

The imaginary chair by which a person must keep himself in a position as if he was sitting on a chair by leaning with his back against a wall. If he cannot remain in this position for long enough he is struck. Or alternatively one policeman will cause the victim to fall whilst the other warns him against falling because that will result in him being struck.

Nana Sheshibe

Other methods include fake strangulations, blindfolding a person and then putting their head under water repeatedly and apply electric shock treatment by connecting electrical wire to various parts of the body, whilst the victim is put under a cap which prevents him from seeing anything around him.

This is a short account of what the present students in detention are undergoing. Those who die during this interrogation may be buried without knowledge of their parents, and parents may never find their graves or even mourn for their sons and daughters because they are never informed of the happenings.

Open Letter to Professors

By BRENDA M. TURNER

Have you ever, after a great long while, made a discovery which helped to crystallize your accumulated feelings and perceptions? Enclosed is an article by Dr. Herbert M. Shelton which addresses some of the basic issues and limitations of today's educational system. Its contents help me to clarify and explain why some quite intelligent, industrious, honest and dependable people seem to perform to the contrary when in a formal classroom setting and are even labeled "slow" and "failures"; why restrictions and constraints within educational setting reflect nay but another type of penal institution; why learning appears to be most often, a chore or dutiful obligation, rather than a quench of natural thirst; why many who have gone through the "system actually learn little and receive instead benefits of stifled human potential; why some students whose educational needs are not being met, constantly trail into classes late or do not come at all; why the atmosphere of compulsion, competition, and penalization causes the verbal or written communication of some students to reflect much, much less than who they really are; why those from diverse cultural backgrounds and-or of restricted experiences, opportunities or motivation, as a result of the unrelated cultural design of the "course" and-or "system" are not given an equal chance; why the apparent goal of sameness within the "system" encourages little tolerance, appreciation and utilization of experience of those from different backgrounds; how traditional education promotes such frustration that there is an increased degree of physical and mental illness manifested in society; why traditional education is merely another means of oppression for various classifications of minorities in this society, and certainly within the world; and why I am writing this letter.

Finally, after twenty-five years of being exposed to traditional educational systems, I am gaining a proper perspective between them and my natural thirst for truth, knowledge and justice. Until very recently, this conflict remained largely unresolved. For me, formal, traditional classroom settings are deterrents to my natural love and joy for learning and are not in compliance with my belief in the INDEPENDENT SEARCH FOR TRUTH. Thus, for me to submit to structures based on compulsion (i.e., mandatory lectures, required readings, oral and written reports, subjectively designed exams, quizzes, rigid arbitrary time constraints, haphazardly selected educational setting, ill-based evaluations, and the like) are a tremendous sacrifice and threat to my principles, as well as restrictive to the release of my human potentiality.

On the basis of my present understanding of human nature, I find that external mechanisms (class requirements) which mold thought through memorization of selected information for oral and written responses are based on the designers interests and experiences which have specific relevancy to his or her background. A person's perceptions and understandings at any point in time are the sum total of his past, present needs, and aspirations for the future. To muffle those experiences through an expectation of sameness in response can be labeled appropriately as "oppression."

Educational systems have become penal institutions. Students are penalized for what they read, write or recite. It is erroneous to assume that all students are able to express themselves best and reflect their understanding within a competitive environment and under undue stress. Performance in a class setting can no way be an honest reflection of the essence of a person's knowledge and ability.

NUMMO Readership Survey

By WILLIE J WHEELER

Nummo News (N.N.) has received a very positive response from the five-college community. A cross-section of people (approx. 200) were randomly asked had they read N.N., and what did they like or dislike about the newspaper.

Everyone asked said they had read N.N. and like it very much. The responses varied as to what likes or dislikes they had. Femi Richard, Archie Shepp, Max Roach, and Diane Ramos are among the few who have expressed warm feelings of enlightment, resulting from having read N.N. poetry.

ABOUT THE GRAPHICS

People from Hampshire College, Amherst College, Mt. Holyoke College, Smith College, A.I.C. in Springfield and Springfield College have read N.N. and said the Graphics were something they looked forward to seeing. The overall impressions were that when they pull open the Collegian the Front Page Graphic catch the eye. Some said that the Graphic is sometimes hard to understand, but do give a New Dimension in regards to distinctive.

Alhdina Williams stated the Front Page is just plain smoking, what she meant to say was the Graphics are great.

AT UMASS

People were randomly asked in Whitmore, the Student Union, the Campus Center, the B.S.O. office and people at New Africa House what they liked or disliked about N.N. Overall they said that they liked the paper and that they could tell that a group effort had went into the layout and gathering of material.

Five people asked rather told the N.N. starf that they disagreed with the layout of the Front Page, they felt that it should be devoted to news.

Sisters and brothers at NUMMO News,

Greetings and an extension of solidarity for the excellent coverage you are giving in your paper to the liberation struggle in Puerto Rico. The last two issues of the paper, with their interconnection of the struggle in southern Africa, the anti-imperialist struggle in Puerto Rico, the efforts to free brothers Earl and Craemen, and the recent indictment of a United Electrical Workers field organizer are helping people make the connections that we all have to make to be prepared to once and for all defeat the imperialist system.

If at any time members of the Puerto Rican Solidarity Committee can aid you in your work call on us. Anti-imperialist solidarity is vital if we are to extend concrete support to the struggles in southern Africa and Puerto Rico. Our organization has a monthly bulletin that contains up to date information on the struggle in Puerto Rico. Many of the articles in the bulletin could be used as background information for articles in Nummo News. We would also be interested in informing our members whenever events or activities are planned by the newspaper staff or other organizations in New Africa House.

As in southern Africa, so in Puerto Rico, we shall win!

A Few Words

The Sylvan Cultural Society as its name implies is an organization based in the North East Sylvan Area whose basic purpose is to provide the Third World community with a meaningful and worthwhile experience while living in the Sylvan Area.

The organization, which was originally started under the leadership of Mr. Jerry Quarrel, has been in existance three years and is presently in the process of trying to organize a meaningful program for the Spring semester.

Half way through the fall semester the Cultural Society received an allocation of $1641 from a proposed budget of $2,500.00 of which the remaining $895.00 was to have been used to receive a color T.V., an electric typewriter, etc. The additional allocation was postponed pending the first meeting of the finance committee and of the granting of the allocation by the Finance Committe proved unsuccessful it was to be again presented to the Area Gov't. for an action. As yet, to my knowledge this hasn't been done.

Let me take this opportunity to clarify my positive for visiting this article.

Recently three have been article printed in the Collegian concerning the Sylvan Area Gov't., the North East Area Directors Office, and mention of different parties, associated with the Sylvan Area Gov't. as being irresponsive to their dates and responsibilities in regards to the North East Sylvan Area.

I as a interested party would like to take this opportunity to remind everyone concerned that a person's first and formost responsibility to themselves is to be a good student or an effective administrator. It should be understood that although one might feel that he or she has the total dedication when under taking such a committment that often times the time necessary to insure the efficiency of whatever the structure just isn't there.

From what I'm told, most of the area representatives were fairly new and therefore lacking the experience to be highly effective in their position. I'd also like to take this opportunity to point out that the North East Area Directors Office has also been in transition. All of this is to say that we all must realize that there are certain needs in the Sylvan Area that aren't being me but gain the extevating circumstances that are presently surrounding the area. I feel that it is too soon to point occuring figures. We all know if there are responsibilities that are being assumed and (if I may be allowed to speak personally), we all know why.

What I am proposing is that after some individual soul searching, we establish a sense of unity, and coherences, and start the semester off knowing what one is trying to accomplish, working for the benefit of all. I'm quite sure that Mr. Jim West, who is presently the Director of the North East Area Director's office after attaining a working knowledge of the Area and all of it's components; will be more then happy to assist you in any way he can.

To the Sylvan Cultural Society, I say: You have the responsiblity of the initial objective for the conjection of the Society in the Sylvan Area. "To provide all the Third World students of the Area with meaningful and worthwhile progressing so that is working through the Society, they can better understand themselves and the Area as well a the world around them.

Eventually, working in conjunction with the Area Directors Office, survey will be undertaken to determine if there is any space in he Sylvan Area, out of which one could run a meaningful program to increase the awareness of all the students in the area as well as otherwise.

If after reading this article, you find that you have been offended. Then let me take this opportunity to apoligize. It in my personal belief that if there are certain things that should be said to alleviate tension so as to better enhance the effectiveness, then by all means; say it. This article was not written to put down anyone, but for the purpose of understanding. Hopefully next semester, the Area Directors Office, the Area Gov't., the Finance Committee, the Sylvan Cultural Society and all the other organizations functioning for the better of the students living in the area will resume the latter half of the school year with a better tone.

To all of you — Happy Kworza, Merry Christmas and have a safe holiday.

Thank you for your time and patience in reading this article.

Exiled Soweto Leader Describes Mobilization of Black S. Africans

Tseitsi Mashinini, exiled S. African student leader.

NEW YORK (LNS) "We had enough of it all," a 19-year-old leader of the mass black uprisings in Soweto, South Africa told a group of New Yorkers gathered to hear his story in early December. "It could have come over any number of things, but it would have come."

Until he fled into exile, Tsietsi Mashinini was president of the Student Representative Council which exercises a strong influence over the black township of over one million outside Johannesburg. The Council led the original June 16 protest against a government order that classes in black schools be taught in Afrikaans, a Dutch-derived language most blacks do not know.

Police responded by killing, wounding and arresting hundreds of students — many of them young school children. This touched off further student demonstrations and work stoppages throughout the summer.

The South African police said they would pay 500 rand ($575) for information leading to Mashinini's arrest — an amount equal to an average black worker's annual income. But the young militant escaped to Botswana in August with the help of an underground network of friends. While in Botswana, the South African security police tried unsuccessfully to kidnap Mashinini. He now lives in London, but came to the United States in late November for a three week visit.

Mashinini is a young man who seems much older than his 19 years might suggest. His father is a chauffeur and his mother works in a clothing factory.

Describing the reaction of Soweto parents to the student demonstrations, Mashinini said that at first they were frightened. "When we mobilized the students, we mobilized all of them. Very young kids were involved and when parents came home from work they found their kids shot.

"This touched everybody. Then the parents were with us all the way. In August they stayed out of work for three days after we called for a work stoppage. On the fourth day they had to face their bosses. They would be fired, they told us, if they said they had stayed out because they wanted to. So we told them to tell their bosses that they would have been beaten up by us if they hadn't stayed out.

"It is their children who die," Mashinini said, "and they want what the students want. If it comes to fighting the white man, they are ready to join. In the past when someone was detained, people became afraid. Now when someone was detained, people get angry."

Since escaping from South Africa, Mashinini says he has learned a lot. "I have just learned recently about things like capitalism and Marxism and communism and I still don't know much about them. I was quite a reader back home, but I had never seen anything about Marxism — all those books are banned."

Newspapers too, he explained, are tightly controlled. "There are two editions of the Rand Daily Mail — a white edition and a black extra. Most of the white edition covers news for whites and the black extra reports on events in black townships. Occasionally the two cover the same thing but the words are different. In writing press releases which we sent to the papers, I used the words 'racist regime' many times. In the white edition they said 'racist regime.' In the black extra they said 'South African government.'

"People in Soweto are completely blank on what's happening outside of the country. Vorster said that the June 16 demonstration was organized to embarass him before his meeting with Kissinger. I didn't even know he was going to meet with Kissinger until several days after June 16."

Mashinini was also president of the Johannesburg region of the South African Student Movement, a black high school organization. "One of the biggest projects of SASM was developing black consciousness," he explained. "I used to teach my little brothers black poems. We tried to break through the indoctrination." Mashinini added that the relationship between the high school movement and the university movement, led by the South African Student Organization, is very strong.

Looking to the future, Mashinini forsees many people going underground and the eventual beginning of armed struggle. "Most young people don't want to go into the streets anymore — it gets South Africa in the news, but people are killed and the affect is not clear."

Throughout his visit to the U.S. Mashinini has told people that "one of the biggest problems we have in South Africa is the big powers that support the regime for economic and military interests." He urges Americans to put pressure on the U.S. to get out of South Africa, and also stresses the importance of isolating South Africa in any international events.

We have something to give to the World

By FREIDA JONES

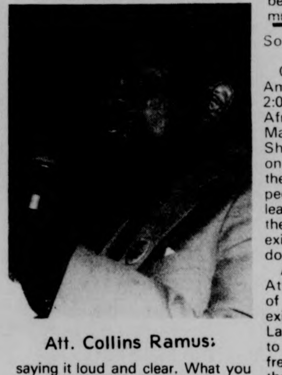
Archie Shepp, Max Roach and Vishnu Wood. pay tribute to S. Africa in concert.

— The concert of Max, Archie and Vishnu

SPEECH — Collins Ramusi

It is very overpowering to think that we are actually connected to these men, visionaries of the New World. And connection is what I felt with pride when I entered the warmth of the gymnasium this past Saturday. Max Roach, Archie Shepp, Vishnu Woods are part of us and we belong to them.

I was not entertained. I did not see a show. I did not check out a performance. I entered a bond with these masters; I was on the receiving end of a gift of their Black lifeforce, and in return I was asked to give back a committment, to Black people and to humanity. We were reminded of our direction: and thank you, thank you, thank you Max, Archie, Vishnu, for caring. And I hope you felt that huge rush saying it loud and clear. What you were saying defies description in the English language and I doubt if it could be translatable into words of love coming back to you from the audience.



Att. Collins Ramus;

Each musician was saying something, and Archie, you were at all. But I felt the message coming from all of you. Vishnu, your rhythmic bass was in incredible pace; Max's solo's drew the spirits of the children of Soweto to Amherst. His rhythyms were integrated into a moving speech given by Azanian attorney, Collins Ramusi. Mr. Ramusi's description of what is going down in South Africa was moving, but that was not the point — large and basic — we must move now to remove the last bit of inhumanity on earth. The racism in South Africa — the action that will be taken and the aftermath that will follow — on this hinges the destiny of the world. Our humanity rests on stopping this inhuman cruetly. It is everyone's responsibility to respond, for the welfare of our destinies.

This concert showed that creativity, politics and spirituality are not separate — the energy poured into the instruments was beautiful to see and the reason was clear to see. They have given us a beautiful gift and in appreciation we must rise to their call.

Southern Africa Benefit

On Saturday, Dec. 11th 1976, at Amherst College Gymnasium at 2:00 p.m., a benefit for Southern Africa was held. The greatness of Max Roach on percussion, Archie Shepp on reed, and Vishnu Wood on bass lead the audience back to the power of the main stream of the people in struggle. The great leaders called to us to help support the Southern African brothers in exile, they asked for any kind of donation.

Among the leaders was speaker Attorney Collins Ramusi who told of the struggle with brothers in exile. Who stated that "the Mother Land needs people who are willing to work hard and teach hard and freedom is not so far away, because the country realize what it must do to regain what the white man has and still is trying to take away." The man of wisdom and strength came among us to teach and did just that.

The Five College Support Committee for the Liberation of Southern Africa wishes to thank everyone for their support and would like to inform you that much more support is needed.

Legalized Racism and Women

By JAMILA

In recognition of Black Women's Day which is December 10, Sisters On the Outside, a political prisoners defense organization sponsored two speakers, Yvonne Wanrow and Martha Pitts who spoke on "Legalized Racism and Women."

Yvonne Wanrow and Assata Shakur are two Third World women who represent the strength and perserverance of all revolutionary women of the oppressed peoples within the United States. On Wednesday, December 8, 1976 Yvonne Wanrow, and Martha Pitts who represented Assata Shakur shared with the Valley community the story of what happens to women who exercise their right to defend themselves.

Yvonne Wanrow is a Native American woman of the Colville people who was born in a United States government reservation in northeast Washington. The series of events leading up to the act for which she has been imprisoned is reminiscent of the cases developed around women such as Joanne Little and Inez Garcia. Yvonne Wanrow is accused of killing a man, William Wesler, a known child molester and drunk, who broke into her home and threatened to abuse both the children and Yvonne. She shot Wesler on August 12, 1972 after attempting to call the police. On May 13, 1973 she was convicted of second-degree murder by an all male white jury. She was sentenced to 25 years in prison. This conviction was appealed to the Washington Courts of Appeals which ordered a new trial. The prosecution appealed to the State Supreme Court where Sister Wanrow was represented by two attorneys from the Center for Constitutional Rights, Nancy Stearns and Elizabeth Schneider. After the Supreme Court heard their arguments, which followed the lines of those of Little and Garcia, it freed Sister Wanrow on $5,000.

Yvonne Wanrow

Yvonne Wanrow's case will determine if a woman threatened with physical abuse and-or rape has the right to defend herself and her children. If she loses she will be put into prison within a system which has repeatedly demonstrated how it penalizes poor people, especially women. In order to keep Yvonne Wanrow out of prison a network of international defense committees has been developed. She has been speaking to groups in various communities in order to make known the continuing pattern of injustice against Native American people and women.

Martha Pitts, a representative of Assata's Cell, one of Assata Shakur's defense committees discussed the trials of Assata and the repressive actions taken against anyone associated with her case. Assata Shakur is a revolutionary Black woman, "by definition" a member of the Black Liberation Army, who as a result of her community activism was isolated by the government for particularly relentless attacks. On May 2, 1973 Assata Shakur (s-n Jeann Chesimard) was stopped with several brothers as they traveled on the New Jersey State turnpike. There was a search and shoot out in which one of the brothers and one state trooper were killed. Since then Assata Shakur has been charged with participation in a variety of crimes and conspiracy to plan various others. She has been found NOT GUILTY in three out of four cases because the government had obviously bribed and pressured witnesses, most of whom had had criminal charges against them dropped when the agreed to testify. Each time she is found NOT GUILTY new charges are found and another trial is called for. In the mean time Assata Shakur is being held without bail and without every having been proven guilty in he basement of an all male prison,

In the Valley of the Giants

By FREIDA JONES

The plush green seats at the Fine Arts Center were filled to the max. Lights gleamed like white wings from the sides of the concert hall.

The giants were at it again: Jo Jones on the drum, Mary Lou Williams on the piano, Ron Carter on base, James Moody on the reeds, and Dizzy Gillespie on the trumpet. We were all warned this would happen but no one prepared us for the consequences.

We all knew once upon a time, twenty or thirty years ago, people heard a big band sound, and a couple of dudes in Harlem chili houses broke through with phrases that evolved into the language of 'bop'. And then a while ago, oh, around the time I was born, people were playing tunes like Salt Peanuts, Night in Tunisia, Straight No Chaser, Un Poco Loco. But this was music for grownups, right? Well, twenty years ago or so, Dizzy, Parker and Max Roach, Mingus and Bud Powell were raising the roof off Concert Hall. And what is so deep, is that they are still raising roofs, in the old phrasology and in new phraseology.

History was made Saturday, Dec. 11 — because Max played exceptionally and his old partner was getting down, too.

Dizzy as composer is genius, Dizzy is humorous and dignified as Emcee, Dizzy is clarifying when explaining how the music came about, Dizzy is blazing as trumpeter. They were all masters, geniuses, virtuosos ... I could list the adjectives. The music was unusually reflective of years of playing experience, tones were sharp, phrases, clear, transitions smooth. Some of the tunes were classics like Straight No Chaser, Night in Tunisia, there was always plenty of incredible fresh music played between leads. It was enlightening when Dizzy mentioned the influence of the AfroCuban rhythms Chano Pozo, the great Cuban percussionist had collaborated with him in the past.

They played Tin Tin Deo — one of Pozo's pieces. The wisdom and feeling of the Black classical masters have shaped our lives, as Dizzy, Jo Jones, Mary Lou, Carter and Moody have done; renewing the wizardry of Black creativity.

Could Zimbabwe's Independence be won in Geneva- Or in the Bushes and Cities of Zimbabwe

by CHAKA ZULA

Sitting in the warm large Palais de Nations conference hall in Geneva, delegations of Zimbabwe's African Nationalist leaders Britain, and Ian Smith's atrocious followers, are discussing apparently in a stalemate, how to grant independence to the oppressed and disinherited people of Zimbabwe. Concurrently a savage war is raging in Zimbabwe between Ian Smith's army of oppression and nationalist liberation forces. The Geneva negotiations have been brought about by Kissinger's so-called shuttle diplomacy which involved several dubious promises and guarantees to both Africans and whites; the warfare exists as a result of white intransigience, insensitive oppression and abasement of Africans, and broken promises of the past. In the light of the past experiences it becomes difficult for any patriotic and sensible Zimbabwean to take the Geneva negotiations seriously and pin all his hopes on their outcome. Consequently, it has become necessary for concerned Africans to ask themselves whether Zimbabwe will become independent through negotiations or through warfare, or through a combination of both. This article attempts to explore the alternative answers to the question.

The history of Zimbabwe's conflict is little understood by outsiders, and whatever little is known outside has been overwhelmingly distorted by agents of the racist white minority government. It is not my intention to give a history lesson to the reader of this article, but the complex maze of the present problems cannot be understood without a brief review of the past and current affairs of Zimbabwe. Without going detailly into the geography and demography of the country it is appropriate to note that there are about 270,000 whites and roughly six million Africans in Zimbabwe. The discovery of gold in 1867 in Zimbabwe aroused mad interest in European adventurers. Lead by Cecil John Rhodes, a group of settlers (called the "pioneer" column, moved into the present territory and hoisted the British flag where present-day Salisbury stands (1890). This move thus started the faitful occupation of Zimbabwe which was subsequently named Rhodesia, after the leader of the first gang of gold "drinkards." Between 1893 and 1897 there was a series of confrontations between the indegenes of the land and the settlers. Due to their superiority in firepower, the whites conquered the Africans and established British rule. In 1923 the British government granted "responsible" GOVERNMENT TO THE WHITE SETTLERS, effectively excluding Africans from participation in decision making processes.

During the period of "responsible" government — from 1923 to 1965 when the settlers, lead by Ian D. Smith, declared unilateral independence from Britain — Zimbabwe's Africans were subjected to all forms of human degradation, deprivation and exploitation. All this happened under the watchful but unconcerned eyes of the British. For instance, educational opportunities, housing, land tenure, employment, and salary scales etc., were all designed to keep the black man in his "place." A member of Parliament on one occasion said "Education for the African should be a means of equipping him to work more effectively for the white man. We do not intend to hand over this

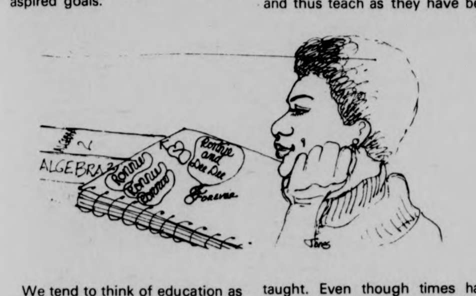
Learning is such an intrinsic personal type experience that it is impossible to measure results in a simplified, succint manner of outward performance such as demonstrated in class evaluations. A repetition of facts spued forth are a false indication that actual learning has taken place. The individual is not passive to the selection and regulation of his mental processes. What goes on inside of that individual or his internal state at a particular time must be considered. Readiness for absorbing specific information is not taken into consideration; each brings to any situation a difference in past, present needs, as well as aspired goals.



We tend to think of education as being isolated and distinct from LIFE and that it is limited to a formalized educational setting. Learning takes place wherever we are as we interact with our physical, human and unknown experiences. One needs the freedom and time to integrate the external with the internal as he reflects upon past, present needs and future aspirations. Things which were unknown to us become structured into new realities as we reflect upon our past, and begin to construct our future. Thus, one's degree of learning can never be fairly judged by another for its personal nature and biological and psychological factors affecting it (such as nutrition and the distinctive way each interacts with his environment), make any attempt to do so to be a gross injustice.

When learning is based on compulsive interaction with subject matter and experiences which have no specific relevancy to each individual learner, then there is repulsion and-or confusion. To disseminate mere facts and information is not responding to individual needs. The assimilation of any kind of information is a distinctly personal matter; the styles revealed through audio and written materials are not suited for everyone. The learner should have the freedom to determine what he needs and not be penalized for that selectivity. Sensory information (required readings) is not interpreted by all in the same way. The sum total of one's past experiences of one's own personal goals and interests determine what a person extracts from something seen, read or heard.

Many teach on the basis of tradition and adopt methods of the teachers who have taught them and thus teach as they have been taught. Even though times have changed, what may have been appropriate in the past, may have little or no significance today. Teaching for a long period of time, can become a cause for limiting one's techniques of educating. Even though one may be following theories of some kind, he often fails to recognize that this is a constantly changing world and that it is becoming more apparent that man is of a nature different from animal and does not begin to release his greatest potential when dominated and manipulated constantly by external forces. His uniqueness to animals makes him remarkably unresponsible to mechanistic and compulsive approaches designed to "make him learn".

Perhaps the biggest limitation of traditional educational systems is that they fail to recognize the basic nature of man. They relate to students on the basis of stimulus and response methods of teaching and learning, utilizing those same schemes which apparently motivate animal. Though these approaches of reward and punishment do have some significance in human relations, man's spiritual nature which distinguishes him from animal, provides him with the distinctive ability to establish for himself a sense of purpose which directs his unlimited creative powers (human potential) into making decisions and carrying them out. Thus, he is in the process of releasing his potentialities when he is free to set and carry out his established goals.

If man's spiritual nature is ignored in educational settings, then human potential will remain unreleased and assumptions will be derived that some are uneducable. This is no doubt erroneous as everyone is endowed with unlimited human potentials. The role of the teacher should be to guide the student's learning and assist in releasing that potential as opposed to muffling it through the dictates of mandatory course structures, and penalization through subjective grading. Learning is had, when every error is turned into a new learning experience; one should feel free to learn, experience and grow without penalty.

Since learning is the result of human potential having been actualized, we have to know how to create positive learning environments which are conducive to learning and constitute orderliness, cleanliness and appropriate color-scheme so as to have the most beneficial psychological effect on the learner. All environments are not conducive to learning. Physical settings are important. Often untidiness, disorderliness and even smoking are deterrents to concentration. Physical surroundings in an environment have a lot to do with a person's ability to relax and concentrate on what he is trying to learn.

Personalities within the environment can create limitations on the ability to learn; these may be either, other students or teachers. Students, again, are penalized through credits if they feel they must change, add or drop classes or select another environment after a specified period of time. Time constraints designated as semesters, class periods and assignment durations are frequently restrictive to learning. Time constraints often do not allow for the assimilation of content material, causing a thrust of unjust penalties when students fail to fulfill those arbitrary time factors or fail to demonstrate mastery of the subject matter at the appointed time.

Education should be about guiding the release of human potential. Both teachers and students should understand the specifics of this subject so that "justice" in educational institutions can be lived. It is no longer adequate to intuitively feel we are releasing human potential. We have to know how it operates and be able to recognize the positive means of aiding its release both within ourselves and others. We have to fully understand the student and teacher roles which will assist in the release of human potential. Students must have the freedom to Independently Search for Truth and learn for the sake and love of learning. Teachers must become more effective guides by providing what the students need, when they need it and to the degree that they can absorb it. If the students' learning experiences are individualized and based on what he needs to develop, the student then gets a sense of his immeasurable potentiality and is spurred on to perpetual learning. Human potentiality is the power and ability of man. All humans are endowed with powers and abilities of unlimited degrees. All are educable.

The teaching and learning methods expressed here relating to some of the limitations of traditional learning environments is specifically geared towards the undergraduate and graduate institutions as opposed to the elementary. Though many of these matters do have relevancy in the elementary settings, in no way is it assumed that the "free", unstructured environments for youth are of a totally positive benefit for the release of their potential.

During the early years, students need to develop skills which will enable them to act responsibly and independently as they grow older. However, it is not sufficient for their educators to rely on tradition, intuition, and out-moded methods of teaching. The processes associated with teaching and learning which have a positive effect on the release of human potential must be researched understood and appropriately taught.

Students in their early years, for instance, must be taught and given the opportunity to master, not only what is important to learn, but more significantly how to learn. They must be able to understand and utilize the processes associated with goal-setting and attainment, as well as decision-making. They must be allowed to practice the feel of having control over their destinies. They must be shown the benefits and taught how to practice those human qualities and virtues which will allow them to maintain human worth and dignity, as well as be of maximum service to an ever-advancing civilization.

By the time these youth reach the point whereby they are interested in advanced study, then it seems that their opportunities would be greater enhanced if they will not fall victim to the limiations of our present educational institutions. Ultimately, they will not be allowed the freedom to Independently Search for Truth without penalization. To date, the independent study contract, perhaps, most nearly resembles this conception of "freedom".

country to the native population or to admit them to the same society or political positions as we occupy ourselves — we should have no pretence of educating them in exactly the same way as we do the Europeans." Even then some white people considered a minimum education to be dangerous. It was realized that educated Africans presented political challenge to the white society. To them (the whites) an African was and always would be, a hewer of wood and drawer of water for his "master."

transit on period, and (c) the establishment of a two or three billion dollars trust fund for compensation of whites who choose to leave the country after independence. We object to (a) and (b) above because it is reliably learned that the whites need a two year period to rebuild their crumbling army, and with the army and police in their control they intend to stage a military coup at the end of the transition period. This would buy them another decade or two of unchallenged rule." We believe in this possibility due to past experiences which need not be enumerated. So unless the transition period is shortened and we are in control of the army and police, there can be no reason to compensate the whites for what has never been theirs. They took the land from us for nothing and developed it with slave labor; we have been de facto slaves for more than a century. Who has compensated us for it? Another implication of the trust fund is that we become independent in heavy debt. Consequently, we would be debtors for life to those who financed our enslavement.

As things stand in Geneva there appears to be no way of settling the conflict peacefully unless the Kissinger proposals are completely discarded. It is also apparent to us that the whites are out to play games at Geneva. We cannot trust them when they have completely surrendered power to us. This in effect means that the armed struggle must continue until total victory is achieved. There thus seems to be no middle course (a mixture of peaceful negotiations and fighting). The Geneva talks can continue but they are simple serving a cosmetic purpose.

Under this background African nationalism was born. Its birth heralded African determination to exactly challenge and destroy such an evil and shameless set up. It started from trade union organizations whose primary aim then, was to work for better working conditions and better wages for their labor. But gradually it extended into all segment of African life.

As the social wind of change blew across Africa from the Mediterranean to the Atlantic and the Indian Oceans, the various colonial empires started to crumble. In 1964, what used to be Northern Rhodesia became independent under a black leadership with the name Zambia. The whites of then Southern Rhodesia became fearful of a similar happening in Zimbabwe. They wanted to maintain the status-quo: the master servant relationship, the high standard of living, in short the continued exploitation of blacks for the benefit of the whites. Consequently, in November 1965 they declared independence unilaterally from Britain after arresting, with the acquiscence of the British, all nationalist leaders, to make sure there was no internal opposition. It was impossible for the Africans to negotiate with the whites under these conditions. All attempts at a peaceful resolution of the problems were rebuffed and met with force and humiliation. We have had no choice but to try to respond with force also. In 1967 the first liberation force was organized. Even though it was still small and ill-equipped it made its first attack in the same year. Thus was introduced a second alternative to seeking a solution to the conflict. By 1972 the liberation forces had become formidable enough to be recognized by Ian Smith as a threat to continued oppression of the African people of Zimbabwe. In 1974 the Portuguese occupation forces were defeated in Guinea-Bissau, Angola and Mozambique by the gallant African liberation fighters. This acted as a psychological boost to Zimbabweans, and in the case of Mozambique, the newly liberated land became a strategic base for military training and operations. As time went on the settlers and their outside supporters, mainly Britain, South Africa, America and the rest of the Western World, realized that it was impossible to prevent the defeat of the white minority governments in the whole of Southern Africa. With this in mind, Henry Kissinger, acting as the representative of those who claim to be against the violence that already exists in the area and is escalating steadily, set out on his so-called shuttle diplomacy in 1976. It is this shuttle that resulted in the present Geneva talks. But it is important to note that we do not trust Kissinger's intentions. Owing to the fact that the oppressors have always got all their aid, military or otherwise, from the West; and the nationalists, on the other other hand have got theirs from communist countries, Kissinger is afraid that is the nationalists are allowed to win decisively, the country would become subjected to communist domination. The implications are that all Western economic investments, worth billions of dollars, would be lost; there will be no continued flow of raw materials produced by slave labor in into the Western world. This would affect the U.S. most which violates United Nations sanctions in order to import chrome ore from Zimbabwe. This, Kissinger hopes to prevent by helping install a black powerless and puppet government in place of a true nationalist government.

Under discussion at Geneva are proposals drafted by Henry Kissinger and John Vorster, the white Prime Minister of South Africa, in the absence of the nationalist leaders of Zimbabwe. Objectionable to the nationalists among the proposals are three clauses: (a) length of transition period for majority rule, (b) control of the police and army during the

I would like to express my thanks to the community for their support in the Brown & Gether's case. I would ask that people continue to support our efforts by signing Craeman petition, writing letters to Craemen (Craemen Gethers, Box 43, MCI Norfolk, Norfolk, Mass. ;2;56), and addressing the governor office about this injustice.

In closing, the hearing on Friday was another test on the Brown-Gether's case. It reinforced the attitudes that the court's are interested in reforms and not freedom. Because we are not in the same class as a Richard Nixon or Patty Hearst, our next step will have to be the higher courts, because the Superior Court has continued to duplicate their position.

Board rules against SW ban

By ROBERT LESLIE
Collegian Staff

A three person student judiciary board unanimously ruled yesterday that a current Southwest Assembly (SWA) ban on the showing of pornographic films in Hampden Student Center is vague and in violation of the First Amendment, but offered some guidelines that would facilitate a future ban on the films.

The board, presided over by Bruce Wingate, with justices Rosemary McCarthy and Jeffrey Lutsky concurring, stated that "while we may approve of the underlying concepts entailed in SWA act no. 8, we cannot, under the present wording accept this act as proper and constitutional. Since laws are established to protect the rights and liberties of the population in the face of ever changing political ideas and morals, we feel that the laws should be specific in nature and scope; subject to as little ambiguity in interpretation as possible."

SWA Act 8 states "that the SWA shall ban the showing of pornographic films in Hampden Student Center due to the sexist and oppressive nature to the men and women of our community."

The board, following a spirited four and one half hours of deliberation Thursday night between Paul L. Yanowitch for the prosecution and Deborah Love for the defense, ruled that the current statute is unacceptable, but added that SWA could ban films if it followed six guidelines set down yesterday by the court.

The board stated, "should SWA, in its political wisdom, decide to institute these recommendations, or modifications thereof, the court would have no other legal recourse than to accept them as appropriate legislation. In conclusion, because Southwest in several instances has demonstrated unified community support on this ban, we recommend the following procedural guidelines:

1. All potential sponsors of films in Southwest should serve appropriate notice to the general Southwest population. Appropriate notice is defined as at least three weeks prior to the showing. Notice should be served through the approved media, the Collegian, WMUA, whatever.

2. At any time within the notice period, a resident of the Southwest population may register a complaint with the appropriate review board.

3. The review board shall be a subcommittee of Southwest Assembly.

4. The board shall be chaired by an assembly member; and the board comprised of a cross representation of Southwest's population, including members of the Women's Center, Men's Center, Third World Community, etc.

5. The burden of proof shall lie with the person filing the complaint for disbarment of the film.

6. A disbarment vote by the board will then be brought before the SWA for a general plurality vote of endorsement of the review board's decision."

Justice McCarthy stated, after the decision was handed down, that "ultimately it is the right of the community to govern itself."

Durkin said that this date would concur with the second SWA meeting of next semester. By that time, he said, representatives would have been able to contact constituents about their feelings on a new porno ban.

Durkin said he was unsure whether the assembly would pass the new bill. He added that the last bill, which was approved last month when a referendum fell short of the needed votes was "a spur of the moment thing" in reaction to the planned screening of a pornographic film by Baroque enterprises.

Albert Sparks, chairman of Baroque enterprises, said last night, "It is unfortunate that SWA has requested the injunction. I see this as the same kind of political trickery as the referendum."

He added, "As long as there is censorship at UMass, Baroque will pursue it."

UMass debaters shine in tourneys

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

It's been a good year for novices at the Debate Union so far.

At the University of Vermont, Oct. 22 through 24, Russell Skelton and Paula Williams, with a score of 5 to 3 in the preliminaries, lost to Bates College in the quarter finals. At the same tournament Jim De-Vita and Larry Uchmanowicz, 5-3 also, lost to Dartmouth in the quarters.

Novices Steve Sheehan and Dave Colwell were the fourth place team at the Morris Harvey tournament held in West Virginia, with a 4-2 record. Freshpeople Mari-Jon Adams and John Barrett went 3-3.

At the UMass Budget Saver Tournament, Adams and Barrett, Stuart Price and Anthony Burt, Jeffrey Weisberg and Mark Hoffman, De-Vita and Uchmanowicz, and Colwell and Sheehan participated. UMass students were ineligible for awards at this tournament, but all did well.

"Public debates have taken us into classes on campus discussing such topics as banning sugar, gun control, and nuclear power. We have also attended a number of high schools and presented debates on the legalization of marijuana, and capital punishment," said Rosanne Hynes, President of the Debate Union and Coordinator of the Public Debate Program.

In the past the Public Debate Program has had no clear direction, said Hynes. Next semester there will be a new debate assistant coming in.

The public debate program has already set up eight debates for the first four weeks of next semester.

"Public debating is different from tournament debating — it's more emotional," said Hynes.

Next semester they will be starting the Prison Debate Program. In this program each team consists of one UMass debater, and one prison inmate. They get together to research their debate topic, then debate in front of anyone interested, at the prison.

Next semester, the main topic will be prison reform. Hynes expects there will be a lot of interest in debating subjects under this topic in the prisons.

Other Debate Union team scores include: At Pace University in Manhattan, New York, Laurie Cox and Elizabeth Magnusson, 4-4, against teams from Boston University, Dartmouth College, Bates College, and Harvard University. Varsity debaters Mary O'Malley and David Smith, 5-3, losing to St. Anselms from Long Island in the Quarter Finals. Also attending were Skelton and Williams.

Varsity debaters are in the process of rebuilding UMass at the National level after losing their two top teams to graduation; John Cross and John Adams, and David Donovan and Howard Steinberg.

Edward Pannetta and Mark Link, both freshpeople, and Barry Maddix and Peter Babin both went 4-4 at Boston University. Novices Cox and Magnusson went 2-6 at their first varsity tournament.

At the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill, Glen Nickerson and Rocco Defruscio went 4-4, beating teams from George Washington University, West Virginia Wesleyan, Harvard, and the University of Georgia. Also attending were O'Malley and Smith.

Varsity debaters Al Rosenbloom and Nick Burnett faced tough competition at the Emporia tournament and the Georgia Round Robin, a special invitational tournament comprised of seven of the top teams in the country.

At Emory University, Burnett and Rosenbloom again went 4-4, and freshpeople Link and Panetta also attended.

During the month of January the Debate Union does not take a break like the rest of us do. They are hard at work in a "massive research effort" said Hynes. Each team spends the time working on its own "case" or debate topic. It's also a good opportunity for novices to learn a bit of basic theory.

Believe it or not, it's finally here! Kathy Johnson (L) and Mike Phillips (R) hand out some of the 1700 Indexes that were distributed yesterday. The Index will be available through Wednesday. (Staff photo by Chris Bourne)

Truman scholar nominee chosen

By DEBBIE ALLIEGRO and KEVIN TURCOTTE
Collegian Staff

This years' nominee for the Harry S. Truman Scholarship Foundation from UMass is Collegian staffer Lisa E. Melilli.

The award is based on outstanding potential for public service, and academic merit.

Melilli will compete against one student from each University in the state. The winner from the state will receive free college tuition, fees and books.

"At UMass I am using four main components offered to students: Academic, internship, independent credit and extra curricular activities to prepare myself for a public service career," Melilli said.

Melilli has been writing for the Collegian three semesters as a staff reporter and as a columnist.

Melilli's job objectives lie in the communication field. Not only is she interested in continuing on in news reporting, but she is also considering public relations work and promotional work involved with politics and government. She is also working on her own creative writing.

According to the guidelines published by the foundation, they define public service "as participation in government with emphasis in administration and management... The foundation, in particular, seeks evidence of potential leadership ability."

Melilli was nominated by the Honors program as a Truman Scholar because she is a sophomore, has over a 3.0 cum and is a Massachusetts resident who shows the potential for public service.

Central gov't elects treasurer

By ROSEMARY CONWAY
Collegian Staff

Robert T. Cannon was elected Central Area Treasurer and plans for a mural colloquium were announced amidst beer, pizza and jesting, last night at the Central Area Government meeting.

The new treasurer for Central Area brought three letters of recommendation from people he had worked with in the Southwest Assembly last year.

Cannon said he had served as co-chairperson of the Southwest Assembly Budget Committee, which basically funds all of Southwest: centers, dormitories (including heads of residence salaries), etc.

"I learned a lot about money there, working closely with the Southwest government. From this I acquired a very basic understanding of the Recognized Student Organization system," said Cannon.

Cannon is a junior majoring in Social Thought and Political Economy.

Cannon must now find someone interested in serving as the Brooks representative for next semester.

He is replacing current treasurer Antony Burt, who has been in that office since last March but is leaving next semester for Duke University.

Anyone who is interested in running or participating in mural colloquium next semester should contact Fitz Walker.

Areas will be designated in Central and Orchard Hill where the murals will be produced. Students will be given a minimum of three weeks and a maximum of four weeks to complete a mural for the one credit colloquium.

The course will be photographed and videotaped and will begin the first week of the spring semester.

The Greenough Union Council and the Student Organizing Project requested $800 for a party to be held in Franklin Dining Commons late in February or in early March. The party will have free admission but charge of beer. The event will be advertised in Central Area.

When asked what the major accomplishments of the Central Area government have been this semester, President Janice Perry said, "Getting some sort of stand on movie guarantees for pornographic movies. I think it is about time the Central Area Government did something active about sexism and racism, besides through the colloqs and centers."

A breakthrough for Earl Brown

By SPENCER VIBBERT
Collegian Staff

NEWS ANALYSIS

While Friday's hearing in Hampshire County Superior Court may have seemed like just another day in judicial ceremony, to the friends of Robert Earl Brown it was probably a break-through. After nearly two years of litigation, countless motions denied or delayed, and many months of legal preparation, it appears Brown and his attorneys are finally getting the chance to reverse an October 1975 armed robbery conviction they have always maintained was unjust.

That it should take literally 14 months to get to this position probably says more about judicial back-log in Massachusetts courts than any malevolent grand design on the part of judges and prosecutors.

In any event Judge Paul Tamburello was visibly impressed by the oral arguments advanced by Brown's lawyers on Friday. Attorneys David Rosenberg and Jeanne Baker, themselves partners in a high-powered Cambridge law firm, made clear they have persuasive means with which to try to overturn Brown's conviction, if they get the chance. That chance will probably come at an evidentiary hearing later this month. They hope an exploratory hearing will result in the judge's overturning the jury's verdict, but all likelihood aside, they would certainly settle for a new trial.

The defense will hinge on two separate but related issues; the photo-identification process by which they feel their client was unfairly victimized, and the performance of Brown's former counsel, Jerome Farrell of Springfield. Since they claim he failed to notice discrepancies in the Government's case (vis-a-vis police line-ups used in court) and was derelict in finding and cross-examining witnesses, they will use Fourth Amendment arguments to propel their case.

Courts have traditionally held "ineffective assistance of counsel" an abridgement of the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution and thereby reasonable grounds for appeal. That is the theory. In practice it is not as simple as that. Like the American Medical Association in matters of alleged malpractice in medicine, courts rarely act against practicing lawyers, the reasons being a happy combination of judicious restraint and occupational safe-guarding.

Brown's lawyers then will have to do the impossible. They will have to be polite to the judge (the same one who presided over the case in question) and damaging to Jerome Farrell, now the center of attraction.

As for Brown himself, a 23 year old black UMass senior majoring in economics, you might call him guardedly optimistic. He has been through two trials, two maximum security prisons, one house of corrections, and one work and study-release program; so that if there is one thing about which he is not naive it is the pain of waiting quietly for the chance to exonerate himself. (Some would see it as a mark of his character that he is continuing legal efforts on behalf of Craeman Gethers, another black student, convicted as an accomplice, and presently serving time at Norfolk State Prison.

He attends classes at UMass but returns to jail each night. He has been turned down, when he has applied for volunteer work in the community. While his probation officer, Mr. Frank Godek, will tell an observer there have been "no problems" with Brown's performance on the study-release program this hasn't yet been found sufficient grounds for his freedom. Brown has been denied bail pending new trial three times.

If there is a light at the end of the legalistic tunnel no one's saying so. One source predicts December will be the most important month of the last fourteen. Affidavits are being taken, witnesses contacted, and arguments refined. The defense is moving into full-swing in anticipation of a two or three day win-or-miss evidentiary hearing.

For its part, it seems clear, the district attorney's office will have to do more than blow smoke if it wants its full conviction upheld. As Defense Attorney Rosenberg is fond of saying in open court, the Government has yet to file a counter-affidavit to proper arguments of bail denial, transcripts and the rest. So far it hasn't had to.

For Robert Earl Brown and his court appointed lawyers just about everything will be at stake in the coming weeks. The long waiting period seems to be over. Judge Tamburello, speaking from the bench, told the mostly black spectators who jammed his courtroom Friday, he would hold court during his Christmas vacation to resolve the situation, if need be.

Whether the racial overtones that have characterized much of the campus media coverage of the Brown case subside or continue is still a question very much up in the air.

Northeast elects new president

With a 42 per cent area voter turnout, Beth E. Tibbets was elected president of the Northeast Area Government last night 62 to 28 per cent over David Alger.

Tibbets, formerly NEAG president, is a sophomore in the College of Arts and Sciences. She lives in Dwight House.

"I plan to carry out what John Weisse (former NEAG president) started," Tibbets said. "I want to open up lines of communication between the staff and the students, and plan more interaction between the staff and the students."

Alger, a senior business major, was a write-in candidate.

John Weisse said, "I think Beth is capable and the government will function smoothly with her. I hope Dave, who has shown to be a good worker, will stay in the government."

The position of secretary will be filled in an in-body election next semester, Tibbets said.

Chanukah starts this Thursday

By JAY SARET
Collegian Staff

This Thursday evening will mark the beginning of the celebration of Chanukah, the Jewish holiday commemorating the re-establishment of Jewish sovereignty.

Commonly referred to as the Festival of Lights, Chanukah is celebrated over an eight day span, in memory of the eight days that the oil miraculously burned in Palestine in 165 B.C.E.

That event came about after many years of war between the Seleucids from Syria, and the Jews from Judea. The Seleucids were led by Antiochus, who wanted the Jews to change their worshiping habits from one God to Greek Idols.

After many years of guerilla warfare, Judah and the Maccabees defeated the last Syrian army. Then the Maccabees emptied their Temples of the Greek Idols. According to legend they then lit the Menorah with supposedly only enough specially purified oil to last one day. Miraculously it lasted eight days, giving them enough time to produce more specially purified oil.

These and other issues including the relationship between Chanukah and Christmas and how to play Dreidel will be discussed today at 3 p.m. in the Hillel office, located in room 302 in the Student Union Building.

The discussion will be lead by Rabbi Saul Perlmutter.

Candle-lighting ceremonies will take place at more than a dozen central locations on campus. Times and places are listed in the Hillel office.

In addition, there will be a campus-wide Chanukah party on Saturday night at 7:30 in the Cape Cod Lounge, in the Student Union Building. All are welcome.

It's beginning to look a lot like Christmas, and the 18th floor of Coolidge is helping out with this tree. (Staff photo by Laurie Traub)

Grads vote fair funding

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate (GSS) voted last night on several motions to appropriate funds requested by various campus groups.

One of the groups, the Toward Tomorrow Fair, was appropriated $350. The Toward Tomorrow Fair is a three-day exposition planned for June, 1977, and will consist of exhibits, speakers, workshops, panels, and debates. The objective of this fair is to create an educational setting where citizens can learn about social and technological alternatives, explore the concepts and issues involved, and make personal decisions and plan their future involvement in public policy debates.

Erna Koch, graduate student and fund raiser for the Toward Tomorrow Fair, wanted the funding to begin with the GSS to influence other student groups to contribute funds. She referred to the appropriation as, "An immediate contribution rather than a large one."

A motion was passed to allow $257 to the Toward Tomorrow Fair Video Series. This is a series of videotape presentations of speeches delivered by nationally renown Americans at the Toward Tomorrow Fair to enable the UMass community to review the future social possibilities presented this June at the fair.

The motion to appropriate $1,200 to the UMass Outing Club was defeated. The Outing Club requested these funds to buy land and construct a cabin for use by UMass to avoid current restrictions on the hiring of other universities' facilities.

The Socialist Education Committee of the Economics Graduated Student Organization (EGSO) was allotted a sum of $200 to support their planned lecture-workshop series. An amendment to that motion was made by Barbara Stack, secretary to the GSS which stated that no more than 50 per cent be allocated by the SEC-EGSO to white male speakers. This motion was defeated.

Michael R. Federow, president to the GSS, announced that the Graduate Student Representative to the Graduate Council of the Faculty Senate will be voted on Thursday by the Faculty Senate.

Without Doubt We Must WIN!

By ANGELA THOMAS

South Africa attorney Collins Ramusi spoke these words first in his own native language, and then in English, as he addressed a crowd of about 500 at a benefit concert in Amherst College gym this past Saturday, Dec. 11.

Ramusi expressed greetings to all, as he then talked about the struggle against the white racist minority regime of South Africa, a struggle that pits children of 4 to 20 years of age against the armed might of the minority regime. An armed might which consists of guns, armored cars, and tanks. With determination in every word that he spoke, Ramusi said, "Stop the killing of the children, stop the killing of the dreamers of freedom."

Calling for a moment of silence, in recognition of the murdered victims of the June 16 Soweto revolt, Ramusi asked the audience to stand. In the background on percussion UMass Prof. Max Roach played in tribute to the slayed children. After everyone was seated, Ramusi again asked the audience to stand in a second moment of silence. Ramusi told the crowd that Prof. Max Roach would again play in the background. With a steady beat of the drum, Prof. Max Roach in a touching symbolical gesture, drummed the slayed children on to meet their Creator.

The benefit concert was staged by the combined talents of UMass Professors Max Roach on percussion, Archie Shepp on reeds, and Hampshire College Prof. Vishnu Wood on bass.

An original composition by Prof. Max Roach entitled very appropriately, "It's Time" began the performance. The theme of the concert, "Come To Hear A Message," was indeed a message. The audience and musicians seemed to merge toward one another. Throughout the performance cries of "speak, speak" were directed at the musicians. While Prof. Vishnu Wood gave a solo on bass, Prof. Archie Shepp responded with "teach, teach".

Each in his own manner and style, delivered the message, it is time. Archie Shepp blew it, Max Roach drummed it, and Vishnu Wood strung the message home.

In what was a benefit concert for South Africa, was also a benefit for all.

A 'Giant' Evening

By ANGELA THOMAS

Saturday night, Dec. 11 at 8 p.m., there was a line up of legendary greats who performed in the Fine Arts Center. Such giants as Mary Lou Williamson piano, Dizzy Gillespie on trumpet, James Moody on reeds, and Jo Jones on percussion, thrilled a capacity audience.

Dizzy Gillespie and Jo Jones provided lighthearted humor throughout the night. An example of this was when Gillespie introduced the composition "Good Day" with "A one, a two, a you know what to do," directed at James Moody.

With more humorous foreplay and in the words of Gillespie, "Glad to be in an academic environment," the evening of giants got underway.

Tunes such as "Umoja Fiesta", and "Straight Note Chaser," brought appreciative responses from the audience. Solo performances by each artist received standing ovations. A high point of the night was the solo performance of Jo Jones. In a exhibition of skill and talent, Jones played the drums with three sticks, to an ecstatic audience's delight.

During intermission the brass band located high up in the rafters of the Fine Arts Center, performed Gillespie's "Salt Peanut," much to the surprise of Gillespie. Coming from behind stage, Gillespie yelled to the brass band "Do It Again!" In compliance, the band responded and the enjoyment of everyone present was apparent.

The "Evening of Giants" naturally ended with a giant standing ovation.

'A Blues Survey'

Charles "Majeed" Greenlee and Alden Griggs will be teaching an Afro-Am 155 course entitled "A Blues Survey" from January 3-21 over the intersession. The course will meet in Van Meter North from 1-4 p.m., Monday through Friday.

"A Blues Survey" is designed to trace the roots of the blues, from the history of Black people's existence in America to the early 1900's. Special focus will be given to such artists as Bessie Smith and Ma Rainey to contemporary artists like Aretha Franklin and B.B. King.

"A Blues Survey" is a three-credit, "C" core requirement, and students on financial aid can arrange to receive their aid over the intersession if they wish to take the class.

For further information see the Continuing Education Department or the Afro-Am Department office in New Africa House.

It's official!

Carter elected to presidency

(UPI) — Jimmy Carter was elected the 39th President of the United States yesterday by the Electoral College, carrying out a much criticized constitutional process begun because the founding fathers did not trust the citizens alone to do the job.

In 50 state capitals and the District of Columbia, 538 men and women met in brief ceremonies to do what 81 million Americans did Nov. 2. Their ballots were mailed off to Washington to be certified by Congress Jan. 6, two weeks before Carter's inauguration.

With most of the states reporting — the results appeared to be heading or an outcome identical to that in the election, giving Carter a margin of 297-241 over President Ford in the electoral vote. The Georgian won the popular vote by 1,681,417.

The same electors then cast their votes for vice president picking Democrat Walter Mondale over Republican Robert Dole.

The Electoral College continued to draw criticism, even from its participants.

Secretary of State Gloria Schaffer presided at the ceremonies in Hartford, Conn., and said the Electoral College was "a colonial anachronism awkwardly surfacing in modern America every four years" which should be done away with as soon as possible.

Commonwealth Secretary C. Delores Tucker said in Harrisburg, Pa. the Electoral College is "curiously archaic" because "a candidate could actually become president by winning the 11 largest states and not a single vote in any of the other 39 states."

Wisconsin electors voted to abolish the Electoral College.

Electoral college: obsolete?

'Mormon Will' may be fake

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The $2.5 billion "Mormon will" of Howard Hughes may be a forgery concocted by Utah gasoline station attendant Melvin Dummar which should be thrown out of court, an attorney who has pushed the document for months admitted Monday.

Harold Rhoden told a Los Angeles Superior Court that he had received "reliable information" that Dummar's fingerprint had been found on an envelope containing the purported will of the eccentric billionaire who died last April 5 while flying from Acapulco to Houston.

Rhoden, a lawyer acting for executor Noah Dietrich, a former Hughes aide, had been representing the will as probably authentic since it was found on a desk in the headquarters of the Mormon Church in Salt Lake City last April 29.

Dummar was left 1-16th of Hughes fortune — approximately $250 million — in the will. He professed it to be a total surprise but recalled that he picked up a scruffy old man in the Nevada desert in 1968 who identified himself as Hughes. He said he gave the man a quarter and forgot about it.

A battle had been shaping up for Jan. 10 in Las Vegas, Nev., on whether the "Mormon will" was genuine, with dozens of handwriting experts and others scheduled to testify.

A government source in Carson City, Nev., said Monday tests had shown a fingerprint on the envelope belonged to Dummar. Other fingerprints of Dummar were said to have been found on a book called "Hoax" and a 1971 Life magazine article about Hughes checked out of Weber State College at Ogden, Utah, where Dummar was enrolled in early 1976.

Rhoden said he would appear before Nevada district Judge Keith Hayes in Las Vagas Tuesday and present his information about the fingerprints.

Rhoden said he would ask that the matter be resolved quickly and that, if it was found that Dummar's fingerprint was on the envelope, he would withdraw the will from the probate and Dummar might be subject to criminal charges.

Dummar's attorney, Roger Dutson, told reporters in Ogden, Utah, Monday that Dummar never handled the envelope and suggested that if his fingerprint has been found it may have been placed there by someone interested in the vast fortune.

The "Mormon will" was one of a score submitted after Hughes' death but it was the only one so far deemed sufficiently authentic to be placed in probate.

Spanish kidnap leaves fear

Compiled from wires

MADRID, Spain — The government assigned guards to political figures and Premier Adolfo Suarez called off a trip to Barcelona yesterday in the crisis atmosphere brought on by the kidnaping of Spain's No. 4 government official.

After conferring with the king, Suarez ordered police protection for leading politicians and extra security for the cabinet. The precautions focused on leftist figures, indicating fears of a possible right-wing retaliation for the kidnaping.

But the nation was calm as it prepared to vote tomorrow on the king's political reform proposals. Suarez said Saturday's abduction was aimed at upsetting the national referendum, but it "has not succeeded and will not succeed."

Aides said that meant the government would not negotiate with the kidnapers of Antonio Maria Oriol, president of the Council of State and a member of the king's Council of the Realm.

The government's concern for Oriol's life and a possible backlash at the polls was reflected in Suarez' postponement of a referendum-eve visit to the Catalan region and in reports that both the political left and right had stepped up campaigns against the vote.

Oriol's family was secluded at the 63-year-old industrialist's suburban Madrid home, presumably waiting for the kidnapers to contact them.

After receiving two notes, one of them in Oriol's handwriting, police identified his abductors as a little-known radical leftist band called the First of October Anti-Fascist Resistance Group GRAPO, which took its name from the day four policemen were killed in Madrid in 1975.

Police reported no arrests and no clues two days after Oriol was snatched from his Madrid office Saturday.

GRAPO demanded the release of 15 political prisoners, including four of its members, in return for Oriol's safety. Six of the prisoners are Basque separatists and all are serving long sentences on convictions of terrorism.

Three of the Basques had death sentences commuted in 1971 by Spain's right-wing dictator, Gen Francisco Franco, before his death last year.

GRAPO is thought to have less than 30 members. It split from the banned Communist party in 1964, opting for violence as the way to a Marxist state in Spain.

They're at it again in Northern Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland [UPI] — Suspected Irish Republican Army bomb squads launched a pre-Christmas blitz against Belfast yesterday, blowing up a hotel, factory and several stores and killing at least one man.

Hijacked cars and trucks blocked all main roads and rail lines, and bombs were planted in some of the abandoned vehicles

A car left on the Ormeau Bridge, one of the city's main links to the south, exploded and blew a large crater in the pavement, and another bomb damaged the central bus terminal.

Police said the bomb offensive, the worst in Belfast since last spring, appeared to be aimed at frightening Christmas shoppers away from the city's usually crowded business center. The terrorists also have been trying to focus attention on the government's refusal to treat captured IRA guerrillas as political prisoners, which earns them better treatment in jail.

Only three days ago, police had stepped up security precautions in the city center after a similar blitz in Londonderry in which 13 shops were destroyed. But the bombers managed to get through the cordon.

Police said three armed men held up guards at the Lansdowne Lodge Hotel three miles north of the city center. Two of the assailants rushed upstairs and planted two bombs — one on an upper floor and one in the restaurant.

Socialists 'in' in Portugal?

LISBON, Portugal [UPI] — The Socialists' hopes for a significant victory rose Monday as late returns in Portugal's local government elections slowly increased their share of the national vote.

Prime Minister Mario Soares said the vote was "an indisputable victory" for the Socialist party's decision to rule alone despite opposition calls for a coalition government.

With 3,075 of the 4,035 villages and towns reporting, the Socialists were well ahead with 33.34 per cent of the vote.

Party sources said most of the outstanding votes were from the generally conservative north, but they could be offset by final tallies in Lisbon and the northern city of Oporto.

The centrist Social Democrats held 24.52 per cent of the vote and the Communist electoral front 18.43 per cent. The conservative Center Democrats came fourth with 15.56 while the remaining votes were shared among a variety of splinter groups.

MARIO SOARES apparent winner

Northern returns were expected to boost the Social Democrats and Center Democrats at the expense of the Communists who scored early gains from villages in the party's major southern stronghold of Alentejo.

The Socialists, who garnered 34.9 per cent of the vote in last spring's legislative assembly, went into the local elections expecting a top score of 32 per cent.

The election returns, whose flow was slowed by a temporary computer breakdown, indicated party lines were blurred in a number of villages where voters chose candidates for local popularity rather than party affiliation.

A significant trend was the diminished stength of the coalition of splinter groups to the left of the Communists.

Feds check out plane crash

FRAMINGHAM (AP) — The Federal Aviation Administration began an investigation yesterday into the crash landing of a small plane in a recreational area of an apartment complex housing approximately 200 persons.

The only persons reported injured in the crash were the plane's pilot, Arnold Zohn, 52, and his wife, Jacqueline, 48, a passenger on the twin-engine craft.

Both were reported to be in "very satisfactory" condition Monday at Framingham Union Hospital, and Zohn was praised for his skill in bringing the plane down without crashing into the two-story Windsor Green Apartments.

Zohn is vice president of the Library and Trade Publishing Division of the New York Times Corp.

The wings were torn from the plane, and its tail was badly damaged, but witnesses said the passenger section was virtually undamaged.

A Caddy it ain't...

MEDFORD (UPI) — Rocky Carzo, an assoicate protessor of physical education at Tufts University, says his "car is probably a reflection of the political state of the country at this time."

His battered Volkswagen "needs a new roof, two fenders are crushed, it presents a horrible appearance, but it runs well."

Like Carzo, nearly one out of two respondents to a poll of 23 faculty members conducted by the Tufts Criterion, the alumni magazine, recognized some correlation between their cars and their politics.

The Criterion said that above all else, "the individuality and ingenuity of some answers, both pro and con, indicate that an automobile can more likely than not stir an American to make a proclamation of some sort.

Duke asks cops to let Blue Laws pass

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis yesterday called for police to voluntarily stop enforcing the Blue Laws against Sunday sales because the laws "are crumbling of their own weight."

The governor's proposal was directly at odds with the position of Atty. Gen. Francis X. Bellotti, who earlier in the day called on police to enforce the laws.

The "confused, difficult and unfortunate state of affairs" requires that merchants not be prosecuted for Sunday sales until the state Supreme Court has ruled on the question, the governor said at a news conference.

The governor said he respects Bellotti's position as a defender of the state's laws, but Supreme Court Justice Herbert P. Wilkins already has indicated the laws are unconstitutional.

"Wilkins makes sense," Dukakis said, "and at least over two or three weeks it is the better part of wisdom not to prosecute."

Support MassPIRG

When MassPIRG led the fight to pass a Massachusetts Bottle Bill, Big Business got dirty (as usual) and went straight for PIRG's jugular: the negative check-off funding mechanism on the student semester fee bill.

The UMass trustees, recognizing the great value of PIRG's program and the high level of student support for it, voted to support the PIRG fee. collection agreement at their recent meeting.

But there is still another threat to PIRG on the horizon. And this time it isn't from Big Business... it's PIRG's own student constituency.

Amazingly, many students opt to not pay the two-dollar PIRG semester fee in an effort to trim their expenses. PIRG by-laws carry a self-destruct provision which terminates the collection agreement with the trustees if fewer than 50 per cent of students support the organization.

With its focus on public participation in the decision making process, PIRG has provided an avenue through which students have learned and employed the skills needed to accomplish change. PIRG has often been successful in prompting consideration of the public's interest and some important victories have been won for consumers.

Keep PIRG the viable, effective and cogent organization it has become. The two dollar fee is one of the few changes on the bill that can be regarded as an investment.

The Amherst Towing racket

By ROGER STURGIS

In an eight line letter that appeared in in these pages on Dec. 1, I requested that anyone who had been a victim of Amherst Towing call me and share their experience. The offer still goes and the number is the same: 253-2779.

Legal services meets this week to determine if they have the time and resources to bring a class action suit against Amherst Towing. Knowing that the student community can be counted on for active and vocal support will make their decision easier.

The Rates Division of the Department of Public Utilities in Boston told me that the MAXIMUM fee that Amherst Towing can charge is $12.85 for towing and $2.25 per day for storage. That's $15.10 total. Those of us who've been towed have invariably been tapped for $18, an extra three dollars for us individually, a small fortune for them.

If your car has been towed recently, inspect the front and rear fenders for damage. I've seen cars scraping the road as they've towed away. Check your door locks and windows for signs of forceable entry. They pried open my door, breaking the lock, but usually get in through a window. If you drive a Volkswagen, inspect the hood latch and glove compartment. If, in the last few years, you have reason to believe that your car has been damaged by Amherst Towing, file a small claims complaint against them at the courthouse in Northampton. There is a $4 filing fee that will be returned along with reimbursement for damages by the company. Don't worry about going to court. The procedure is informal, you simply tell your story and Amherst Towing tells theirs.

Keep your eyes and ears open for future developments. Develop plans for a student run towing service. Keep the tow trucks under surveillance when you see them on campus. Early next semester I'm going to blitz this place with bumper stickers and petitions demanding that they be quarantined from UMass. Show Amherst Towing you care.

If you're hungry, don't call Hungry-U!

To the Editor

I never thought I would see the day when I wished I had had dinner in the Dining Commons. I am writing this letter because I am outraged at the treatment which myself and my fellow students receive because we are a captive market. All this began when my suitemate and I tried to order a pizza from the Hungry-U. We called at 5:30 and ordered one large cheese pizza. Not a very hard order, right? Wrong!

At 7:15, nearly two hours later, I called back. He said our pizza was ready and would leave right away. I explained how long we had waited and asked how long the pizza had been sitting there. He said ten to fifteen minutes, not very long. I thought this was enough time for the pizza to get cold, so I asked for a fresh one. I was told to speak to the manager, which I did. I explained again and told him that if it did not come soon, we wouldn't accept it.

By 7:35, twenty minutes later, we were so hungry that we couldn't wait. After all, our stomachs had been waiting for food since 5:30. Giving up all hope of ever receiving our pizza, I finally broke down and bought a grinder.

At 7:55, when I had finished my grinder, Hungry-U's delivery boy called to say that our pizza was in the lobby. By that point we had no alternative but to send it back. To top off all this aggravation, I then received a call from the irate manager, who told me not to order a pizza there again, as if I ever would anyway. But, before I could reply, he hung up.

I just think that those establishments that conduct their businesses around the Universities, ought to treat us like the paying customers that we are, and deliver decent goods and services for our money. After all, pizza at $3.50 is not exactly a give-a-way!

Title IX interpretation

To the Editor:

It is important to correct the mis-representation of statements I made at the Community Development Center's Title IX hearing last week. I did NOT say and it is NOT true that Title IX could potentially ABOLISH Women's and Men's Centers on campus. It is true that it may have serious implications for the PRACTICES of these groups.

With few exceptions (Social sororities and fraternities and voluntary youth service organizations), programs operated by institutions cannot (under Title IX) provide different benefits or services, or treat students differently on the basis of sex. However, the regulations does not prohibit (or require) affirmative action. Programs aimed at women (or men) need not be abolished, although some modification may be needed.

These modifications could, if Title IX is interpreted strictly according to the letter of the law, make it illegal for women's and men's centers to offer programs for one sex only. However, some people maintain that single sex activities can continue to be supported for "affirmative action" purposes. What is causing the confusion is that Title IX is essentially neutral on Affirmative Action. As noted above, it neither prohibits nor requires it.

It is unfortunate that a law that is intended to be, and is, so far reaching in its potential for ending discrimination against WOMEN in education, has at the same time, effectively neutralized sex, thereby leaving open challenges on the basis of EITHER male or female. It is already evident that when this happens, the emphasis on the very real problem of discrimination against women is obscured by bringing attention to the possible illegality of those programs and services which are currently one of the few effective vehicles through which women can achieve personal and educational equity.

The women's centers and the men's center on campus are currently offering sensitive and concrete programs which are enabling many people to grow beyond the limits of sex-role stereotyping, which, after all, is what Title IX is all about. There are many more critical, damaging and obvious practices being supported by this institution which result in women being educationally, economically and personally disadvantaged and I urge more attention to and coverage of these issues in the hope that Title IX can become an effective tool in the struggle to correct them.

Preserve White Mountains

To the Editor:

All who backpack should immediately write to: "Hiker", Box 638, White Mountain National Forest, Laconia, N.H. 03246 and ask for a copy of the policy statements just issued by the White Mountain National Forest in regards to the future of trails and undeveloped areas in the Forest. You have until January 15, 1977, to comment on these policies, many of which are restrictive and reflect on elitist attitude fostered by old line outdoor organizations, such as the Appalachian Mountain Club, which were very much involved in the development of the policies.

The White Mountain National Forest belongs to the people, not to the Forest Service, nor the Appalachian Mountain Club. Don't just sit back and let the forest be taken away from you. At least send for the proposed policies, and send in your comments.

We all have a responsiblity to protect our rights from the government. If we want to preserve the White Mountains for the future, elitist and exploitive policies are not the answer. Write to "Hiker" and give your feedback.

Semester in review:

Floating in apathy?

I came rushing in here to do this. Excuse me, yes I did come in here wearing an old sweater but, you know, it's exam time. End of semester time and all the good habits and particularness about everything have all come down over a sixteen week period, down to a dead halt.

Sixteen weeks — could it actually be that long that we've been here? One semster, another semester done already, 76 Collegians printed, 76 issues of news. So, what's happened here at UMass? Sorry to say, but not all that much.

Maybe we're just floating in apathy?

I came here in September expecting faculty to unionize. I waited patiently until the elections were announced for Dec. 1 and 2. But, the issue has been carried on to next semester: a run-off election for Feb. 2 and 3. Can't even faculty make up their mind? And the campaign.... talk about uneventful...

Pornography issue... that all started last semester, I remember. I talked to a few people, then. Yah, they said, we'll probably see some real action on it coming down next semester. Well, here it is next semester and all that's come down is a "lights-out" Southwest Assembly meeting, some bickering over in Central, and Scarlet Allen and Albert Sparks are still holding hands in the Campus Center. (I saw them yesterday around noontime.) So, can porno films be shown on campus or not? I still don't know. Will I have to wait until next semester — again?

The Student Government is still there, you know. Yes, I know you've been wondering where they went. The largest news draws — Ellen Gavin, Henry Ragin, and some other personalities on the Student Organizing Project (SOP) — have faded away from the University. Now all that's left are Brian DeLima, student senate speaker who's an exchange student from Hawaii and Karl Allen who serves as head of Governmental Affairs. But Brian will call you out of motion anytime with an iron fist and Karl, well, Karl's trying to be a first semester freshperson for the second time and moves too quickly to be followed.

But, Student Government doesn't do anything anyway. It is fun to see them "act" as if they do, no matter. Will next semester provide for more personalities to photograph and spice up the news pages?

The SOP: now that's where things can and should be really happening, No — we're not unionized yet — but still working on it — but quietly this time — for a change.

It's a hard thing to rally 19,000 students whose faces are constantly changing into a structured, decentralized, coalition of coalitions to fight racism, sexism, and even the Portuguese oppressed on the Azores Island ... when all we clearly need is a lobbying agent up on Beacon Hill. That would make excellent headlines.

As all others, the issue of unionization will be put off until next semester. We've got to hear from them next semester with upcoming Student Tax Fund Budgeting Reviews. They have to prove their need for $52,000.

And the statehouse will push off the bill to investigate the possibility of student unionization at least until next year. What about in two years? Will I be sitting here again, thinking about my own graduation, my last finals week as an undergraduate, and still wondering when they'll be a union for students?

The Collegian office has been awfully quiet this semester, too. We haven't had too many visitors, probably because our offices, now hidden below the campus center concourse, are hard to reach. Now, all the worthy complaints of sexism and racism are being vented toward the Distinguished Visitor's Program, still on the Student Union balcony, still easy to reach. Poor Ellyn! Should they really get all that grief? Maybe we, sitting in our dungeon offices, the Collegian, will hear and see some more action next semester that we should see and hear.

Graduate students — call it the Graduate Student Employees Union — their hearings have also been carried on till next semester.

And sounds, again, as if all the "news" will break next semester.

So, what can I say, but next semester could be — could possibly be if things work out alright — a media event: spring fever for student, faculty and administration activism. Or, have we said goodbye to anything resembling the sixties and settled back to studies and worrying about the future, dreaming over a whiskey sour or brandy alexander at the TOC? Maybe we're just floating in apathy... inevitably.

But news is a developing thing. Activities and news events build to a "happening", add to a society developing, gradually changing to adapt to new ideologies. Maybe fall semester, 1976 is just this. An aftermath of the media splurge on the bicentennial, aftermath of Ford's plunder letting Nixon get off free, or maybe the fact that there just was more of an interest in real world politics than the campus' make us appear to be just floating in apathy. Maybe we really are floating to something.

Somehow I doubt it. But why does it happen? Why does it keep on happening? Is it that this place is just too large to change? Is it the fact that people have different opinions on how and what things should be done and all these differerences of opinion just stop everything — we try so hard to please everyone? Or what?

Maybe next semester will be different. Maybe next semester we can say something happened and not just something will happen. Maybe next semester we won't be floating in apathy. Maybe next semester... I just certainly hope so (and am preparing for disappointment).

commentary

Whose comfort at whose expense?

By PAUL J. WOLF

Cincinnati vs. Oakland. Female vs. Male. Porn vs. Non-porn. Plessey vs. Ferguson. Black vs. White. Paul Wolf vs. The University. Two articles ago I wrote a commentary that had something to do with the judicial system at the University, in which I made accusations against the Dean of students. However, after a brief conversation with the Dean (who denied the accusations) I investigated further, and as it turned out I had accused the wrong dean (there are many at the University you know). My apologies to the Dean of students.

There are a few rumors about the campus center that should be cleared up. For example, why are the escalators turned on only when there is a conference of some sort in progress and are off the rest of the time? The way I see it is, these conferees are dollar signs to the campus center. They pay to use the meeting rooms, they pay full price at the campus center hotel. In general they pay to use the Campus Center, so the Campus Center in turn makes them more comfortable by keeping the escalators on when they are in the building.

I imagine that in the younger days of the Campus Center, the escalators were left on day in, day out and then some ecology nut came in and bitched, so the Campus Center was glad to turn them off... when a conference was not in progress. In my eyes the escalators should either be used all the time or not at all. Schroeder (on the comic strip Peanuts) has a philosophy that I feel would be appropriate to apply here and that is "if I can't have it... no one can"

However, the Campus Center has done their part in conserving electricity. On the first, third, tenth and eleventh floors of the Campus Center they are only using half the amount of lights they would normally use. If you look at the peripheral lights (the ones on the ceiling against the wall) you will notice that only every other one is working. Do they turn all of them on when a conference is using the building? If they can do it with the lights they can do it with the escalators.

The students here are paying more for the use of that building than are the conferees, therefore should we not be entitled to equal if not more use of the facilities, including the escalators? I'm not saying give the building completely to the students but at least be fair about it.

The escalators are not the only thing that is being used exclusively for the conferees. Other rumors I've heard are: 1) That the conferees were complaining about the Hare Krishnas — you don't see them around any more... do you? Don't misunderstand me, I'm not defending the Hare Krishnas, I'm defending the students. 2) When there is a conference at the Campus Center the muzak that is usually piped in is kept at such a low volume one would need a hearing aid to adequately hear it. Merely one more example of how the conferees run a building that is supposed to be at least partially for students use.

My final example is: Recently an acquaintance of mine was arrested in the Campus Center for possession of marijuana and I overheard an official remark something to the effect of the conferees find the odor of marijuana and hashish offensive and that they (officials) will be patrolling the marijuana smoking commonplaces every hour (which I doubt will happen).

Yes the law is against him, yes he was guilty. But the point here is that if the conferees were not catered to as if they were superior to the students, this whole thing would not have occurred. If I were to call the officials and tell them that someone in my dorm was smoking pot, I doubt very much that they would come and put him in the cooler.

Students ask yourself the following questions: Do I pay some thirty odd dollars per semester for someone else's comfort, or perhaps a better way of putting it would be, Do I shell out thirty bucks to be discriminated against, to pay for a building that when you are inside it you know whether it is raining out because of the numerous leaks in the ceiling? Need the university remind each student one more time that he-she is just one morsel of shit in this huge toilet?

People have asked me if I don't like it here then why do I stay? I stay because if I didn't go to school I would probably end up pumping gas and drinking beer the rest of my life and getting psorosis of the liver. Why should I do that now when I can graduate, and pump gas with an animal science degree and get psorosis of the liver later?

For my first two years of college I went to a Junior college because of financial reasons, then transferred up here where an education is relatively inexpensive compared to other schools, but still costs a large amount of money.

It is outright unfair that our money pays for someone else's comfort at the expense of ours.

Snowy day procedures

The major objective of snow removal activities at times of severe storms is to make it possible to hold classes and conduct all University activities in as normal a way as possible. Since a large number of the faculty, staff, and student population normally bring cars onto campus, it is important for all concerned to understand clearly what policies and procedures will be followed in the event of a severe storm that temporarily limits parking capacity on campus.

Classes and all other scheduled activities on campus will be held as usual unless a specific announcement is made to the contrary beginning at 6 a.m. and continued periodically on the day in question. Such announcements will be made on radio stations WTTT-Amherst, WHMP-Northampton, WHAI-Greenfield, WARE-Ware, WCAT-Orange, WHYN-Springfield, WFCR-Amherst, WTIC-Hartford, WACE-Springfield, WTAG-Worcester, WSPR-Spirngfield, and WMUA-Amherst. It is important that you stay tuned to your radio for additional information in the event of a change. DO NOT CALL THE UNIVERSITY FOR THIS INFORMATION.

In order to facilitate snow removal, parking will be prohibited in the lots listed below between the hours of 1:00 a.m. and 7:00 a.m., from December 1 to April 1, as provided for in the Motor Vehicle Regulations Manual approved by the Board of Trustees on August 6, 1975. In addition, as provided for in the regulations, no overnight parking will be permitted on any roadway except Thatcher Way.

Overnight parking is specifically prohibited on the Lot 50 horseshoe in Southwest and the Lot 47 roadway circling the Sylvan area. Overnight parking in the Stadium peripheral lot is restricted to the back (west) portion of the lot. Overnight parking will continue to be available in lots other than those listed below:

- Lot 62 (south of Clark Hall)
- Lot 63 (west of Worcester Dining Hall)
- Lot 40 (north of Boyden)
- Lot 25 (south of Access Road to peripheral lot and the adjacent peripheral lot)
- Lot 65 (located between Stockbridge and Engineering buildings)
- Lot 26 (west of Engineering and Physics Shop)
- Lot 31 (north and east of Engineering and Physics Shop)
- Lot 66 (north of School of Education)
- Lot 34 (south of Whitmore)
- Lot 71 (west of Whitmore)

Every effort will be made to keep the bus service operating. Snow day schedule changes will be announced on WTTT-AM and WMUA-FM. Call 545-2086 for operating schedules during snow storms.

It is strongly recommended that anyone who normally brings a car onto campus consider making use of the University bus service during periods of heavy snow storms.

In event that Snow days occur during final exams or on Registration Day, the following alternate schedule is established.

Alternate Final Exams

In addition to the four periods of exams (8:00 a.m., 10:30 a.m., 1:30 p.m. and 4:00 p.m.) two additional alternate exam periods are established at 6:30 p.m. and 8:45 p.m. By using two successive days of alternate periods, one day of exams — four periods — can be rescheduled in the same order into the alternate periods e.g. periods one and two (8:00 a.m. and 10:30 a.m.) into the alternate periods (6:30 p.m. and 8:45 p.m.) of the same day and periods three and four (1:30 p.m. and 4:00 p.m.) into the alternate periods (6:30 p.m. and 8:45 p.m.) of the next regularly scheduled final exam days. The same rooms are assigned in all cases.

The automatic rescheduling of exams is — period nine (8:30 a.m., 12-18) will be held at 6:30 p.m., 12-18; period ten (10:30 a.m., 12-18) at 8:45 p.m., 12-18; period eleven (1:30 p.m., 12-18) at 6:30 p.m. 12-20 and period twelve (4:00 p.m., 12-18) at 8:45 p.m., 12-20.

Registration Day. In the event that the University-Amherst campus is closed for registration on January 24, Graduate Registration will take place in the same location on January 25 between the hours of 9:00 a.m. and 1:00 p.m. Undergraduate and Stockbridge registration will take place at the originally scheduled time and place on January 25. First day of classes will be held as scheduled on January 25, 1976. In the event that the University-Amherst campus is closed until 11:00 a.m. for registration, Graduate, Undergraduate and Stockbridge registration will take place in the same location commencing at 11:30 a.m.

The Snow Day Announcements have been amended during the final exam period and on registration day to reflect the above and are listed below. The following is how the announcements will be made on the radio.

Wet Ice

By KOLD FEET

The reflecting pools of the Fine Arts Center will be flooded today in preparation of the First Annual Christmastime Ice Skating party Wednesday evening.

Coordinators of the skating party request skaters to stay off the new ice until the party officially starts at 6 p.m. adding 'the ice needs to time to harden and cure, the longer the skaters refrain from double axil spins, the smoother the ice.'

Lights and skating music are being provided. Hot food and beverages will be available. The skating party is open to all. Parents are invited to bring their children.

An interstellardialectic communication from the North Pole indicates that Santa Claus will be at the skating party.

Your Birthday
by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, December 14 — Born today, you are one of those insistent individuals who refuses to give up even when the finger of fate seems to be indisputably pointing to failure. And because you refuse to give up, you often win out in the end. Those last-ditch efforts that others are inclined to make fun of often ultimately place you in a position of envy, bringing you as they do the prize you sought. Not one to keep to yourself whatever benefits your efforts bring, you generously share with others — even with those who may have refused to come to your aid when it was obviously needed — whatever good fortune comes your way. Conversely, you seem quite willing to take upon yourself those ills and blames that are at times unavoidable.

Not one to think absolutely about things, you find it an easy matter to change your mind should signs indicate that a change is in order. You will stick to your guns where principle is involved, but otherwise, you will develop your own activities out of what seems most practical, most profitable and, at the same time, honorable. Quick to read circumstances insofar as their implications are concerned, you know when it is feasible to remain on course and when a sensible retreat is the better part of valor. When, however, you see any sign of success in the offing, you will keep to your established course.

You know how to work — but you also know how to play. And, in fact, it is your ability to rest, relax, let down your hair and forget about worry, objects, aims, goals and so on that most guarantees you success.

Wednesday, December 15

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Unless you are able to dispose of the results of poor effort and interest, you may be judged on much less than you can achieve.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — An invitation to a social gathering could lead to financial gain in the near future. Accept another's offer of help.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — The aiding and abetting of your business affairs belongs in the hands of experts. Don't give away a sure thing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — You can progress with great speed today — if you are wise enough to recognize rewards for effort when you see them.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Health conditions may not be quite up to par at the present time. Investigate an offer for new gain on the employment scene.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Strength and energy bring you more than your share of success today. Don't worry about the impression you are making at this time.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Defective judgment on another's part may cause you to lose out on what you thought was a sure thing. Take your time laying blame.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — This is an excellent time for impressing others with the high degree of your tact. Be diplomatic.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Important decisions must be made on the basis of reason — but with a good lacing of emotional response added in. Rest in the evening.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Recent changes in your life-style may not suit you as much as you thought they would. Reconsider decisions involving the entire family.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Avoid any disputes over jointly held property. This may be the time for you to be more generous than usual.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Any estrangement from a member of the opposite sex is not to be taken as permanent. Seek a meeting of minds late in the day.

FAC concert to feature UM chorale

The UMass Chorale, Richard du Bois, conductor, will present Ortorino Respighi's "Laud to the Nativity" tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

The concert is open to the public without charge.

Student soloists will be Marcy Reed Benoit, soprano; Holly Joy Warner, soprano; and Stas Radosh, tenor.

For the "Laud to the Nativity", the Chorale will be accompanied by the Wind Ensemble, which will also perform the Serenade in D, Opus 44, by Anton Dvorak, John Jenkins, conductor.

Continuing Ed to sponsor workshops

A series of five workshops on topics relevant to the functioning of school committees will be offered during January and February by the UMass Division of Continuing Education.

Such areas as the working relationship between the superintendent and school committee, financial decisions in inflationary times, public participation, collective bargaining, dealing with controversy, and the relationship between school committes and the state will be covered through informal panel and group discussions.

Workshops will be in Lenox, Huntington, Easthampton, North Adams, and Greenfield. They are open to school committee members and other interested citizens.

Further information and registration materials for Wintersession courses and Credit-Free Workshops may be obtained or from Catalog Request, P.O. Box 835, Amherst 01002, from Continuing Education, Hills House North on the UMass campus.

WMUA election for program director

There will be an election for the position of program director of WMUA tonight at 8:00 in 805 Campus Center.

At this time, candidates will be talking with the voting members of the station, and votes will be cast. Please be prompt, and please come. A quorum is needed for the decision to be final, and it would be nice if the new PD had a chance to get used to his new duties before we all come back to school. If there is absolutely no way to make it in for the election, please submit an absentee ballot. They are available from Charlie Pellett, and a written excuse must be filed concurrently.

Program Council seeks musical 'time'

The Program Council Music Committee has been sponsoring a Coffeehouse in the Student Union, which has met with limited success.

We would like to bring music not generally found on this campus, such as bluegrass, ragtime, blues, Celtic, etc., to the Coffeehouse, but in order to do this we need people willing to put some time into it.

If you are, or might be, one of these people, there will be a meeting for you in Room 415 Student Union today at 6:30 p.m.

Exchange program to feature speaker

Edwin Cox, Overseas Relations Officer of the University of Sussex, England, will be on campus tomorrow to speak with students interested in spending their junior year at Sussex. He will also be able to talk to students wishing to go to other British universities. The meeting will be held in the third floor lounge of Herter Hall from 3 to 5 p.m.

UMass undergraduates are eligible to apply for full year academic exchange programs with foreign universities under the auspices of the International Programs Office. Participating institutions are: the Universities of Lancaster, Sussex, East Anglia, Keele, Kent, Stirling, Northeast London Polytechnic, several Colleges of Higher Education (Bulmersche College, Froebel Institute, and Southlands College); University College, Cork, in Ireland; the University of Victoria, British Columbia in Canada and the University of Lagos in Nigeria.

Applicants should be sophomores and juniors with at least a 3.0 cumulative average. The exchanges are open to students in the humanities, social sciences, natural sciences, education and fields of applied technology. The cost of the programs should not exceed that of a year at the home institution. The International Programs Office, located in 239 Whitmore, has catalogues and other information about participating institutions. Interested students should call 545-0746 or drop by the International Programs Office to arrange for a preliminary interview.

Jones, OJ head up AFC star team

NEW YORK [UPI] — Bert Jones, the young star who solidified his team early in the season and led Baltimore to the Eastern Division title for the second straight year, headed a group of seven Colts selected yesterday to United Press International's 1976 American Football Conference All-Star team.

Jones, who interceded with management for the return of coach Ted Marchibroda when he was fired just before the start of the season, received 29 votes to easily outdistance Oakland's Ken Stabler at quarterback. Stabler received just five as runnerup from the 42-man voting board, composed of three writers from each of the 14 AFC cities.

Joining Jones from the Colt offense were running back Lydell Mitchell, the leading vote-getter with 32, wide receiver Roger Carr, tackle George Kunz and placekicker Toni Linhart. Named from the Colt defense were end John Dutton and tackle Joe Ehrmann.

Buffalo's O.J. Simpson, who finished strong to win the NFL rushing title for the fourth time in the last five years, nosed out Pittsburgh's Franco Harris by one vote for the other running back slot.

Oakland, the Western Division champion at 13-1, the best record in the NFL, and Pittsburgh, which closed with a nine-game winning streak to overtake Cincinnati for the Central title, each placed four players on the team.

Named from Oakland were wide receiver Cliff Branch, tight end Dave Casper, tackle Art Shell and punter Ray Guy. All four Steelers named were defensive players — outside linebacker Jack Ham, middle linebacker Jack Lambert, cornerback Mel Blount and strong safety Mike Wagner.

Also chosen on the offensive line were New England's John Hannah and Buffalo's Joe Delamielieure at guard and Jim Langer of Miami at center.

Cincinnati's Coy Bacon, who had a league-high 26 quarterback sacks, was named at the other defensive end and Cleveland's Jerry Sherk joined Ehrmann at tackle.

Robert Brazile of Houston was the pick at the remaining outside linebacker slot and rookie sensation Mike Haynes of New England joined Blount at cornerback as both edged out Cincinnati's Ken Riley. Tommy Casanova of the Bengals was named at free safety.

Oakland and Pittsburgh also had five players each named to the second team and Cincinnati had four selected.

Jones passed for 24 touchdowns this season and Carr caught 11 of them. Mitchell caught three TD passes and ran for five more as the Colts finished 11-3. Simpson set an NFL record on Thanksgiving day with a 273-yard effort, the best single game rushing performance ever, and edged Walter Payton of Chicago on the final day of the season for the rushing title.

Casper caught 10 TD passes for the Raiders and teammate Branch pulled in 12 as he again went over 1,000 yards in receiving, including six games of 100 yards or more.

Evert earns SI accolades

NEW YORK [UPI] — Chris Evert, the dominant figure in women's professional tennis, beat out a long list of Olympic Gold medalists and crashed a previously male-dominated circle yesterday when she was named Sportswoman of the Year by Sports Illustrated magazine.

In a year that was dominated by outstanding performances by women athletes, the editors of Sports Illustrated selected the 21-year-old Evert over such outstanding female performers as Romanian gymnast Nadia Comaneci, gold medal figure skater Dorothy Hamill and West German skier Rosi Mittermaier plus male stars such as baseball's Joe Morgan, basketball's Julius Erving and Olympic decathlon champion Bruce Jenner.

The award, given annually since 1954, is based not only on performance but for "symbolizing in character and performance the ideals of sportsmanship." Evert is only the second woman ever to receive the award and the first to receive it outright. Billie Jean King, who preceded Evert as queen of women's tennis, tied ex-UCLA basketball coach John Wooden for the award in 1972.

"I was more surprised than anyone," said Evert. "Whenever there is an Olympic year someone comes out of the woodwork who gets a lot of publicity. Nadia Comaneci and Dorothy Hamill got a lot of publicity. In my mind it was a woman's year. I think the public is beginning to appreciate women athletes more than ever."

While stars like Hamill, Comaneci, Mittermaier, speed-skater Sheila Young, golfer Judy Rankin and swimmer Kornelia Ender all grabbed headlines during the year, no one dominated a sport like Evert.

A winner of the prestigious Wimbledon and Forest Hills tournaments, Evert earned $375,000 on the circuit last year. Over the last three seasons she has won 44 of the 62 tournaments she has entered and earned a reputation as one of sports' most intense competitors.

"I wanted to win badly ever since I was 10 years old," she says. "Even when I'm just playing tennis at home with my brother or sister, I'm obnoxious on the court. Many times my dad would leave the court because he doesn't believe how competitive we can be. At home when I play with my family I can let off steam. There's no pressure then."

Evert says she is able to withstand the extreme pressures of the women's circuit because she takes a break from the grind about once a month.

Evert's reign is likely to continue for quite some time. King has already given up tournament singles play and Evonne Goolagong, perhaps Evert's toughest rival, will be giving up the circuit next year to raise a family.

Crusaders captured classic but PC, UM worthy foes

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

The long-awaited return of college basketball to the "new" Boston Garden is over, but it should not be forgotten. But before the Colonial Classic blurs into a collage of Ronnie Perry jumpers and Bob Cooper moves to the hoop, it would be wise to take a look at everything that went on.

First, team by team:

HOLY CROSS — The Crusaders cannot be denied New England's number one spot. But both UMass and Providence proved that the Cross can be beaten — the space separating the three is very minute. But the Crusaders were winners — somehow they did the job the others could not.

Mike Vicens, the tourney MVP, was more than impressive. And Perry lived up to expectations, with a very pretty jump shot, and some very smart play.

PROVIDENCE — Cooper received the Outstanding Individual Player trophy which differs somehow from MVP. He and Bruce Campbell were amazing up front. When Bob Miscivicius and Bill Eason return from academic probation, Joe Hassett will be able to move back to guard, and the Friars will be immense.

BOSTON COLLEGE — A tournament is only as strong as its weakest team, or something like that. If the Eagles had been replaced by UConn or Rhode Island, the fans would have been treated to four great games, not just two. Only standout for BC was center Bob Bennifield, who scored 28 points against PC and 24 in the consolation rout by UMass.

UMASS — Where does one begin? A 13-point second half lead gets wiped away, and the game is lost in overtime. An awful disappointment, sure, but don't get down on the Minutemen. They played some of the best basketball and particularly some of the best defense in the tournament.

How does one explain such a loss? The Minutemen suffer a few serious weaknesses. Alex Eldridge and Derick Claiborne played 44 and one half minutes each, Jim Town played 40 against the Crusaders. The Minutemen were dead long before the overtime period rolled around.

"We need to get in better shape, and we have to get another guard ready," said coach Jack Leaman. Right now that would mean much more work for Brad Johnson or Chuck Steveskey, which may happen next Saturday against Fordham, a team that lost to Boston University.

The tournament itself was well-run, and fairly well-attended. But had it not been for the large Holy Cross contingent, attendance would not have approached the 9000 average, and people would now be giving up on the future of college hoop at the Garden.

Speaking of which, there's the subject of the "new" Boston Garden. Don't be fooled — it still looks like the old one, it smells like the old one, and it features only a coat of rather putrid yellow paint.

In any case, the fans were treated to some outstanding basketball. Nobody can complain about an overtime game and a finale that's decided at the buzzer. Holy Cross fans went away elated, PC fans a bit disappointed but satisfied, and BC fans never expected much to begin with.

For UMass fans, it was a bitter disappointment. For the players, it was even more painful because there'll be no second shot, at the Crusaders. Mike Pyatt's Dunkin' Donuts Dunk award was little consolation, nor was an easy win over BC for third place..

But there was more than a small sign of life, and when the tournament that counts rolls around next March, you may very well hear a lot out of this UMass team.

Upset-minded gymmen nipped by Lions

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. — The UMass men's gymnastics team came within .35 of a point against Penn St., and nearly upset one of the top men's gymnastics team in the East this weekend. Penn State's come-from-behind heroics managed to defeat the upset-minded UMass gymmen, 198.40-198.05 in a dual meet held at Penn State's Recreation Hall.

The Minutemen's loss marks the second time in the span of one week that the gymmen lost a meet by less than one point. A week ago last Saturday, the Minutemen lost a heartbreaker to the Cadets of Army by only one-tenth of a point.

UMass carried a 167.50-165.65 lead into the final event of the meet, the horizontal bar. Once again, as in the Army meet, the Minutemen weren't able to hold onto their lead following the horizontal bar performances. Penn St. outscored the Minutemen on the horizontal bars, 32.75-30.55 to cap a successful come-from-behind victory drive.

The Minutemen got off to a rather auspicious start in the meet, as Penn St. quickly took a 35.35-33.15 after the first event, the floor exercise.

But after the floor exercise, the Minutemen began to dominate the meet until the very end. In the pommel horse, Dave Kulakoff once again led all scores with a score of 8.95. UMass co-captains Angelo Scuderi and Paul Marks also turned in fine performances for the Minutemen with scores of 8.3 and 8.4 respectively, leading the way for the UMass gymmen to win the pommel horse competition.

UMass increased its lead in the still rings competition behind Scuderi's 8.65, and further increased its lead following the vaulting competition. The vaulting proved to be the Minutemen's strongest event, as three individuals scored 9.0 or above. Paul Marks scored a 9.15, John Forsay had a 9.10 and Steve Marks had a even 9.0.

Possessing a 135.25-134.25 lead after the first four events, UMass carried its momentum into its weakest event, the parallel bars. However, based on the performances, the parallel bars proved to be little trouble for the UMass gymmen as they won the event, 32.25-31.40.

Top all-around performers for the Minutemen were Paul Marks (50.45) and Angelo Scuderi (47.95).

Hoopwomen seek home triumph

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's basketball team will be looking for its first home win tonight as it returns to the Cage to battle Central Connecticut.

The Minutewomen, coming off an impressive 81-62 victory at Vermont, will attempt to combine the same pressure defense and balanced scoring to overpower Central as they did against the Catamounts.

Tonight's game is the last until well into intersession for the Minutewomen. They have every incentive to win. By defeating Central, UMass can achieve a winning record, a two-game winning streak, and a victory before the home court fans. The Minutewomen can also avenge last year's heartbreaking 87-86 loss to Central.

Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski, without having seen Central play yet this season, emphasized that her team will not have an easy time. "Central Connecticut is not a very tall team, but they are a quick, fast team. They are similar to us in that way," she said.

Central is not a team to be taken lightly, as it showed in a recent 77-44 rout over UConn. Coach Brenda Reilly's team finished at 10-7 last season, taking ninth place in the Eastern regional tournament.

Central returns all but one starter from last season's team, and several promising freshmen make the squad look even more powerful. The top veterans include Connie Clabby, last year's leading scorer, Janice Stanczyk, last year's top rebounder, and Terry Moylan.

"To defeat Central," Ozdarski said, "we'll have to use the same pressure defense which upset Vermont so much. We have to force turnovers as well as cutting down on our own. We improved against Vermont (17 turnovers compared to UVM's 29) but we still have to work hard."

Vermont coach Jean Condon, a UMass graduate, said after Saturday's game, "UMass plays a lot of people and they can all play well. UMass has excellent depth."

Ozdarski commented about this depth, "Everyone on this team has the ability to score. We need a lot of people to play if our pressure defense and running game is going to be effective. What I liked about Saturday's game was that we blocked out and rebounded well as well as forcing turnovers. Our defense looked much better."

She also noted that the Minutewomen are developing into a team. "There's more confidence in the individuals now," she said, "and that confidence among the players projects itself to more confident team play."

Ozdarski was quick to point out the dangers of overconfidence after a big victory, however. "We can't sit on any victory," she commented. "Every game is going to be tougher and tougher to win."

You can find out how tough it will be for the Minutewomen to win tonight at 7:30 in the Cage. The varsity game will follow the JV's debut at 5:30. The JV's, coached by Pam Rietscel, will also face Central Connecticut.

In addition to providing support for the Minutewomen, Coach Ozdarski mentioned another reason why she'd like to see more fans there. "We'd like to see more people at the games because it's cold in that gym," she smiled. "We need people to warm the place up and make a little noise. If no one comes we might have to play in snow suits and galoshes."

An academic lag but sports galore

This being the end of the semester and all, I suppose the only thing most people have on their minds right now is whether or not they can pull another all-nighter, survive another cup of Hatch coffee, or stop dreaming about those five weeks off when they should be studying calculus.

But for those of us who have one-track minds (such as yours truly) the mind eventually begins to wander around to sports once again. And believe me, right now there's a lot to think about.

For example, the pro football playoffs will begin to get underway next week, and will climax in the Super-Duper Bowl in January in Pasadena, California. By the way, I wonder what'll happen when the Roman numerals for that annual snoozeville game get long and tricky. You know, such as Super Bowl XXXVIII. That's pretty silly, Mr. Rozelle, don't you think?

But aside from the pro football scene, pro basketball and hockey will really get into the swing of things in the next few weeks. Many people and teams will be closely watched. Dr. J's success with his new team and vice-versa, the saga of the New York Knicks and Bob McAdoo, the movement of Dave Cowens, and the different divisional races will be carefully scrutinized.

So it has been established that the pros will be making a lot of noise come January. But what of the colleges?

All right, let's start big. As Curt Gowdy will probably say at least 5,000 times between now and January first, the "granddaddy of them all," the Rose Bowl, will be held in Pasadena (preceding the Super Bowl by about a week).

The pride of the Midwest, Michigan, will take on the hope of the West Coast, USC. (And doesn't it seem weird that Ohio State's not there this year?)

But the Buckeyes won't by staying home this season, anyway, as they'll be taking on Colorado in the Orange Bowl. While that battle is being waged, the Sugar Bowl will pit my man, Tony Dorsett, along with his Pitt Panthers, against the "junkyard dogs" from Georgia.

In probably the least publicized of all the bowls, Southwestern Conference champ Houston will be playing the undefeated Maryland Terrapins. Two basically unknown quantities will be putting on a show, and it should be interesting to see what happens.

Of course, college basketball will also go into full bloom. After the various and sundry Holiday Classics are disposed with, lots of good games will be forthcoming. National television coverage also begins during the initial month of the new year.

While the rest of the college campuses will be somewhat active in January, UMass also has some athletic planned.

The men's basketball team has six games slated over intersession. Beginning with a Springfield Civic Center game against Duquesne on January 6, the Minutemen will be playing, in order, Providence, Connecticut, Villanova, Niagara, and Vermont. All of those games, incidentally, will be played away from home. Those contests will go a long way in determining which direction the Minutemen b-ballers will take this year.

The women hoopsters also have a few games scheduled for over the break. The Minutewomen will be facing Rhode Island on January 17, and just before classes begin again, they'll spend a weekend in New York while playing St. John's and Lehman colleges.

The hockey team has over a month off before its next faceoff against Boston State on January 22. The men's and women's track teams will be competing in the USTFF meet at Dartmouth College on January 15, and the men will face Northeastern and Boston University a week later.

The wrestling team goes up against Central Connecticut on January 20, and the men's and women's ski teams will be participating in the Can-Am Invitational before the men ski in another meet in the middle of the month.

That's the way it looks for intersession UMass sports. Although most of you will probably forget about the good old Minutemen, they'll be competing in some events whose outcomes may prove to be very crucial come the end of the season and playoff time.

And that time, my friends, believe it or not, isn't very far off.

Icemen battle rival Huskies

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

When UConn skates into Orr rink today at 4:00 p.m. to play the UMass hockey team, the Minutemen will be out to put a timely end to a two game losing streak.

UMass was 3-1-1 after last weekend, but now stands at 3-3-1, the last game before semester end. The next game is January 22, five and a half weeks after today's contest.

"This game is very important, no questions about it," hockey coach Jack Canniff said. "There's three ways we can go: above, below, or at 500."

The Minutemen's losing string was started by Merrimack, possibly the best team in Division II, who shelled the icemen 10-2. Army added to their woes by beating them 7-2.

"We stumbled away two games," said Canniff, assessing the situation.

"The way we played against Army, we handed them the game," Canniff said. "I'd like to play St. Anselm's and Army again, and that's two of the three games we have lost.

The home ice advantage might not be an advantage as Canniff pointed out. "What sticks out in my mind is that we played so poorly on home ice" (against Army).

While the Minutemen had trouble on home ice, the Huskies haven't seen it for a while. UConn lost to Bowdoin Friday night at Brunswick, Me., 4-3, and Saturday night at Lowell University, 3-2. They have had limited success on the road as they beat Amherst College, a Division III school, last weekend 7-0.

The Huskies have not generally had a good team in the past as UMass has dominated the series, 24-5-1, including last year's 5-2 victory down at Storrs.

This season's UMass team has been nagged by light injuries and sickness, and today is no exception. Captain Mike Merchant won't by 100 per cent for the contest as Canniff reports he was coming down with some virus last night.

Other than that, UMass is all right physically and has no other bugs in its season. And Canniff hopes the team got another bug out of its system. "Ordinarily, we don't play that bad at home, but I hope it's out of our system. "We've got to get back to team hockey and not individual stuff."

Diners find DC rip-offs easy

"Honesty is the best policy even if it takes a while," said C.R. (not real initials) of the 3rd floor of Cance House in Southwest as he and other members of his floor prepared to return more than 548 pieces of silverware and crockery to Berkshire Dining Commons.

The silverware and dishes were taken from Berkshire during the course of this semester.

"I know that lots of people take food and silverware from the DC, but it almost became a contest here who could take the most. On one day P.J. (not real initials) took 37 dessert dishes in one trip," C.R. said.

When all the silverware was separated, there were over 50 complete place-settings with knife, fork, spoon and soup spoons.

"There was so much of everything that it seemed a natural to have a floor dinner with all that D.C. silverware," C.R. said.

A chicken cordan bleu was held for the 55 people of the third floor, Cance last Saturday night using utensils stolen from the D.C.

C.R. told the Collegian the silverware will be returned all at once and Berkshire will "mysteriously" have been returned by the time this story has been printed.

"We're returning it, because the contest is over and we know that someone would have to pay for it, and with the food bill going up next semester, it's probably us," C.R. said.

Cance residents found security slack enough to take this hardware from Berkshire Dining Commons, but the endeavor was purely "honest and would be returned". (Staff photo by Steven Polansky)

Working with disabled

Ed student finds work rewarding

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Heidi Rosenfeld is something else.

Parents and teachers will agree that it takes patience and understanding to raise and educate a child. And when that youngster has a learning disability, it takes a special kind of patience and understanding.

On Wednesday mornings, Rosenfeld works with a handicapped child at the Marks Meadow Elementary School in Amherst. From 8 to 10 in the morning she encourages her students to develop better reading skills through specific teaching methods.

"It's rewarding," Rosenfeld said over coffee in the Hatch. "And I think Jesse (the child she works with), and I have made a lot of progress."

The hours at the school are spent in what Rosenfeld calls "a sort of big playroom." There are large windows here for instructors to see what skills Rosenfeld employs in education. The windows may also be used for student-teachers to watch the progress of other special teaching classes.

Marks Meadow School is located in the school of Ed building on the north side of campus. Over 250 children attend classes there. Rosenfeld's special course is but one of the many programs offered to the 20 pre-Ed and Education majors that teach there.

Michael Greenbaum of Marks Meadow said students are accepted as interns for a semester. Rosenfeld's classes "are held in special rooms located along "observation corridor." Greenbaum added that, "In these special rooms students are allowed to act as a tutor for one of the children."

Rosenfeld said she regards her semester internship as a "challenge." But the junior is not going to limit her teaching experience to the Marks Meadow course. She wants to devote her life to helping those with mental handicaps.

"I wanted to be in a Special Ed department" she said, "but that has been made unavailable due to lack of funds in the University." When she graduates, Rosenfeld plans to further her education with a graduate Special Ed program.

Working with the mentally retarded is not a field for those not confident or unprepared. Rosenfeld learned sign language during the summers of her high school years while working at a camp for the retarded. In the past two years she has been taking courses relative to her interest.

"I've tried to concentrate on a lot of psychology courses," she said. "I've taken classes on mental retardation, exceptional disorders and child psyche." She sighs at her list of examples: "There is so much I should learn."

Rosenfeld is a woman dedicated to her ambitions and goals. Though she looks to the future, her academics for this semester alone employ much of her time and energy. Three days a week she has a sociology course concerned with mental disorders. On Tuesday she attends mental retardation and math methods classes.

A full load of semester courses usually provides plenty of work for the average college student. But in addition to her classes, Rosenfeld also holds down two jobs.

Rosenfeld hopes to obtain a degree in Elementary Ed from the University Education Department. To be accepted to one of the 18 programs, a student should apply in the second semester of sophomore year or as a first semester junior.

Michael Schwartz, undergraduate advisor, explained, "Students should apply to three or more programs." Schwartz added that each program does its own admissions. Acceptance consists of reviewing the application and an interview. Schwartz said student would be notified of acceptance three weeks before registration. The student would then choose from the available programs.

The programs offer a wide range of fields. There are seven programs for Elementary Ed alone," said Schwartz, "And over four in special areas such as agriculture and co-op teaching." Upon acceptance, students take courses suggested in a three-page guidebook. "Each program is designed to be comprehensive by itself," said Schwartz.

In the spring, Rosenfeld hopes to hand in her 'Change of Major' form for the School of Ed and join some 800 other Education majors on campus.

There are other options open to Rosenfeld. "A friend of one of my brothers is implementing a program to teach Bedvian children reading skills," she said, "but I need a sponsor to student teach in Israel."

Rosenfeld excused herself to get another cup of coffee, taking orders from friends sitting with her. An extremely attractive and intelligent individual, Rosenfeld is one of the more popular people on campus. "Heidi is an easy-going, outspoken young lady with a flair for the dramatic." said Ron Alleruzzo. He received a lot of kidding for his burst of eloquence. "Oh what I could tell you about Heidi," countered Lon Hill for the returning Rosenfeld to hear. With a wink at Lon, Rosenfeld laughs, "All my men are just good friends."

"Oh Heidi, what would I do without you?" yells skier Ron Green across the Hatch. Rosenfeld blushes. "Just good friends," she

Orchard Hill moves to halt racism

By A. TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) passed five motions last night designed to stop racism and sexism in OHAG and on the Hill.

OHAG's reoccuring problem concerning the Third World Center cropped up again last week when the Third World Center's $400 request was voted down. The total chaos which followed eventually led to the drafting of the five proposals presented last night.

Parliamentary procedure was interrupted last night by Tim Hart, an OHAG representative, who loudly demanded OHAG deal with the "important issue" before voting on Christmas lights for the Orchard Hill bowl. Although the Christmas lights were voted for, nothing else on the agenda was, as OHAG voted to go directly into dealing with the racism-sexism motions.

One motion passed makes it mandatory for all executive members of OHAG to take a sexism-racism course before or while they are in office. Another was that all members of OHAG take part in a racism workshop at the beginning of the semester and at regularly spaced intervals during the semester.

Other motions were to institute agenda space each week for a report from the Third World Center and other centers on the Hill. Every three weeks a space must be made for discussion of any racism-sexism problems concerning Orchard Hill. In addition, it was voted the treasurer must submit a report of the OHAG budget every three weeks and that the various centers do this also.

ORCHARD
HILL

Two measures that were deleted from the package involved taking punitive action against Gary Schuester for calling the police at the last meeting and against Tim Hart for disrupting the last week's meeting.

"Cooperation is important between the 30 members of OHAG ... without it nothing will be done," said an OHAG member.

Student fees may increase $200

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Student fees may be raised as much as $200 in the 1977 fall semester to offset pay raises to state University workers, UMass student trustee Paul M. Cronin said yesterday.

According to Cronon, the agreement reached between the Alliance union and the state this fall does not affect state workers working for UMass. The Alliance does not represent University workers such as employes working under the University residence halls, food services, or the Campus Center.

The University Board of Trustees earlier this month authorized President Robert C. Wood to complete a collective bargaining agreement between the University and classified state workers.

Cronin said the University, when the agreement is concluded, must compensate for the state worker's pay increase out of the University budget.

"What it comes down to," said Cronin, "is that the way the University is going to compensate for the wage increase, is to raise student fees in the food services, Campus Center, health fee, and residence halls."

Cronin said the $200 increase was a projected figure of the Student Government Association (SGA) president's office.

Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, Robert L. Woodbury, said that whenever the settlement is reached, the pay increase would have a substantial impact on student fees.

"Whenever the settlement is reached, I would imagine the cost would have a substantial impact on student fees such as the dining commons, residence halls, and the Campus Center," said Woodbury.

"I don't know when that agreement will be reached or whether the combined student fees will amount to $200, but I will say the increase will be substantial," said Woodbury.

UMass President Robert C. Wood was unavailable for comment. According to SGA estimates, the projected $200 fee increase, estimated to go into effect in Fiscal Year '78, will raise the cost of food services $78; the Campus Center fee, $19; the health fee, $18; and the residence halls, $59.

Cronin said that a $135 increase in tuition is scheduled for the fall semester.

According to Cronin, the proposed University settlement will parallel the Alliance agreement and award a $500 increase to University state workers for the current fiscal year. The Alliance agreement stipulates a $850 pay wage increase scheduled for Fiscal Year '78. In addition, the agreement calls for a $150 bonus payment in base salary to each individual state worker.

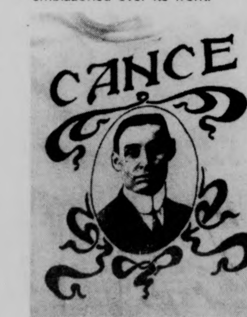
Have you ever heard of any of these people?

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

"The Cance T-shirts are in...they can be picked up in the main lounge...," said the voice over the P.A. system. I along with numerous others who had paid $3.00 were soon in possession of a colored short-sleeved shirt bearing the likeness of Alexander E. Cance emblazoned over its front.



Cance
...Advised 3 Presidents

After slipping the shirt on, I began to wonder just who Cance was, or for that matter, who any of the people the dormatories were named after were.

Most students at one time of another live in a building named after an individual who at one time did something for the state or the University, but not one out of a hundred know who they were or what they did. Here are the answers:

ORCHARD HILL

Emily Elizabeth DICKINSON was born in Amherst in 1836. She was a renowned poetess. When her poetry was discovered after her death in 1886, it scandalized the poetry traditionalists of the time. Many books and movies were made and written about her life including the recent Broadway production of "Belle of Amherst."

Eugene FIELD was born in 1850 and for a time lived in Amherst. He was a reporter for several newspapers including the Chicago News for which he wrote humorous articles. He wrote several books of poetry and verse until his death in 1895.

David J. GRAYSON never existed. He was really Ray Stanard Baker, an essay author who lived in Amherst and wrote under the name of Grayson. His brother was Hugh P. Baker, president of the University from 1933 to 1947.

Noah WEBSTER, born in 1758, was the famed lexicographer who wrote the "Spelling Book" which sold 20 million copies before his death in 1843. Webster wanted America to publish text books so that American youth could learn native ideas and not those of foreign lands.

CENTRAL

Dr. Hugh Potter BAKER was the 12th college president and the first University president of UMass. A major in World War One, he was born in 1878 and died in 1950. Baker was president of UMass from 1933-1947.

Alden Chase BRETT was a Mass Agriculture grad in 1912. He was a director of the Second Bank State Street Trust Co. in Boston, chairman of the board of Boston Mutual Life and received an honorary PHD of laws in 1954.

Dr. William Penn BROOKS was born in 1851 and graduated first in his class at Mass Aggie (now UMass) in 1875. He was one of the six founders of Phi Sigma Kappa and helped establish the Imperial College of Agriculture in Japan as well as being its president for four years. He died in 1938.

Dr. Kenyon L. BUTTERFIELD arrived in Mass Aggie in 1906. She became president of the college in 1918, and held the position until her death in 1924.

Paul Ansel CHADBOURNE hold the distinction of being the only UMass president to be elected to that post twice. A professor of natural history and a noted author on the subject, he first became president in 1882. He left the college to successfully run for state Senator in 1886 and in 1887 was again chosen to be president of Mass Aggie. He was born in 1823 and died in 1883.

Edwin Danial GORMAN, born in 1912, was elected to the Mass. House, holding the seat of the 14th Hampden District from Holyoke in 1951 where he served until some time after 1962.

James C. GREENOUGH, a noted lecturer born in 1829, became president of Mass Aggie for the three years between president Charbourne's two terms. He died in 1924.

Dr. Ralph A. VAN METER was president of the University from 1947 to 1954. He died in 1957.

William WHEELER, a Mass Aggie grad in 1871, was a professor of math and civil engineering here. He was acting president of Hokkaido University in Japan from 1877-1880 and returned to serve as a UMass trustee from 1880 until his death in 1928.

SYLVAN

Harry E. BROWN was a trustee of the University from 1940 until 1968. He died in 1969.

William M. CASHIN was a University trustee from 1949 to 1963. He died in 1969.

Elizabeth L. McNAMARA was a trustee until her death in 1957.

SOUTHWEST

Dr. Alexander E. Cance was born in 1873. Head of the Agricultural Dept. fr 14 years, he served as an advisor to three U.S. presidents, Taft, Harding and Coolidge, as well as being a noted author and lecturer.

Guy C. CRAMPTON was a professor of Entomology at the University from 1911 to 1948.

Ralph Waldo EMERSON, born in Boston in 1803, was a poet and philosopher whose works went largely unnoticed for most of his life. He was known as the "voice of an age." A trustee of Harvard, he died in 1882.

Henry JAMES, born in 1879, was the author of "Daisy Miller" and "The Turn of the Screw." A lawyer until 1912 he became a trustee for Harvard and the New York Public Library, and was president of the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association of America. He died in 1947.

Herman MELVILLE, born in 1819, was a sailor and the author of "Moby Dick the Great White Whale," as well as more than 10 other novels. He died in 1891.

Franklin C. MOORE was an assistant professor of math at Mass Aggie and later became head of the department.

Charles Henry PATTERSON was a professor of English, dean of the college of languages, and head of the languages and literature departments between 1916 and 1933.

Mildred PIERPONT, born in 1892, became the principal clerk of the deans office in 1949. "Millie" knew every building on campus, the number of seats and the number of classrooms in each building. She is the only University clerk to have a building named after her as well as having the 1949 Index dedicated to her. She died in 1963.

Henry David THOREAU, born in 1817, was a famed poet and naturalist who wrote "Walden or Life in the Woods" and "Early Spring in Massachusetts." He died in 1862.

Calvin COOLIDGE was born in 1872, elected to the Massachusetts House of Representatives in 1906, became the mayor of Northampton in 1909, and was elected Senator in 1911. He became the state's governor in 1915 and mobilized the State Guard during the police strike of 1919. This brought him to the attention of the Democratic party where he became vice-president in 1920, President in 1823, and was elected to a full term in 1924. A man of few words, the 30th president died in 1933.

John ADAMS was the first president to live in the White House. Born in 1735, he was chosen as a delegate to the First Continental Congress. He married Abigail Smith in 1764 and became vice-president in 1789 and again in 1792. A one-term president, he was elected in 1796 and died in 1826.

John Quincy ADAMS, the sixth U.S. President, was born in 1767 and died in 1848. An unhappy man all during his presidency, he took part in the negotiations that ended the war of 1812.

John F. KENNEDY was the 35th president of the United States. A Harvard grad, he won Navy and Marine Corps medals as skipper of Pt. 109 during World War Two. Elected to the Mass. House of Representatives in 1946 and the U.S. Senate in 1952, he successfully defeated Richard M. Nixon for the presidency in 1960. Kennedy won the Pulitzer for his book "Profiles in Courage" during the 1950's. He was assassinated in Dallas, Texas in 1963.

George WASHINGTON, surveyor, soldier, farmer and landowner, he became Commander-in-Chief of the Continental Army in 1775. He was elected President in 1789 and re-elected in 1789. He refused a third term.

Walter E. PRINCE, known as "Bull Prince" because of his huge head that rested on massive shoulders that left no visable neckline. A professor of American Lit from 1912-1950 he was called out of retirement in World War Two during the teacher shortage. His favorite topic of discussion was about those "jackasses in Washington."

Alexander A. MACKIMMIE, known to his students as "ole A.A.", was dean of the School of Librel Arts, a professor of history and head of the Sociology Dept. He had read his lecture notes in a course called Medieval and Modern History so often that he could recite them with his eyes closed and did so periodically.

Diners find DC rip-offs easy

By MICHAEL SIMONS

"Honesty is the best policy even if it takes a while," said C.R. (not real initials) of the 3rd floor of Cance House in Southwest as he and other members of his floor prepared to return more than 548 pieces of silverware and crockery to Berkshire Dining Commons.

The silverware and dishes were taken from Berkshire during the course of this semester.

"I know that lots of people take food and silverware from the DC, but it almost became a contest here who could take the most. On one day P.J. (not real initials) took 37 dessert dishes in one trip," C.R. said.

When all the silverware was separated, there were over 50 complete place-settings with knife, fork, spoon and soup spoons.

"There was so much of everything that it seemed a natural to have a floor dinner with all that D.C. silverware," C.R. said.

A chicken cordan bleu was held for the 55 people of the third floor, Cance last Saturday night using utensils stolen from the D.C.

C.R. told the Collegian the silverware will be returned all at once and Berkshire will "mysteriously" have been returned by the time this story has been printed.

"We're returning it, because the contest is over and we know that someone would have to pay for it, and with the food bill going up next semester, it's probably us," C.R. said.

Cance residents found security slack enough to take this hardware from Berkshire Dining Commons, but the endeavor was purely "honest and would be returned". (Staff photo by Steven Polansky)

Working with disabled

Ed student finds work rewarding

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Heidi Rosenfeld is something else.

Parents and teachers will agree that it takes patience and understanding to raise and educate a child. And when that youngster has a learning disability, it takes a special kind of patience and understanding.

On Wednesday mornings, Rosenfeld works with a handicapped child at the Marks Meadow Elementary School in Amherst. From 8 to 10 in the morning she encourages her students to develop better reading skills through specific teaching methods.

"It's rewarding," Rosenfeld said over coffee in the Hatch. "And I think Jesse (the child she works with), and I have made a lot of progress."

The hours at the school are spent in what Rosenfeld calls "a sort of big playroom." There are large windows here for instructors to see what skills Rosenfeld employs in education. The windows may also be used for student-teachers to watch the progress of other special teaching classes.

Marks Meadow School is located in the school of Ed building on the north side of campus. Over 250 children attend classes there. Rosenfeld's special course is but one of the many programs offered to the 20 pre-Ed and Education majors that teach there.

Michael Greenbaum of Marks Meadow said students are accepted as interns for a semester. Rosenfeld's classes "are held in special rooms located along "observation corridor." Greenbaum added that, "In these special rooms students are allowed to act as a tutor for one of the children."

Rosenfeld said she regards her semester internship as a "challenge." But the junior is not going to limit her teaching experience to the Marks Meadow course. She wants to devote her life to helping those with mental handicaps.

"I wanted to be in a Special Ed department" she said, "but that has been made unavailable due to lack of funds in the University." When she graduates, Rosenfeld plans to further her education with a graduate Special Ed program.

Working with the mentally retarded is not a field for those not confident or unprepared. Rosenfeld learned sign language during the summers of her high school years while working at a camp for the retarded. In the past two years she has been taking courses relative to her interest.

"I've tried to concentrate on a lot of psychology courses," she said. "I've taken classes on mental retardation, exceptional disorders and child psyche." She sighs at her list of examples: "There is so much I should learn."

Rosenfeld is a woman dedicated to her ambitions and goals. Though she looks to the future, her academics for this semester alone employ much of her time and energy. Three days a week she has a sociology course concerned with mental disorders. On Tuesday she attends mental retardation and math methods classes.

A full load of semester courses usually provides plenty of work for the average college student. But in addition to her classes, Rosenfeld also holds down two jobs.

Rosenfeld hopes to obtain a degree in Elementary Ed from the University Education Department. To be accepted to one of the 18 programs, a student should apply in the second semester of sophomore year or as a first semester junior.

Michael Schwartz, undergraduate advisor, explained, "Students should apply to three or more programs." Schwartz added that each program does its own admissions. Acceptance consists of reviewing the application and an interview. Schwartz said student would be notified of acceptance three weeks before registration. The student would then choose from the available programs.

The programs offer a wide range of fields. There are seven programs for Elementary Ed alone," said Schwartz, "And over four in special areas such as agriculture and co-op teaching." Upon acceptance, students take courses suggested in a three-page guidebook. "Each program is designed to be comprehensive by itself," said Schwartz.

In the spring, Rosenfeld hopes to hand in her 'Change of Major' form for the School of Ed and join some 800 other Education majors on campus.

There are other options open to Rosenfeld. "A friend of one of my brothers is implementing a program to teach Bedvian children reading skills," she said, "but I need a sponsor to student teach in Israel."

Rosenfeld excused herself to get another cup of coffee, taking orders from friends sitting with her. An extremely attractive and intelligent individual, Rosenfeld is one of the more popular people on campus. "Heidi is an easy-going, outspoken young lady with a flair for the dramatic." said Ron Alleruzzo. He received a lot of kidding for his burst of eloquence. "Oh what I could tell you about Heidi," countered Lon Hill for the returning Rosenfeld to hear. With a wink at Lon, Rosenfeld laughs, "All my men are just good friends."

"Oh Heidi, what would I do without you?" yells skier Ron Green across the Hatch. Rosenfeld blushes. "Just good friends," she

Orchard Hill moves to halt racism

By A. TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

Orchard Hill Area Government (OHAG) passed five motions last night designed to stop racism and sexism in OHAG and on the Hill.

OHAG's reoccuring problem concerning the Third World Center cropped up again last week when the Third World Center's $400 request was voted down. The total chaos which followed eventually led to the drafting of the five proposals presented last night.

Parliamentary procedure was interrupted last night by Tim Hart, an OHAG representative, who loudly demanded OHAG deal with the "important issue" before voting on Christmas lights for the Orchard Hill bowl. Although the Christmas lights were voted for, nothing else on the agenda was, as OHAG voted to go directly into dealing with the racism-sexism motions.

One motion passed makes it mandatory for all executive members of OHAG to take a sexism-racism course before or while they are in office. Another was that all members of OHAG take part in a racism workshop at the beginning of the semester and at regularly spaced intervals during the semester.

Other motions were to institute agenda space each week for a report from the Third World Center and other centers on the Hill. Every three weeks a space must be made for discussion of any racism-sexism problems concerning Orchard Hill. In addition, it was voted the treasurer must submit a report of the OHAG budget every three weeks and that the various centers do this also.

Two measures that were deleted from the package involved taking punitive action against Gary Schuester for calling the police at the last meeting and against Tim Hart for disrupting the last week's meeting.

"Cooperation is important between the 30 members of OHAG ... without it nothing will be done," said an OHAG member.

Student fees may increase $200

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

Student fees may be raised as much as $200 in the 1977 fall semester to offset pay raises to state University workers, UMass student trustee Paul M. Cronin said yesterday.

According to Cronon, the agreement reached between the Alliance union and the state this fall does not affect state workers working for UMass. The Alliance does not represent University workers such as employes working under the University residence halls, food services, or the Campus Center.

The University Board of Trustees earlier this month authorized President Robert C. Wood to complete a collective bargaining agreement between the University and classified state workers.

Cronin said the University, when the agreement is concluded, must compensate for the state worker's pay increase out of the University budget.

"What it comes down to," said Cronin, "is that the way the University is going to compensate for the wage increase, is to raise student fees in the food services, Campus Center, health fee, and residence halls."

Cronin said the $200 increase was a projected figure of the Student Government Association (SGA) president's office.

Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs, Robert L. Woodbury, said that whenever the settlement is reached, the pay increase would have a substantial impact on student fees.

"Whenever the settlement is reached, I would imagine the cost would have a substantial impact on student fees such as the dining commons, residence halls, and the Campus Center," said Woodbury.

"I don't know when that agreement will be reached or whether the combined student fees will amount to $200, but I will say the increase will be substantial," said Woodbury.

UMass President Robert C. Wood was unavailable for comment. According to SGA estimates, the projected $200 fee increase, estimated to go into effect in Fiscal Year '78, will raise the cost of food services $78; the Campus Center fee, $19; the health fee, $18; and the residence halls, $59.

Cronin said that a $135 increase in tuition is scheduled for the fall semester.

According to Cronin, the proposed University settlement will parallel the Alliance agreement and award a $500 increase to University state workers for the current fiscal year. The Alliance agreement stipulates a $850 pay wage increase scheduled for Fiscal Year '78. In addition, the agreement calls for a $150 bonus payment in base salary to each individual state worker.

Have you ever heard of any of these people?

By MICHAEL SIMONS

"The Cance T-shirts are in...they can be picked up in the main lounge...," said the voice over the P.A. system. I along with numerous others who had paid $3.00 were soon in possession of a colored short-sleeved shirt bearing the likeness of Alexander E. Cance emblazoned over its front.

Cance
...Advised 3 Presidents

After slipping the shirt on, I began to wonder just who Cance was, or for that matter, who any of the people the dormatories were named after were.

Most students at one time of another live in a building named after an individual who at one time did something for the state or the University, but not one out of a hundred know who they were or what they did. Here are the answers:

ORCHARD HILL

Emily Elizabeth DICKINSON was born in Amherst in 1836. She was a renowned poetess. When her poetry was discovered after her death in 1886, it scandalized the poetry traditionalists of the time. Many books and movies were made and written about her life including the recent Broadway production of "Belle of Amherst."

Eugene FIELD was born in 1850 and for a time lived in Amherst. He was a reporter for several newspapers including the Chicago News for which he wrote humorous articles. He wrote several books of poetry and verse until his death in 1895.

David J. GRAYSON never existed. He was really Ray Stanard Baker, an essay author who lived in Amherst and wrote under the name of Grayson. His brother was Hugh P. Baker, president of the University from 1933 to 1947.

Noah WEBSTER, born in 1758, was the famed lexicographer who wrote the "Spelling Book" which sold 20 million copies before his death in 1843. Webster wanted America to publish text books so that American youth could learn native ideas and not those of foreign lands.

CENTRAL

Dr. Hugh Potter BAKER was the 12th college president and the first University president of UMass. A major in World War One, he was born in 1878 and died in 1950. Baker was president of UMass from 1933-1947.

Alden Chase BRETT was a Mass Agriculture grad in 1912. He was a director of the Second Bank State Street Trust Co. in Boston, chairman of the board of Boston Mutual Life and received an honorary PHD of laws in 1954.

Dr. William Penn BROOKS was born in 1851 and graduated first in his class at Mass Aggie (now UMass) in 1875. He was one of the six founders of Phi Sigma Kappa and helped establish the Imperial College of Agriculture in Japan as well as being its president for four years. He died in 1938.

Dr. Kenyon L. BUTTERFIELD arrived in Mass Aggie in 1906. She became president of the college in 1918, and held the position until her death in 1924.

Paul Ansel CHADBOURNE hold the distinction of being the only UMass president to be elected to that post twice. A professor of natural history and a noted author on the subject, he first became president in 1882. He left the college to successfully run for state Senator in 1886 and in 1887 was again chosen to be president of Mass Aggie. He was born in 1823 and died in 1883.

Edwin Danial GORMAN, born in 1912, was elected to the Mass. House, holding the seat of the 14th Hampden District from Holyoke in 1951 where he served until some time after 1962.

James C. GREENOUGH, a noted lecturer born in 1829, became president of Mass Aggie for the three years between president Charbourne's two terms. He died in 1924.

Dr. Ralph A. VAN METER was president of the University from 1947 to 1954. He died in 1957.

William WHEELER, a Mass Aggie grad in 1871, was a professor of math and civil engineering here. He was acting president of Hokkaido University in Japan from 1877-1880 and returned to serve as a UMass trustee from 1880 until his death in 1928.

Harry E. BROWN was a trustee of the University from 1940 until 1968. He died in 1969.

Ralph Waldo EMERSON, born in Boston in 1803, was a poet and philosopher whose works went largely unnoticed for most of his life. He was known as the "voice of an age." A trustee of Harvard, he died in 1882.

Henry JAMES, born in 1879, was the author of "Daisy Miller" and "The Turn of the Screw." A lawyer until 1912 he became a trustee for Harvard and the New York Public Library, and was president of the Teachers Insurance and Annuity Association of America. He died in 1947.

Editor's final remarks

This is the last edition of the Collegian this semester. It is the last edition of the Collegian for this publishing year. It is also the last edition that I am editor-in-chief. In many ways, then, this is The Final Edition.

But, it really isn't.

It's just final for me in that this edition marks the end of a year that has been unlike any other year in my short life. What worries me is that no other year will probably be like it either. Without a doubt, this year has been the most educational for me. I told the staff a year ago when I ran for editor that the Collegian is my education. That was proved this year.

It's final for me also in that this edition marks the end of a year in which I enjoyed working with such a great group of people.

I only hope that those great people I worked with both inside the office and outside remain my friends for many years to come. I think they will.

But what is important is that this is not the final edition of the Collegian. There will probably never be a final edition of the Collegian.

I am confident that each year hence a great staff will elect another great Board of Editors — similar to the fantastic people that I worked with on this year's Board. And the Collegian WILL continue. It will experience its high points and its low points. But how is that so different from life?

I believe every effort made by the Collegian in the past has been sincere, and, I believe, that that will always be the case. We strive to serve all the students — a service unsurpassed by any other student group on campus.

As for me, I will always be concerned about this paper — an organization that has made me a better person than I was before I started here. I wish that every year in my life will be as valuable for me as this has been.

Thank you for making this year great and for helping me grow. I hope we've made you grow, educationally, that is, as well.

On behalf of the entire Collegian staff, good luck on finals and happy holidays.

Evaluation guide in process

To the Editor:

On Nov. 17, 1976 the Student Senate passed a motion which read in part "That the Academic Affairs Committee be charged with implementing a Teacher and Course Evaluation program..."

The Academic Affairs Committee would like to take this opportunity to inform the student body and the general University community that it has taken positive steps toward implementing such an evaluation guide which would be published and available to the University community.

It is the intent of the Student Senate through the Academic Affairs Committee to assist students in their selection of courses. Such a guide will contain only the most reliable information available.

Currently the committee is reviewing established evaluation guides at other institutions such as Amherst, B.U. and others. We would like to express our thanks for the cooperation the committee has received thus far from various student, faculty and administrative groups and individuals.

The Academic Affairs Committee will continue to inform the University community of progress made in regards to the development of such an evaluation guide. In the spring semester the committee will advertise the times and places of meetings of the committee. These meetings are open to the University community and input is gladly welcomed.

The Night before Exams

By NATALIE PAWULA and SHARYN MAYSER

'Twas the night before exams when all through Southwest
Not a creature was partying, It was all for the best.
The books were laid out on the desks with care
In hope that the knowledge would somehow appear.
The Bio-chem majors were nestled in their beds,
While visions of equations danced in their heads.
And Carol in her t-shirt, and I in my robe.
Our books settled down for an all night probe.
When out by JA there arose such a clatter,
I sprang from my desk to see what was the matter.
Away to the window, I flew like a spade
Threw open the curtain and threw up the shade.
The moon shone bright out onto the dorms,
And gave a luster to their unbending forms.
When what to my wondering eyes should display
But a campus shuttle and eight tiny TA's.
With a little old driver so cunning and sly
I knew in a moment this must be the guy.
More rapid than eagles his runners they came
And he whistled and shouted and called them by name:
"Now David! Now Donald! Now Ronald and Randy!
On Jimmy! On Billy! On Amos and Andy!"
To the top of the pyramids, to the top of the wall!
Now, Race away! Race away! Race away all!
So up to the tower the runners they flew
With a bus full of surprises and that mysterious guy, too!
And then in a twinkling I heard a steady beat
The shuffling and tapping of their little feet.
As I drew in my head and started turning
Down in the elevator, he came with a bing.
Dressed in his disguise, he thought he was cool
But I was one that he could not fool.
With a briefcase flung under his arm
He looked like a salesman intending no harm.
Opening and looking into his case so old,
He pulled out a pound of Columbian Gold.
A wink, a smile and a twist of his head
Soon gave me to know I had nothing to dread.
He spoke not a word but with a smile like before,
Proceeded to place an ounce under each door.
Completing the task he rang for the 'vator
He turned and said "I'll catch ya later!"
Calling his runners, he leaped to his shuttle,
And away they all flew ever so subtle.
But in the distance I heard this man singing
The next thing I knew my alarm clock was ringing.

Don't bother

By BRAD GOVERMAN

Unless you've got the patience of a UMass graduate, don't bother dialing the UMass Operator for information because you'll probably go nuts waiting for an answer. You might even pretend you're Lester Maddox and rip the phone out of the wall. Whatever you do, don't cast aspersions on the sex lives of the operators because the problem is not their fault and they happen to be very nice people, probably with very normal sex lives.

If you're not Lester Maddox, but rather, a normal Casiac or Business major trying to plug his or her way through a school of line upon line and wait after wait, what can you do?

The following is a list of suggested diversions you may want to try in order to maintain your sanity while you will inevitably wait, endlessly, ring after ring, for an Operator to answer.

When by yourself:

1). FOR THE FRUSTRATED: Avoid the obvious. (you'll go blind you know).

2). FOR THE PRAGMATIC: Whenever dialing the Operator, learn to keep a box of Q-tips handy. While the receiver is cupped around one ear, you could keep busy by cleaning the other.

When with friends:

1). FOR THE EXPERIMENTERS: The potentials of erotic stimulation with a standard Ma Bell telephone receiver have never been recognized. Use your imagination. (and caution)

2). FOR THE PSEUDO-INTELLECTUALS: Pretend to carry on conversations with foreign dignitaries in order to impress your friends. If they're not impressed, throw the phone at them.

But most of all, be patient. There are two things I've learned from five semesters worth of experiences at this school: How to deal with a myriad of frustrations, and that at UMass, nothing is worth getting steamed up about.

The moral: Don't hang up — throw up. You'll feel a lot better.

Attention:

People with ideas

I suppose it's a bad tactic this time of year to ask people to look ahead to next semester, but as a newly-elected and somewhat green Executive Editor, I'm afraid I have to.

Editors do not a good paper make — real success is dependent on writers, cartoonists, and various staff members to put it all together. So with the hope of starting the year off right, I am asking anyone and everyone interested in editorial-writing, graphics, editorial cartoons, and-or editorial layout to make yourselves known, preferably before we begin printing next semester.

Because I will be choosing which writers are to receive weekly columns, it would be especially helpful to me to be able to read a sample or two of new writers' work before the Collegian goes to print. And if you desire the regular access and larger readership columnists get, you'd be giving yourself a head start. Cartoonists might benefit similarly. Material can be mailed over intersession to Bill Sundstrom, c-o the Daily Collegian, Campus Center Building, UMass, you know the rest. I especially encourage Third World people and women to become involved.

One last point I want to stress is that I am not necessarily looking for professional journalists, Pulitzer Prize winning authors, politicians, or expert analysts. What I am looking for is people with their own ideas who can communicate them on paper. Do not feel discouraged if you have no experience or a style you think might not work in a newspaper — give it a try. I'll make a sincere attempt to be receptive.

If you have any questions, come down to the Collegian office this week, or see me at the beginning of the spring semester. I look forward to working with you.

A taste of the Salt

By JACK CAHILL

Nostalgia has never been popular at this Universe City where forgetting is a number one fun pastime. So only a few matriculators recall the existence of Poor Richard's, an odd weekly Collegian supplement started in 1972 by a consortium of committed people who realized the pressing need for an outlet to be available for the vast creative potential hidden in our teeming midst. The collective thought and individual talent of the paper's staff remains more than apparent when looking back through old issues, despite an overly stylized format that smelled of "hip" conservatism. I'm not fooling when I say that the literary and artistic works of people like Mike Kostek, Don McGilvray and Gary Gomes have lasting value. I only wish you could read them now.

People left, situations changed and Poor Richard's became Below the Salt, a fine art—real world publication that exchanged postured sophistication for an outrageous and thought-provoking inanity that mirrored the dichotomy of the UMass state of mind; intelligent but dense, creative but unaware, occasionally brilliant, but for the most part just plain dumb. Concrete additions (re The Fine Arts Center) cannot change an environment that does nothing to aid and abet the creative process. Have you noticed, though, that the truly amazing minds, the diamonds in the state supported rough have no equals anywhere, not at reputed Smith and Amherst, or even aberrant Hampshire?

These were and are the minds who have no choice, but to be creative, the people who find it impossible write a serious business letter or leave a bathroom wall blank. These were the minds that could not stay submerged and the ones were driven to communicate. Some of them pooled their ideas and time to establish a weekly twelve pager that would try to open people up to other ways of seeing the truth apart from those homogenized versions offered by Rolling Stone, network TV and automated FM rock stations.

And this was not an easy thing to do. The early Salt, however, had a staff of considerable devotion and sufficient number to pull it off. Lo and behold, a tangible Salt identity evolved and began to make itself known and felt in the 5 college area and beyond. The Salt's repute with record companies and music people grew amazingly. And why? For the simple fact that it broached different topics in different ways and did not play the game called sameness. Not all the time anyway.

Establishing an identity was one thing, but maintaining it for three years is quite another. More people left, situations changed again and this has been the first semester that the Salt has suffered a serious loss of identity. There have been production problems due to a disastrous "magazine" format, the advertising ratio is incredibly high, but there is, more importantly, a lack of good input. We have been called a clique, but that has been the only way to put out this paper. Too often, the copy that we have, not the copy that we want, is what goes in and that is no way to run a paper, I mean maga... ug, thing.

The problem is caused by you and me. No, actually not me, just you. You who have something on your mind (something twisted perhaps?), maybe even some talent (this is possible), but are too interested in engaging in snappy chatter at the Drake or goin-a-class to share it with people who might be interested. So it's not that you're so out and out stupid, you are selfish which is conceivably even more reprehensible.

This is no recruitment ad; this is a cultural manifesto. "From those according to their means, to those according to their needs." We need it and you got it, so fork over, you tadpoles.

Listen here: Below the Salt has a new editor named Mark Lecesse and two hot to trot assistants named Deb Schaefer and E. Patrick McQuaid and some fairly hip hangers-on besides. And they want to make this paper even better than an S&H Green Stamp Catalogue. And you, oh enlightened one, only you can make it possible. Remember us and talk to us, soon. I rest my case — but not for long.

In defense of satire

Collegian satirists have really taken it on the chin this semester. For it seems that drollness has been mistaken for viciousness and that wit has become a tool of repression. And the amusing thing is that the lighter the subject being "sarcasted at", the louder the subsequent complaints. For example, Mark Wilding was somewhat harshly criticized for jokingly calling Harvard University elitist, a term more appropriately reserved for Yale. But when Nummo News ridicules the indictment of Assata Shakur for murder, no one rises to defend the dead New Jersey state trooper. There are even a few solemn souls who question whether satire is proper at all when dealing with serious subjects.

Collegian humorists, though, are tired of silently enduring ill treatment. Someone really ought to say a word in their defense. We would do so except that we lack even pretensions of eloquence. But we have asked a distinguished scholar, also beset in his time by the slings and arrows of outraged targets, to say a few words on our behalf. In keeping with ethnic purity, our choice is Erasmus of Rotterdam, who will comfort us with a few words from his Praise of Folly.

'Satire'

"Jokes about serious subjects can be handled in such a way that any reader who is not altogether lacking in discernment can scent something far more rewarding in them than in the crabbed and specious arguments of some people we know — when, for example, some of them endlessly sing the praises of antiracism and antisexism in a botched-up oration, another eulogizes Susan Saxe, and a third sets out to stir up war against pornography. Another man foretells the end of the American system, and yet another invents a new set of silly points for discussion about women's rights. But nothing is so trivial as treating serious subjects in a trivial manner; and similarly, nothing is more entertaining than treating trivialities in such a way as to make it clear that you are doing anything but trifle with them.

"Now for the charge of biting sarcasm. My answer to that is that the intelligent have always enjoyed freedom to exercise their wit on the common life of man, and with impunity, provided that they kept their liberty within reasonable limits. This makes me marvel all the more at the sensitivitiy of present-day ears which can bear to hear practically nothing but "progressive" things. Moreover, you can find a good many people on campus whose sense of reasonableness is so distorted that they find the most serious accusations against the Administration more bearable than the slightest joke on students, especially if it "touches their own interests."

"On charges of haughty bias and arrogant condescension. On how many charges am I not my own critic? Furthermore, if every type of group on campus is included, it is clear that each one's vices are censured, not those of any particular group or individual. And so anyone who protests that he is injured betrays his own guilty conscience, or at any rate, his apprehensions. I have also moderated my style so that the sensible reader will easily understand that my intention was to give pleasure, not pain. Nowhere have I stirred up the hidden cesspool of student backstabbing, cruelty, and pseudosolidarity; the ridiculous rather than the squalid was what I set out to survey."

Finally, for those poor souls who are both humorless and idle, may we suggest that they spend their intersession reading Lewis Carroll's Complete Works from cover to cover.

(Now that the University Judiciary has handed down its ruling on Southwest's pornography ban, SW Assembly can go home rather satisfied with itself since, though it may have lost the battle (the way it infringed upon freedom of speech THIS time was improper), it won the war (the Judiciary indicated the PROPER way to go about infringing upon freedom of speech).

Though we are delighted with yet another demonstration of student competence, we still have problems with the idea of a censorship board composed only of progressive people. Reactionaries deserve a say too. Therefore, we pass on Mr. Jon Hite's excellent suggestion of having Southwest residents pass judgement on proposed films directly in a truly egalitarian manner. As each film came up for review, twelve or so Southwest residents would be chosen at random to serve as a jury to determine whether or not it contained evil or incitement to rape. It would seem that jury duty is a small price to pay for the privilege of living in an Area that is now oppression-free.

(We are happy, though, that Southwest's struggle against pornography is going so well. And we certainly hope that next semester SW Assembly will vote to ban prostitution.)

Contribute to MassPIRG

To the Editor:

I consider myself a concerned member of this university's student body and one concern of mine is the 49 per cent of the student body that has chosen not to support MassPIRG in recent semesters. MassPIRG's funds come solely from student contributions, that two dollar fee that appears on your bill each semester. The option to pay the fee exists because four years ago a majority of UMass students signed a petition asking that they be given an opportunity to contribute to MassPIRG through the University billing process. The UMass trustees recently re-affirmed the student right to contributed through the UMass bill, but only if greater than 50 per cent of the student body continued to contribute to MassPIRG.

I am sure that the decision not to pay the $2 fee has many causes ranging from lack of knowing what the organization is to a rejection of their ideas and policies. I spoke to a few people who said they wanted to exercise one of the rare options of payment on their bill and for this reason they chose not to support a group which in some way could aid them.

As a new student at UMass and participant in MassPIRG I would like to discuss some of the major projects which interested me in hopes of informing and generating interest in supporting MassPIRG. Support is received through the semester fee which supports the projects and the organization but better yet individual energy and ideas are crucial to carry out the various projects.

The major project that I participated in this fall was the bottle bill effort, which to my surprise was originally put on the ballot by MassPIRG. Unfortunately the bill lost but in the process seemed to have awakened many people to see the dilemma and problems of a throw away society which is fed and controlled by large corporations as proved by their ability to buy the recent election. Other important projects have focused on the dangers of nuclear power, the Nuke Teach-In on campus, alternative energy projects, nutrition, survey of local banks, voter registration, and telephone company consumer abuse.

All of these projects have been in the general interest of individuals in coping with our environment and present conditions. The actual cost of supporting this group is very minimal but is definitely significant when combined with contributions from large numbers of fellow students.

I just hope that the over 10,000 people on this campus who chose not to contribute the $2 fee last semester will think twice when paying their bill over intersession.

Peace on Earth?

To the Editor:

During the Christmas season we hear the familiar phrase "Peace on Earth". Unfortunately, the world and its ruling priincipalities are the enemies of true peace, and the innocent continue to suffer and die at their hands. The documented crimes of totalitarian Communism and other dictatorial regimes reveal the hatred of the corrupt power embodied in the collective State for the freedom of the individual human person. Indeed, Government in our age has alligned itself against nature, against the sacred autonomy of parenthood and the family, against the sanctity of life, and against the infinite Wisdom of the Word of God, with its inhuman encroachments financed by its taxpaying citizens.

In our own land crime flourishes, and the dignity of the human person is assaulted and raped in many ways. Ancient abuses of God's gift of sexuality, an incarnate reflection of His eternally creative Love, have arisen among us with increased intensity in recent years, abetted by the purveyors of pornography, pills, and permissive "laws". Doctors forsake the once-revered Hippocratic Oath, mutilating the integrity of the human body and turning the practice of the healing arts into an agent of barrenhood. Since the Supreme Court declared war on unborn children on Jan. 22, 1973, we the people, like primitive pagans, have sacrificed nearly four million citizens, more than twice the number of soldiers killed in all the wars of our nation's history. These children are the latter-day Holy Innocents, their deaths promulgated and tolerated, as in Herod's time, for socio-political reasons.

Undoubtedly there are some who wish Herod had succeeded in his jealous venture to destroy the Christ Child, or wish Mary had opted for abortion. At least secular society would have been spared the annoying presence of unenlightened, non-progressive thinkers. Certainly the pro-life movement would have been much smaller, perhaps almost non-existent, had Jesus, the Way, the Truth, and the Life, not proclaimed, "I came that they might have Life.... (John 10:10)".

I think our founding fathers intended that all people in America should, on the purely human level, have this fullness of life, when they wrote in the Declaration of Independence that all are endowed by the Creator with the inalienable right to life. To be consistent with American ideals the law should guarantee the right to life for all without exception, prejudice, or selective exclusion, from the instant of conception to the moment of natural death, regardless of accidental factors like age, size, sex, color, condition of dependency, state of health or perfection, or degree of wantedness.

Pray for peace on earth and the termination of the anti-life anti-family anti-Christ mentality of the world.

Greek calls Kappa Sigma story biased...

To the Editor:

On Monday, December 6, 1976, the Collegian ran a cover story entitled "Field to Probe Kappa Sigma". The manuscript was a synopsis of alleged incidents, "perpetrated by the fraternity Kappa Sigma upon Gorman House Dormitory." The circumstances surrounding this entire article are distressing to me, both as an elected official of the Greek Area, and as a student.

After a week of extensive research, I have come to the unfortunate conclusion that the Kappa Sigma article was, in fact, an example of biased and unethical reporting. Why, in a community dedicated to progressive reforms in our society, should the Collegian compromise itself in this way?

The author of the article, Mike Berger, is a resident of Gorman Dormitory. Should he have been assigned to cover a conflict between his house and a neighboring fraternity? The issue editor and photo editor also reside in Gorman. Did they use their influence to place the story on page one, and print a picture that resembled a haunted house? Editor-in-Chief Bill Mills says he "assumed the story would be placed on the bottom of page three." Evidently the news editor thought differently. Could a resident of Gorman really be considered unbiased in this situation, and selected to research a topic relating specifically to his dorm?

As much as these "coincidental" circumstances upset me, the most aggravating action on the part of the Collegian was the omission of one, very important quote. When Mike Berger interviewed Vice Chancellor Woodbury, Woodbury specifically asked Berger to include this quote; "I am extremely concerned about what is happening between Gorman and Kappa Sigma and I want to be personally involved in looking at this situation."

"I want to make it clear that not all fraternities on campus are guilty by association because it may be that only a few people are guilty of these alleged incidents. Many fraternities and sororities make substantial contributions to the university community and should not be afraid of this investigation."

This statement places the investigation in the proper perspective. Dean Field has evidently been instructed to investigate the endangering behavior of the individuals responsible. Not the entire membership. It almost seems as though the quote was omitted in the interest of sensationalism.

Concerning the continuing conflict between Gorman and Kappa Sigma, a fair assessment would be that people on both sides have some growing up to do. It is clear that both houses have instigated problems in the past, even though that fact was not made clear in Berger's article. He had "no comment" on the subject.

Several problems lie on the shoulders of the administration in this situation. Whitmore does have the option to close the Kappa Sigma house, while they do not have the same avenue to pursue in the case of Gorman. Just as an uninvolved party in Gorman house would not be asked to relocate in order to relieve tension, should innocent residents of Kappa Sigma be moved?

Residents of Gorman House must feel as though nothing has been done concerning their plight. Nothing can and should be done about the majority of the allegations in Berger's article. If the manuscript was closely studied, one would find the bulk of these occurred in past semesters. This semester's occurances are a different story.

On September 17, 1976, fruit was thrown through windows on Gorman's south side. This incident was reported to Edward M. Bowe, Greek Area director. Due to the fact that this was the first incident of its kind reported to him in quite a while, Bowe suggested that Kappa Sigma write a letter of apology to the residents of Gorman, pay for all reported damages, and place the responsible parties on social probation. All of these requests were carried out.

On Saturday, November 20, a beer bottle was thrown through a counselor's window. This was reported to the University police, but no one knows who did it including the president of Kappa Sigma. If, in fact, it was suspected that members of Kappa Sigma were responsible, the Greek Area director should have been made aware of this assumption.

Berger's article spoke of excessive noise on the morning of November 29. The noise was the result of the initiation process of the fraternity, specifically five minutes of exercises before breakfast. According to William Taylor, associate director of Central Orchard Hill, "That was rowdyism within acceptable bounds, criticized by the existing relationship."

On the morning of December 2, another bottle was thrown through a window on Gorman's south side. This incident was reported to the Greek Area director, and the outcome is as follows; at the request of Ed Bowe and myself, the fraternity has cooperated fully with Vice Chancellor Woodbury's requested investigation. The process of identifying the responsible party is well under way. Both the Greek Area and Kappa Sigma have lent as much assistance as possible.

If the entire University was aware of the proper channels to pursue in the case of a hassle, most problems could be immediately corrected. If anyone has problems with a Greek house, the first contact should be the house president. If a solution equitable to both parties cannot be reached, a written complaint should be filed with the Greek Affairs Office in Hampshire House.

The Greek Area on this campus wants to promote the best possible image to the rest of the UMass campus. In our eyes, dorm residents are potential Greeks. All the beneficial projects we undertake go down the drain when the actions of one individual are blown up.

Greek letter organizations are a viable living option to quite a few UMass students. Our system is far from perfect, but then again what system is perfect? There is no possible way for us to continue to improve ourselves, when so much of our time is consumed defending ourselves.

Steve Macaulay
President, Greek Area

...while Gorman resident applauds it

To the Editor:

In regard to your article about Kappa Sigma and Gorman House, I would like to say that it's about time the magnitude of the problem was brought to the attention of the university. Problems between the frat and Gorman have been growing intenser every semester.

Last semester I had two windows broken in plain day by members of Kappa Sigma; and this semester just narrowly missed injury as glass shattered all around me while sitting in a neighbor's room on September 17. Numerous windows were being busted on this evening until the police arrived sending the Greeks scurrying back into the safety of their house.

A pear was found to be the missle hurled through my neighbor's window that night. The next day we took the pear, glass fragments still imbedded in it, to Greek Affairs.

We placed the pear on Mr. Bowe's desk asking for immediate action to be taken against the fraternity. He replied that Greek Affairs had been flooded with phone calls from upset residents of Gorman, along with numerous other complaints from the past, some action would be taken against Kappa Sigma. Mr. Bowe requested a letter from us stating what had taken place in the Sept. 17 incident and that the letter would be presented to a special discipline board of Greek Affairs. We submitted a formal letter with 25 signatures from Gorman residents to Greek Affairs relating to the incident. Mr. Bowe assured us action would be taken and we would be notified of the results.

Two weeks later I had to contact Mr. Bowe to learn the results. He informed me that Greek Affairs had laughed off the letter because Gorman probably started the trouble and that the brothers were just having "fun". Is the flying glass, damage to the students rooms, and money (payed by the state) to replace the windows Mr. Bowe's idea of a "brotherhood joke"?

Every week the residents of Gorman have their rights disrupted by the actions of Kappa Sigma. Nothing happens to punish Kappa Sigma because they are protected by the brothers of Greek Affairs. Well who protects the rights of Gorman residents? When the police are called to quell a disturbance another controversy arises. UMass police claim they can't do anything because the fraternity is on private land and not state. When Amherst police are summoned they claim they don't want to interfere with university affairs.

I cannot sign my name to this letter as I feel it would jeopardize my safety. Several Gorman residents have been assaulted in the past for speaking against Kappa Sigma. This may also demonstrate the intensity of the problem.

IMPORTS
[And Other Non-Domestic Deelites Your Never Heard Of Because The Cretins Who Run This Rag Don't Publish My Reviews Anymore]

by (still) Your Sacred Cowboy

But first:

There's no question that Stevie Wonder cops the honors this year, and there being no question about that, you're probably wondering why I mentioned it. Me Too. Other home-front high-risers include Tom Waits (Yay!), Patti Smith, and probably the new Joni. On the American jazz scene I'm still ignorant to three decimal places, so you just get whatever Cahill, Armstrong, Leccese & Chalfen tell you to, but let me just mention two albums in that general vicinity which caught my ear, those being The People's Republic by the Revolutionary Ensemble and Your Mind is On Vacation by Mose Allison. See also The Shaggs.

Cultural Kidney-puch: The dropping of the Firesign Theater's contract by Columbia.

Poots for Sure: Zoot Allures--Phi Zappa Krappa.

"That's metaphysically absurd--How do I know what you hear?": Kiss

Single of the Year: "Disco Duck"-- Actually it's not particularly clever, but every disco lover I know hates it so it must have something. Infinitely superior, if somehat over-played, is the local hit, "Disco Cow" by the Not Ready for Anything Players.

Anyway:

Let's get down to cases. As some of you may recall, it is my infallible opinion that most of good progressive "Rock"-- a misleading term, these days -- is coming out of England and Europe these days. Since obviously I didn't get hold of every album to come out in England and Europe this year, the following list is by nature a fairly random sample. Please note that those album titles followed by an asterisk (*) have been released in the U.S. All others can be found at or ordered from your favorite downtown vinyl vendor.

BRAND X: Unorthodox Behavious--Not to be confused with Boston's Brand X, this bunch of moonlighters from other bands notably Phil Collins, drummer for Genesis, and Percy Jones, occasional Eno bassist, have put together an album which could be the working definition of jazz-rock for a while to come. Collins has never been so hot in his life and combined with Jones' uique frog-on-methedrine bass, and incredible amount of empathy within the band, a strong sense of humor in the writing, and excellent production by ex-Mahavishnu producer Scott MacKay, an album has been created which is both enjoyable and rewarding on many levels.

HENRY COW: Concerts-- Englands-- and probably the world's--most avant-garde "rock" band in a double-record live outing. Although occasionally marred by poor recording and a bit too much no totally successful free improvisation, it is packed with more musical ideas than the entire output of just about any other five bands I've ever heard. And while we're in the neighborhood, if you think the potential of the guitar has been totally explored by Hendrix and his ilk, allow me to call your attention to an album entitled Guitar Solos 2, which features one section by Henry Cow's own Fred Frith, one by insane jazzer Derek Bailey and one apiece by the lesser-known but equally idiosyncratic G. F. Fitzgerald and Hans Reicher. Things never done with (or to) a guitar before-- very abstract and amazing.

MIKE MANTLER/EDWARD GOREY: The Hapless Child--This album strikes a well-aimed and deserved blow for the people who found that life was just a bowl of cherries but died from all the red dye #2 that went into them. Mantler, who has previously done a musical illustration of the words of Samuel Beckett, has turned his composing talents to selections from Gorey's Amphigorey, and enlisted an incredibly diverse and talented crew to back him up, including Robert Wyatt, Jack Dejohnnette, Carla Bley, Terje Rypdal and Steve Swallow. Sort of the musical equivalent of a Charles Addams cartoon.

ENO: Another Green World-- The brevity of each cut keeps him from reaching any real depth but the fact that such individualistic music should make it onto the "popular" music scene at all is encouraging. See also his second collaboration with Robert Fripp, Evening Star.

STEPHEN MICUS: Archaic Concerts-- A breath of fresh air from the past, if that's not a contradiction in terms. Beautiful, floating spirit-music, played on instruments of ancient lineage from around the world-- from the vibraphone-ish Gender of Bali to the Shakuhachi (bamboo flute) of Japan-- all played by Mucus. Like nothing I've heard.

VANGELIS: Albedo 0.39-- Probably the most pertinent thing I could say about Vangelis O. Papathanassiou to the average reader is this: He was the first one asked to be Rick Wakeman's replacement in Yes, but he declined on the grounds that Yes was not progressive enough for him. The only album of his which is still available in the U.S. is the one previous to this, called Heaven And Hell, and it is, I think, the better of the two, but Albedo 0.39 is probably the best introduction to his work, Also recommended, but not as highly, is the recent import re-issue of his soundtrack music for "Can You Hear The Dogs Barking?".

JABULA: Thunder Into Our Hearts-- An interesting culture warp here. What we have is an African band picking up on contemporary electric jazz-- which is basically a descendant of African music-- and adapting it to: African music! That is, Jabula uses the ages-old folk music and melodies of Southern Africa as a basis for a totally modern music, melodic, involving, and mostly full of joy.

IVOR CUTLER: Jammy Smears-- The man was obviously a very high Zen priest in his last lifetime and has dedicated this one to spreading the essential koans. How much more poignant becomes the dewdrop upon the leaf after it is revealed that "If you boil an egg in a teapot, you cannot pour it out the spout."

PHILLIP GLASS: Music In Twelve Parts [Parts 1 & 2]-- Music which experiments with repeating, interlocking patterns and variations, extremely similar to Terry Riley. Hypnotic.

GONG: Shamal-- While not up to the high standard of whimsey set by departed leader Daevid Allen (whose solo album of this year, Good Morning!, was okay but not his best) musically Gong is still alive and well, if not in peak form. A bit too commercial and funk-oriented, not unlike some of Weather Report's lesser moments, but still well-composed and exuberant.

STOMU YAMASHTA: GO-- An imaginative concept-work involving the talents of, among others, Stevie Winwood, ex-Santana drummer Michael Shrieve and German synthesizerist Klaus Schulze. The only reason this album isn't any higher on the list is that the ending is such a total wash-out. A really nice blending of the various schools of music, though.

CAN: Flowmotion-- I haven't heard this one yet, but I've never known this band of German studio nuts to put out an album that was less than fascinating.

Over-all, not nearly as good a year for music as the last, but not a bad year by any means. JEM records, my source of imports, is starting up a second domestic label, Import Records, to complement their already flourishing Passport label-- brought us Brand X, among others. The Import label is apparently going to handle a lot of the nuttier stuff, such as the Ron Geesin-Roger Waters (of Pink Floyd) collaboration, Music From The Body, so things are looking up, I guess. Meanwhile I'm stuck in a record store in Hanover Mall where the Bonzo Dog Band are filed under folk music, so if anyone hears of anything in my line let me know c/o the Salt, okay. Thank you, good bless you, and God night.

Behan Cynical, Behan Tragic

"The Hostage"
by Brendan Behan
Reviewed by Donna M. Scott
Below the Salt Staff

"The Hostage", a light-hearted musical-tragedy by Brendan Behan which focuses on the bloody violence in Northern Ireland of the early Sixties, is the final play of the semester offered by the University Ensemble Theater. Behan captures the soul of the Irish people by skillfully blending cynical humor and the love of song amid the poverty of their lives.

His characters cling to what dignity they, as a unified people, have left — Irish patriotism. Behan attempts to cleanse the wounds of two-hundred years of British occupation by presenting both the Irish and English characters as innocent people, not responsible for their situation.

The action is set in a rundown boardinghouse-music hall. Its tenaments are the rejects of society; the poor caretaker and his mistress, the feeble-minded owner, several hardworking "ladies of the evening", a young servant girl, a couple of rowdy homosexuals, two visitors, an unstable civil servant, and a piano player for accompaniment.

Their day to day existence is interrupted by two IRA gunmen and a kidnapped young English soldier. The gunmen plan to shoot the soldier the next morning in reprisal if another IRA member is hung by the Ulster government.

Things get complicated as the night progresses and the hatred between the English soldier and his hosts diminish.

Director Don Boros creatively uses the set, which is built in three levels to represent the boarding house for continuous action before the play begins and during the two intermissions to illustrate passage of time. Besides the central action on the main level of the stage, simultaneous re-action from the other characters is occurring on these levels.

The performance is intensified by the carefully selected lighting effects.

The lighting director is John B. Forbes. June B. Gaeke designed the costumes and the scenery was done by Jeff A. Fiala. Michael Melton was the Dramaturg.

The central character, the caretaker, is superbly done by William Pullman, who narrates the action, sings and skillfully performs the Irish humor. Barbara Crook plays his long-suffering mistress. Comic ingenuity is supplied by Gary Kaplan, David Cole, and Rick Martin as they swish and cavort across the stage. The part of the young English soldier is dramatically done by Robert Tupper. The notorious ladies are Susan J. Danizio, Luise Balakier, Kathie Lynn Baldwin, Rina M. Miller and Wendy Thompson. The two IRA gunmen are Greg Bernet and Stephen Shea. Karen Cowe is the young servant girl who befriends the English soldier and Jane Perkins plays the daffy social worker. The hard-drinking Russian soldier is Jim O'Connell and Francis Picahnick cleverly portrays the boardinghouse owner. Harry Munns and Jay Charbonneau are the policemen. F. Helena Donovan is the piano accompanist.

Surviving Pretense

JACKSON BROWNE
The Pretender
(Asylum)

Where the past year has been a celebrant one for the nation birthday, Jackson Browne has spent much of 1976 very down and out.

The suicide of his wife should have been enough to have beaten him down, yet he has turned this tragedy into a source of strength and inspiration. It could also have been perversely easy to milk the year's past events for their melodramatic occurances, as can often happen to romantics. Yet Browne's strongest songs have come from the unfortunately dire circumstances life has dealt him.

"A Song for Adam" which graced his first album was about the death of a friend. Now the death has moved closer, and it is apparent that he has grown wiser and more compassionate.

The superficial changes in Jackson's style are first most apparent. Jon Landau has been brought in to produce, and as he did for Springsteen, Landau brought forward some of the punch inherent, but often laid back, in Jackson's style. He has added horns and strings that manage to add very effective coloration. The drums are miked more precisely, giving an even greater edge to the basics of Browne's tunes.

The emphasis, the attention, is primarily on Jackson Browne's songs. His most consistent themes, of death and the fear of it, of the quest for love, and celebration of life are still there. But I get the feeling that his perspectives are changing. Previous albums seemed rooted in the extended adolesence that California allows.

The changes he's been through have now enabled him to write more poignant songs, like "Sleep's Dark and Silent Gate" and more bitter tunes, "The Pretender".

Jackson Browne, like Joni Mitchell, has done well by relating his own life's experiences to his audience through his songs. By remaining true to his own sense of values and direction, the honesty and purity of his hopes and visions comes through, even when his songs become a trifle embarassing. Here he is on stage before thousands, telling all his innermost fears and failings. This either becomes cheap, vicarious sensation, or touching confession, and hesitant admission into his confidence.

Jackson Browne's best songs to date are not on The Pretender. But overall, the creation and deliverance of this album is the physical manifestation of his finest ideals. It is the gospel of a survivor, not a pretender.

Tricorder Readings:

PERIGEO
Valley Of The Temples
[RCA]

My eyes bugged out at the album cover - imagine Greek temples! - and the equally sleazy song titles - "2000 And Two Nights" - ya you know all about it and you have a right to expect the worse. Well you think you do. Unlike other Italian tragedies - Banco for example - Perigeo stears clear of progressive rock wasteland tendencies. They do it so well in fact that the current top of the Italian slag heap band - PFM - had better watch out. Valley Of The Temples is almost as good as Chocolate Kings.

Perigeo's music is subtle - I find them very close to Germany's Kraan - minus the loose screws of course. Both bands utilize a cross of sublime boogie and jazz rock that floats through you. Valley Of The Temples would make an excellent Kraan album in fact - saxaphonist Claudio Fasoli sounds like he studies the Kraanies songbook every week. Which is not to suggest that Perigeo can be written off - comparisions to Kraan are somewhat valid, but Perigeo makes their own hefty brand of music. A late night, easy listening, but interesting lp for sure. Destined to be the sleeper of '76. (B†)

Karma
'Celebration'
Horizon

I was introduced to this new group Karma as A&M's answer to Earth, Wind and Fire and after listening to 'Celebration' I've got to say that for way too much of the album that is exactly what they are. Cuts like 'Funk de'Mambo', 'Karma', 'Well' and 'Kwanzaa' are excellent imitation Fire. In fact Karma plays Fire almost better than the Fire themselves, certainly the instrumentation is better.

But there is a problem with that. When I'm listening to a new group I don't want to hear imitation Fire or anyone else. What I'm listening for is 'pure' Karma. I want to hear something unique otherwise I could just as easily listen to a genuine Fire lp.

Not all is lost however. Imitation reigns for less than half the album. Very happily I can concede that 25 min. and 62 sec. of 'Celebration' is 'pure' Karma. I am thinking in particular of 'Amani', 'So True', and 'Suite Syreeta'. The latter, inspired by Syreeta Wright, commands eleven min. of side two with the most diverse and sensitive music. In fact the only grievance I have with 'pure' Karma is that at times it drags a little, lost in its sensitivity. It's a minor grievance however because as soon as I begin to feel bored in flies a solo. And Oh those solos! Riffs by Ernie Watts on saxes, Oscar Brashear on Trumpet, and Geroge Bohana on trombones, to mention a few, could coax the life back into a dead fish. Such treats as Syreeta Wright and Deniece Williams on vocals don't go unnoticed either. Their voices are a beautiful touch.

All in all 'Celebration ' is a excellent album if you're into Soul, imitation or no, by all means buy it. You won't be disappointed. I just hope that next album-around Karma begins and ends with 'pure' Karma. It would be intresting to see what they come up with. I'll be waiting fingers crossed.

Fly Me, I'm Joni

JONI MITCHELL
Hejira
(Asylum)

Ingmar Bergman and Carlos Casteneda meet in a dark and smoky caberet where a thin, translucent blonde is talk-singing in her charcoal filtered vodka-voice. You and I, we sit to the side sharing another round of bourbon, and I am bitching about that woman. It's love-hate, to be sure.

She is either tempting and seductive or austere and aloof. When I want she doesn't, vice versa. Ya, she's to catch this flight tonight, and I'm stuck here cold and alone. She'll be warm, she'll travel all around, then she'll be back. It's the lesson of life on the road; so if our eyes only meet twice tonight, it's a little like touching, isn't it?

Hejira is literally the flight Mohammed took from Mecca to Medina, here it is the act of fleeing and travelling, that Mitchell devotes her considerable talents to. Like her most recent albums, this one is a mix of personal growth and experience along with flights of fancy. While you and I are earthbound, she is a bird, here a crow, able to slip from point to point with ease and grace. You make it all seem so easy, Joni.

Rock musicians have made much of the mystique and mundanity of it all. Often times it results in the artist(s) uncertain of what town they might be in at any given moment, where they merely perform the same songs over again to another faceless crowd. It becomes much like the curse of one doomed in Hell to forever roll a stone up one hill, watch it roll down, and to repeat the action.

Mitchell has managed to get beyond this trap, on Hejira, if not in performance because of her unique perspective. As often as she is swept away by the affluence of the lifestyle she finds herself leading, she is also able to nimbly step aside and view the same scene with dispassionate clarity. Thus, "Furry Sings the Blues" places her in the audience just as "Amelia" is the artist's thoughts.

A Freudian metaphor for sexuality is flight, where, in the act of becoming so light and gravity free, one is subject to the currents of passion as well. Joni Mitchell has been victim as often as victor in her relationships. And much of the content of her songs are letters or thoughts to a lover that is lost at the moment, whether it is to time, distance, or circumstances. The loss of love is seen to be as inevitable as her eventual travelling on. And life on the road becomes a thing unto itself, rather than the transition from place to place.

The road is in her soul. The cover (designed by Mitchell) documents this, as the figure of Joni is filled with a highway tapering off in the distance. She is alone on a barren plain, on a frozen lake, except for two background figures, a virginal bride and a figure skater.

Her lyrics have become less and less subject to rhyme scheme and rhythm boundaries. They are her own; what read as disjointed ramblings as liner notes becomes a very fluid and perfect statement as she sings. And the voice is again more melodic than it was on Hissing of Summer Lawns, her prior release. The music which had been done by the LA Express under her and Tom Scott's direction, has receeded, become less technological (while remaining almost totally electric), and more elemental. If one were to blank out her vocal tracks, the melody of the song would be impossible to detect in the instrumental backing. It isn't there, it is most often only hinted at in her voice.

Mitchell remains virtually unchallenged in the creation of musical art forms. There is a considerably larger challenge to sharing her vision. In part that will depend upon your acceptance of Hejira, the Flight, as a valid experience or an negation of responsibilities. She is running from or striving toward something.

And she is clearly striving at a goal few of us can hope to reach.

PHIL SPECTOR'S
Christmas Album
(Warner-Spector)

This is one of the classics. It was so in 1963 when it was first released, remained so when it was an import classic up until this year when Warners, with Phil Spector, decided to re-release this cherished vinyl. One look at the songs and artists will tell you why this is a mandatory piece of Christmas cheer.

Christmas 1975 witnessed a wild hunt for good Holiday albums for a party. We missed this (but found Elvis' Christmas Album another you should locate) which was just what we were seeking. "White Christmas", "Frosty the Snowman", "I Saw Mommy Kissing Santa Claus", and more, 13 seasonal, powerful cuts in all. All performed by Spector's stable of stormtroopers, the likes of the Crystals, the Ronettes, Bob B. Soxx and the Blue Jeans. The combination is timeless.

So if you are looking for that special album to rock around the Christmas tree with, look no more. You'll have it in your hands when you get this.

repeats. The sarcastic bantering continues as Rosenfeld admits to frequenting Poor Richards III, "a good place to talk and dance."

Rosenfeld is much as ease with men. "I grew up with three brothers," explains the Springfield resident. Rosenfeld is also much at home with the University. "I'm carrying on a Rosenfeld tradition."

Lynne Forman, self-acknowledged 'other-half of Heidi,' laughs, "She is! Everyone of her family graduated from UMass."

It grows late in the afternoon. Rosenfeld asks a friend for the time. "I have to run," she says, jumping up from the table. Forman dashes away with her, hurriedly explaining, "We both spend a few hours at the Boltwood-Belchertown Program." They wave goodby to their friends promising to meet at Happy Hour at the Pub the next day.

On Monday nights Rosenfeld is involved in arts and crafts with the people at the Belchertown State Hospital, in addition to her two jobs. Rosenfeld donates her time and efforts to those less fortunate than herself.

Smoking survey

Project Pulse has conducted a telephone survey concerning students views on issues relating to smoking. The survey was requested by the UMass Coalition for Environmental Equality. Results of the 150 students who responded follows.

While only 20 per cent of the respondents thought that "quit smoking programs" work for thos ewho try them, 84 per cent said they would like Health Services to offer such a program.

Three quarters of those responding were interested in having more information available on campus regarding the effects of smoking on non-smokers, the survey found.

The survey also reported that 78 per cent of the smokers obey non smoking signs on campus while 11 per cent do not. Another 11 per cent say they only obey the signs occasionally.

The survey also reported that 87 per cent of those who responded said they have stopped smoking on some occasion when someone around them has asked them to.

Senate RSO financial review well received

By RICHARD KLEIN
Collegian Staff

"Incredibly favorable" was how Dean of Students William F. Field characterized the results of an external review of the Recognized Student Organization (RSO) Office's financial controls and policies.

Field's comments came after the results were presented at a short meeting yesterday in Whitmore Administration Building.

Dean Field termed the report "a tribute to the Senate" and said it may be 1978 before the University's accounting system will be able to accomplish some of the things RSO is doing now.

Various people, including members of the University Board of Trustees, "have had anxieties and concerns about that trust and others," according to Robert L. Woodbury, vice-chancellor for Student Affairs. But the auditors "felt that the system was a good one and said so," Woodbury said.

"I was surprised with the fact that the auditors were saying things you just wouldn't expect auditors to say," was the reaction of Armand H. Demers, who as acting coordinator of Student Activities bears a large responsibility for the actions of RSO.

The "review and evaluation" was prepared by Peat, Marwick, Mitchell, and Co. of Boston. According to the text of the review, it was not actually an audit, but was rather a review of the system of financial controls and procedures in RSO.

A "Phase II" may follow, in which 100 transactions in the RSO system would be followed by the auditors, and the results then inspected, according to Tommy Kerrins, Student Senate treasurer. The Senate is seriously considering requesting such an audit to thoroughly test the integrity of the system, Kerrins said.

"Our report did not disclose any significant weaknesses," is how the accounting firm's report ended its evaluation of most aspects of the RSO's operations.

Several recommendations were made, however, especially in the area of the Electronic Data Processing (computer) system. RSO reports it has already implemented some of the proposed changes, the report says.

Present at the closed half-hour meeting were members of the administration, including Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, representatives from the Student Senate, and three members of the accounting firm which prepared the review.

Post Christmas blues due

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Come January, the "unfulfilled promise of Christmas" is likely to result in widespread post-holiday depression, according to psychiatrists and social service agencies here.

If past years are any indication, the weeks following Christmas can leave behind cases of severe depression, loneliness and suicidal tendencies.

Unlike larger cities where more people are alone and the days preceding Christmas are the worst, relations of southern Maine manage to hang together through the holidays, said Dr. Alan M. Elkins, chief of psychiatry and director of the Community Mental Health Center.

"January erupts," said Neva S. Cram, administrative director of Ingraham Volunteers, which receives calls about marital problems, alcoholism, parent-child relationships and lack of money.

Elkins said "the unfulfilled promise of Christmas" is at the root of the problem.

"Christmas is commercialized and oversold, and people obviously get disappointed when Christmas Day comes and it's pretty much like any other day. . .

The Alliance union consists of workers from the AFL-CIO and the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employes (ASSCEME).

UMass state workers are covered under ASSCEME Local 1776, but the University must reach a separate agreement with its local chapter because the University is given the right by the state to seek separate labor contracts due to fiscal autonomy.

When the agreement is reached, the state workers of the Amherst, Worcester and Boston Campuses will be affected.

Cronin said that just recently the state has reclassified the pay scale for janitors and has awarded the residence and University custodians a higher base scale.

"We understand the plight of the state's workers and feel the increase is justified. They have to make a living too," Cronin said. "We as, students do not have much of a say in this matter, but we hope the University increases the financial aid awards to compensate for the proposed increases."

Carter adds two

ATLANTA (Compiled from the wires) — President-elect Jimmy Carter added two more men to his Cabinet yesterday but revealed that the woman widely expected to be named his commerce secretary turned him down.

He said at the news conference, at which he named W. Michael Blumenthal and Rep. Brock Adams, D-Wash., as treasury and transportation secretaries, that Jane Cahill Pfeiffer asked that she not be considered for a Cabinet position.

There was no explanation from Carter or his aides and it was not known who else might be a contender for the job.

Pfeiffer is a former vice president of the IBM Corp. and was reported to have been in line to be named commerce secretary and the fourth woman ever to serve in the Cabinet.

After introducing Blumenthal and Adams, Carter said that once his Cabinet is filled, he wants to meet with everyone in it after Christmas to coordinate policy.

Asked if any individuals or organizations have veto power over his choices, Carter said, "the U.S. Senate would be the only one. No one else has any veto power, or authority or influence over my decisions." He said his appointments are "completely" on the basis of merit.

Carter previously named Atlanta banker Bert Lance as director of the Office of Management and Budget and Wall Street lawyer Cyrus R. Vance as secretary of state.

The President-elect said he will announce additional appointments Thursday, but he added that a secretary of Defense will not be among them. Harold Brown, president of the California Institute of Technology, is reportedly the front-runner for that post.

Carter said he expects to have all of his Cabinet named and ready for a joint meeting to be held between Christmas and New Year's.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Saudi Arabia for oil price-freeze

DOHA, Qatar [AP] — Oil Minister Ahmed Zaki Yamani of Saudi Arabia said yesterday that his country, the world's largest oil exporter, will call for a six-month freeze of oil prices at current levels.

Virtually all members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, the international oil cartel which controls 80 per cent of the world's oil exports, have said they want a price increase. The amount has been expected to be between 8 and 15 per cent although some members want to go as high as 25 per cent.

Yamani said Saudi Arabia changed its position from favoring a "reasonable increase" in the price of $11.51 for a barrel of benchmark crude because the world's economic recovery has not been as strong as expected.

The Saudi oil minister made the statement on arriving in this Persian Gulf emirate for Wednesday's ministerial session of OPEC, which embraces the world's 13 leading oil exporters.

Gilmore gets death date today

SALT LAKE CITY [UPI] — The State of Utah moved quickly yesterday to reschedule the execution of Gary Gilmore, who broke a 25-day hunger strike and ordered his attorneys to drop all legal obstacles to his death.

Fourth District Judge J. Robert Bullock ordered the condemned man to appear at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday for the setting of his third execution date.

In Washington, the killer's mother asked the U.S. Supreme Court to take a second look at its decision to lift a stay of Gilmore's execution.

Gilmore's lawyers, acting on his instructions, requested the District Court to dismiss a petition which sought to have his death sentence tossed out on rounds it wasn't imposed quickly enough.

The condemned man ended his fast with a cheese and baloney sandwich and later ate a prison breakfast of french toast and cereal.

When the renewed effort to prevent the execution was taken to the U.S. Supreme Court, civil rights and anti-death penalty groups in Utah said they would await the high court's response before filing their own requests for stays in local state or federal courts.

Pope attacks abortion in peace speech

VATICAN CITY [UPI] — Pope Paul VI yesterday attacked abortion as "a blow to peace" and appealed to mankind to heed "the voice of innocent blood" in speech for World Day of Peace."

The 79-year-old Roman Catholic pontiff also warned that catastrophe "looms on the horizon of the future" unless world leaders learn that the cuase of peace cannot be dissociated from the sanctity of life.

The papal speech, distributed in connection with the Catholic church's celebration of the World Day of Peace Jan. 1, also condemned terrorism, police torture and the world arms race.

Expanding on the theme, "If You Want Peace, Defend Life," the Pope said:

"Every crime against life is a blow to peace, especially if it strikes at the moral conduct of the people, as often happens today, with horrible and often legal ease, as in the case of the suppression of incipient life by abortion."

"Human life is sacred from the first moment of its conception and until the last instant of its natural survival in time," the Pope said. "Those who have had the misfortune, the implacable guilt, the ever renewed remorse at having deliberately suppressed a life know this and feel this."

Shot trouble

ATLANTA (UPI) — Federal health officials said yesterday they are investigating reports that at least 30 persons who received swine flu shots later developed a paralysis which sometimes persists for weeks.

The national Center for Disease Control said it picked up reports of the paralysis, known as the Guillain-Barre' syndrome, through its own extensive flu surveillance network which monitors the immunization program and reactions to the influenza vaccine. The CDC said state health departments were being asked to join in the CDC investigation.

The CDC said there was no evidence to link the reported cases to vaccination and that there did not appear to be an increased number of cases of Guillain-Barre' syndrome occurring in the country.

Editor arrested

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Percy Qoboza, South Africa's leading black journalist, was questioned and held by police for eight hours yesterday in an action that brought wide criticism of South African authorities.

The International Press Institute in London declared it was "shocked and dismayed" by the arrest in early morning darkness and cabled South African Justice Minister James Kruger to release Qoboza and 15 other black and white journalists currently imprisoned.

Bombs linked

BOSTON (AP) — Components of a dynamite time-bomb found at a Needham chemical plant match bomb parts recovered from two courthouse explosions in Massachusetts earlier this year, federal agents said yesterday.

A group calling itself the Sam Melville—Jonathan Jackson Unit has claimed responsibility for the three bombs and another used against a Revere bank.

Narrow miss

BEIRUT (UPI) — A top Christian leader escaped an assassination attempt yesterday in a bombing which destroyed his car and further split the quarreling Christian ranks.

Christian Phalangist officials said a 10-pount TNT bomb attached to a timing device had been planted in the car of Karim Pakradouni and went off 30 minutes after he had left the vehicle at 8 a.m.

Pakradouni is a member of the politburo of the Phalangist party — Lebanon's largest Christian political organization. He played a key role in negotiations with the Syrians at the height of the civil war

Scandal cure

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Rep. Jim Wright, the newly elected House Democratic leader, yesterday defended his wife's employment as a congressional aide, saying more such involvement might have prevented Capitol Hill sex scandals.

CANNONSBURG, Mich. (UPI) — "Indian Joe" Cizauskas may have the smell of liquor in his hair, but people from miles around don't mind so long as his weird lifestyle doesn't affect his Christmas tree prices.

"Same price as 25 years ago," bragged the weather-worn frontiers man as he surveyed his field of handplanted trees selling for 50 cents to $2. "I'm doing my part to fight inflation. I undersell everybody."

But Cizauskas, whose age is uncertain although he retired from a tannery 30 years ago, could teach a few things to the most dedicated scrooge.

On his rustic, crumbling farm northeast of Grand Rapids, Cizauskas lives on a pittance of Social Security and what he earns from the sale of trees and fish from his tiny hatchery.

Foot driver

PROVIDENCE (UPI) — His right foot resting comfortably on a special knob on the driver's wheel, a calm John Williams passed his Rhode Island road test yesterday with a score of 89.

John was born 17 years ago without arms, a victim of the drug thalidomide. His slender feet — barefoot for the test despite subfreezing temperatures — can do anything most hands can do.

"You gotta watch your speed on the straightaway. You're a little too hasty," warned driving inspector Salvatore Mellone after he handed John his scorecard. "You know where you took your written test. You can pick up your license in there."

A Portsmouth native, John is a student at the Crotched Mountain Rehabilitation Center in Greenfield, N.H.

"At first parallel parking was pretty hard," he said.

Coal car

SAN LEANDRO, Calif. (UPI) — Up until now, Marshall Owen, a 48-year-old artist and inventor, has kept his coal burning steam car a secret. He invented it in 1952.

Now that the engine can get 10 miles per pound of coal, he thinks it is time to let the automotive world know about it.

"We have kept a very low profile up to this point," said Owen. "Now things are beginning to look good."

He said the OVE Owen Vapor Engine burns specially treated coal, heating a small amount of liquid which vaporizes and supplies the power, much like a steam engine. The power is provided directly, requiring no transmission.

"The emissions are much lower by a long shot than from gasoline engines," he said. "The coal is treated by a special process and is extremely clean. There is hardly any measure of nitrous oxides, and carbon monoxide is way below gasoline engines."

Blue Santa

DENVER (UPI) — Police officers David Abrams and Robert Bales first met 8-year-old Willie with a stolen 89-cent plastic race car in his hand.

"He told us Santa didn't always come to his house on Christmas," Abrams said.

The patrolmen lectured the boy for stealing the toy, then bought it for him. But the thought of a small boy having a Christmas without presents continued to nag them.

Abrams and Bales quietly made a visit to his home. Christmas morning Willie will find a bicycle from Santa in his living room.

"To tell you the truth, I don't like cops," Willie's mother said. "But at least these two care. They're concerned about what happens."

But it wasn't easy to convince Willie's mother to accept the gift.

MassPIRG needs student support to continue operation

By RICHARD E. BARRELL
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) may be forced to cease operations at the University due to lack of student support.

According to Peter Bogle, MassPIRG staff attorney, the number of students contributing payments with student fee bills has fallen close to 50 per cent in the past semester.

MassPIRG bylaws contain a self-destruct provision which terminates the fee collection agreement with the UMass Board of Trustees if fewer than 50 per cent support the organization.

Bogle said he realizes students must make some hard decisions about money matters but, he said, he thinks MassPIRG is an "unbelievable two-dollar bargain."

Bogle said MassPIRG's record this semester has been impressive:

— PIRG spearheaded the Massachusetts Bottle Bill effort, a nearly successful referendum campaign. Working with other groups and a combined budget of $30,000, PIRG took on bottle and can interests which waged a $2,000,000 campaign. The bill lost by less than one per cent.

— Pushed for labeling and restriction in the use of fluorocarbon propellents, which federal agents are ordering phased out.

— Investigated and reported to the UMass Department of Public Utilities abuse by the New England Telephone Co.

— Sponsored a two-day UMass teach-in on nuclear power which featured consumer-advocate Ralph Nader.

— Published in conjunction with the Valley Advocate a survey of area banks.

— Lobbied for and obtained passage of a bill requiring public agencies to obtain estimates on the long-term cost of owning and ent types of heating and cooling systems, including solar and wind equipment. Long-term estimates are important, according to Bogle, since solar heating has a high initial but low operating, cost since there are no fuel costs.

In the area of nutrition, PIRG project coordinator Susan A. Kohler has been working with a group of 10 UMass students since early fall to help increase student awareness of the importance of proper student awareness of the importance of proper nutrition. Food labeling and dating regulations being issued by the state have been advocated for some time by PIRG, Kohler said.

Two UMass students currently co-chair PIRG's Executive Committee, a landmark, according to Bogle.

Miriam B. Michelson and Donna E. Bixler, both economics majors, share the responsibilities of chairing the student-run group.

Bixler, who headed MassPIRG's student voter registration drive, said PIRG worked with students to obtain registration services at the campus dining commons. She also said PIRG worked with town clerks in Amherst and area towns to insure that student rights to register are respected.

Although PIRG came under scrutiny by the trustees during October, it received continued support, according to Bogle.

"PIRG and the students who support it have proven themselves with the Bottle Bill, the telephone company report and nutrition information work to be an effective and dynamic political force in this state," he said.

Students interested in PIRG should call 256-6434 or drop by the office in the "carriage shops".

Physical Plant keeps heat on

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

The Physical Plant has been doing a good job of heating the campus lately — maybe a little bit too good.

The temperature for every building on campus is supposed to be 68F. but a spot check of 12 separate locations yesterday afternoon, showed that none were under 70F.

In a classroom on the ground floor of the Graduate Research towers it was as high as 79F. On the 11th floor of the Main Library, it was 75F. It was also 75F. in a practice room in Old Chapel.

John Hoffman, a member of the technical staff at the Physical Plant, said the heat generally gets turned on sometime in October, depending on when the plant hears from occupants of campus dorms, offices and other buildings.

There are a number of more modern buildings on campus that are built without windows that open. These are sometimes conditioned with a mixture of air conditioning and heating all year round, Hoffman said.

This is, in some cases, due to the fact that classrooms, by law, must have a certain amount of air circulation. For example, a room that is 300 square feet might need to have a complete air change three times in an hour.

Most places on campus, including dorms, classrooms, and some offices, have temperature controls that cannot be altered manually. Hoffman said this is because if people could change the temperature to suit their needs, they might damage the temperature balance in the building.

As it is, Hoffman said, students use paper clips, scissors, and knives to try to change the temperature, and sometimes they succeed. Hoffman credits the excessive heat in the Main Library to such meddling.

"It's not just students, it's professors too," he said. He doesn't believe the situation would change if the controls were manual.

There are five people at the University whose jobs are to check on temperatures all over campus. "We have about $3.5 million worth of temperature control apparatus on this campus. We really need 14 or 15 people to do the job that five are doing now," said Hoffman.

Some other temperatures across campus yesterday were:

—On the main floor of the Main Library: 70F.

—In an elevator in the Main Library: 75F.

—On the 26th floor of the Main Library: 74F.

—In Goodell: 76F.

—In the Dean of Students main office in Whitmore: 73F.

—In the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, Robert Woodbury's office, also in Whitmore: 71F.

In Staff Assistant to the Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs, Ruth Green's office, 79F.

Ruth Green said on occasion it has risen to 90F. in Woodbury's office. By contrast, she says she usually uses a space heater near her desk because it is cold in her office.

Green said she believes the wide temperature range is due to the design of the building. "They are always moving partitions, and then the thermostat for one room ends up next door, and the venting is thrown off," she said.

Hoffman said, "The comfort range in temperatures is so broad. It's a very hard job, trying to keep all these people happy.

Many students seek help from Mental Health

By ANN TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

Do the words "psychiatrist", "therapy", and "mentally unstable" still conjure up visions of craziness, schizophrenia and white padded cells? Evidently the answer is "no" on the UMass campus. More students are seeking help for their heads now than in past years, says Dr. Leighton C. Whitaker, director of the Mental Health Division of the University Health Services.

"The stigma associated with mental health is less when people are educated," Whitaker said.

With tension rising and finals threatening, now is the semester's peak season for the Mental Health Services on campus. An overall increase in people being treated is evident in the past three years.

The rising University enrollment has not been a major factor in this increase, Whitaker said. He stated an important factor was the move from Machmer to Hills North, where more space for group therapy is available.

"I don't really know the reason for the sharp increase," Whitaker said, speculating that "a worsened economy breeds more mental health problems.

The number of highly disturbed students seen at the clinic has grown considerably in the past two years. Although UMass has a low suicide rate, the Mental Health Services sees more suicidal students now than ever before, Whitaker said.

The Mental Health Division is one of seven divisions of the UMass Health Services. Individuals, couples, family and group therapy is provided. A 24-hour on-call service line, with a staff member always on-call, is also a part of the format.

The Mental Health Division deals mostly with students who are having academic trouble due to emotional upsets. Loss of a girlfriend, boyfriend or death of a parent are common catalysts. Students graduating and afraid of coping with the outside world is another problem.

Drug use, sexual problems and trouble adjusting to a large university are also prevalent problems being treated at the Mental Health Services.

"Often it's just the immediate problem, but this problem touches off something in the past which is also a sore point," Whitaker said.

The emphasis in therapy or counseling is on what the student presents as the problem.

"That is the crucial thing," Whitaker said. "If a person wants to deal on a deeper level with this problem, then we will too. We don't force them; it's stricly voluntary" he said.

In severe and suicidal cases, a special effort is made to help the person deal realistically with what is troubling him or her, Whitaker said.

The Mental Health Services at UMass are open to UMass and Hampshire College students with facilities available on both campuses. Student dependants, state employes and faculty also partake of the services offerings.

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich: June Soper lives in a tepee she built herself and outside of strange looks from neighbors she has no complaints. The structure is made of cedar posts, canvas and plastic with heat provided by a small electric heater and a fire pit which is also used for cooking. (UPI)

Cheap living... on a tepee budget

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. [UPI] — June Soper owns her own home and outside of strange looks from her neighbors in this northern Michigan town she has no complaints — except for the service she recently got when she wanted a telephone.

"That poor guy the serviceman just sat out there in the truck and stared," said Soper." 'That's a tepee!' and I said, 'You're right and I want a telephone.

" 'He said, 'Lady, they're gonna send somebody out here and find out what I've been drinking.' "

He wanted, she said, to give her a princess phone and she wanted a floor model and her arguments of "who am I trying to impress, the rabbits?" finally persuaded him and she got her phone — mostly for emergencies.

Her tepee is set up on the back of an amusement park on the outskirts of town.

"I'll never live in a house again," she said. "You can't improve on the design of a tepee."

The owner of the park allows her to string a line to the tepee for electricity and to use the park outhouses.

She lives on the land rent free and pays $8 a month for utilities. The heat in the tepee, which is 10-feet high and 10-feet in diameter at the base, is provided by a fire and a small electric heater.

New politicians start cramming

CAMBRIDGE (AP) — Why would 23 newly elected members of the 95th Congress flock to Harvard University to learn the nuts and bolts of Capitol Hill?

"Because this is where the brains are," Rep. Jim Mattox, D-Tex., said yesterday as he hitched up his blue jeans and boots. "I've tried to get in here all my life, and now I've made it."

The diverse group of legislators were the guests of Harvard's Institute of Politics and the Congressional Research Service at a week-long series of seminars on domestic and international public policy.

Health care, energy, unemployment and the budget dominated most of the discussions as the freshman class members, many of whom had no previous political experience, learned from the pro's.

"They're all about the age of my oldest son," said 70-year-old S.I. Hayakawa, former college president who will represent California in the U.S. Senate. "I am impressed with how bright and conscientious we are."

Old hands on the Hill, like Rep. Barber Conable, R-N.Y., educated the newcomers on tax policy while Rep. William S. Cohen, R-Maine, led a lengthy discussion on dealing with moral crises that may arise.

Most of the closed-door seminars were described as "brutally candid" and high brow. "I think several discussions went over some heads and under others," said Rep. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., a former editorial writer.

Harvard professors conducted classes on sophisticated foreign policy theories and economic models as the legislators, most dressed like graduate students, sipped coffee and listened intently.

When a session ended, several congressmen rushed for the telephone and took on the task of setting up appointments, arranging staff interviews and finding a place to live.

Safety Division to require welding permits

The Fire and Safety Division of Environmental Health and Safety is initiating a new practice in the area of welding and safety, effective January 1, 1977.

For welding of any sort done on this campus, we are going to require that a welding permit be secured from our office. The reasoning for this is simple. Safety procedures have long been established for welding operations, but we have found a near total abandonment of these safe practices. The result: fires. Most of the fires have gone unreported, and the injuries that accompany them have gone the same route.

On Wednesday, Nov. 26, a fire occurred in Fine Arts in the Rand Theatre, and if the sprinkler system wasn't there, the theatre would have been destroyed.

When you wish to engage in the welding process, come to N414 Morrill Science, the office of Environmental Health and Safety, and obtain a permit. Along with it, you will receive a Safe Practices Handout that we ask you to follow.

If you are a professor, and will be engaging in welding for your classroom work all semester, you can obtain a permit for the whole semester. If you are connected with a theatre group, you can obtain a permit that will cover the time your single production or play is being presented. In other words, each production staff must secure a permit for their own presentation.

The system may be inconvenient only in so far as someone must come to our office to obtain the permit and safety practices. I don't believe that is too much to ask for some safety practices that might save your life.

We ask for your cooperation in this matter, so we can begin to make some real progress towards fire safety here at the University. Please pass this information on to all in your department. If you have any questions, you can call at 5-2682, or stop in at N414 Morrill Science.

Continuing Ed sponsors wintersession workshops

Information is available now at UMass on a series of January workshops designed to meet some of the training needs of community groups by the Division of Continuing Education.

The series, called Communities In Action, will be offered for the first time as part of Continuing Education's Wintersession. These short, intensive, and low-cost workshops are intended for board members, staff, and volunteers of citizen councils and non-profit community organizations of all types.

Instructors for each of the 12 three-hour workshops are practitioners with both theoretical knowledge and practical experience. After spending just a few hours in the classroom, it is expected that participants can return to their organizations with new skills and ideas.

Areas include publicity and public relations, simple budgeting and accounting, setting objectives, long-range planning, program evaluation, writing skills, producing publications, accountability organizing, and more. Additional workshop topics will be added during the spring semester.

Credit courses, credit-free workshops and Communities In Action workshops in the areas of grantsmanship and school committees will also be part of Wintersession. Further information and registration material is available from Catalog Request, Box 835, Amherst, 01002, or from the Continuing Education Office, Hills House North on the UMass campus.

Continuing Ed course catalogs

Catalogs for evening credit courses offered this spring semester by the UMass Division of Continuing Education are now available.

Spring 1976 catalogs contain complete information on courses, degree options, student services, and a form that offers students the convenience of registering by mail through Jan. 6.

Over 100 courses are scheduled for the spring semester, which begins Jan. 25. Evening courses will be held on the UMass-Amherst campus and at Holyoke Community College, in cooperation with HCC.

The Evening College program is intended for the part-time, evening, non-traditional student. Each semester people throughout western Massachusetts enroll in Continuing Education classes to begin or continue work toward an undergraduate degree, increase career proficiency or for personal enrichment. Enrollment is open to anyone with a high school degree or equivalent.

Continuing Education students are eligible for veteran's benefits, and students carrying six or more credits may apply for financial aid. Catalogs are available at the Continuing Education Office, Hills House North on the UMass campus, or by writing Catalog Request, Box 835, Amherst, 01002.

Skating party tonight

The First Annual Christmastime Skating party will be held this evening from 6 to 9 p.m.

The brothers of Delta Chi have volunteered their snow removal services in the event of snow. Sun Music of Amherst has donated music to be recorded for the event. The Amherst Fire Department has offered manpower and equipment to flood the pools for a fresh skating surface.

Informed sources from the Associated Press in Nome, Alaska have confirmed the report that Santa Claus will appear at the party. Amherst residents and all University students and personnel are invited to the free party.

'Vows of silence' reign in Woodstock

By JOYCE GOLDBERG
Collegian Staff

The invitation read:

"You are invited to spend a weekend in a house set back in the woods of Woodstock, New York. Equipped with the luxuries of a sauna, fireplace, and potbelly stove, accommodations will cost only $4.00 which includes food, drink, and a friendly atmosphere. There is only one requirement; to attend you must take a 'vow of silence'."

The event did take place at 7:30 on a Saturday morning as five cars in a caravan left UMass for a weekend of total verbal silence. The purpose of the weekend was to communicate through the use of sign language.

Of the 30 UMass and Hampshire College students attending the Woodstock weekend, several had mastered the language and art of sign efficiently enough to communicate through natural gesture and pantomime.

Sign, easily learned by the obvious relationship between the sign and meaning, is used by both deaf and hearing people. Gestures are made with the use of hands and arms, combined with appropriate facial expression.

Surprisingly enough, no words were spoken within the house for the entire weekend. Jean, a UMass student described the participants: "No one spoke in the house all weekend, no one forgot td be silent." Another humorously referred to the group as "a nice group of quiet friends."

Donated for the weekend by the family of Robyn Zimmer, a Hampshire College student, the house is hidden in the isolated woods of Woodstock, New York. The once noisy reverberations of memories created seven years ago when hundreds of thousands of young people gathered for three days to experience the Woodstock Festival had now faded as the Zimmer's home became a silent learning-center for the enthusiastic students.

Laurel Chiten, organizer of the weekend, spoke of the learning process which occurred in Woodstock.

"The by-product of the weekend was that perhaps the students learned of the frustrations and isolation a deaf person might feel within our society where oral communication is stressed," she said.

While relaxing over a game of backgammon, listening to records, and taking advantage of the sauna, people who had been strangers, became acquainted by teaching one another sign language. The students found non-verbal communication an obstacle to understanding. One individual resorted to shaking his "reader".

The weekend was filled with sounds of snapping fingers, whistles, and laughter.

Meals were communally prepared, each person taking on a share of the cooking or chopping wood for the potbelly stove.

In the background, the trilling note of a flute accompanied the variety of people with different interests, talents, and goals who came together to contribute a part of themselves to the weekend.

The students interests varied but several were majoring in Communication Disorders or expressed a desire to work eventually in the growing field of interpreting for deaf people.

For some with little exposure to sign lanugage, the atmosphere was similar to being placed in a foreign country, forced to learn a foreign language to communicate.

Chiten, a senior at UMass, teaches intermediate American Sign Language and is a manual interpreter on campus. Many attending the weekend were students of her class.

She feels "the major problem with learning any foreign language in a classroom environment, and American Sign Language is in a sense a foreign language, is having the opportunity to use the language as a means of survival. The 'silent weekend' was established for the purpose of creating an assimilated environment to offer those students of the language an opportunity to be forced to communicate in sign language and-or mime."

As a social advantage, the weekend also gave the students in American Sign Language classes a chance to get acquainted with one another outside the classroom.

One participant explained,"The sign weekend helped in feeling more comfortable with sign language; using it to express yourself, talk casually, and joke around. It is important to sign with many different people and to become accustomed to the variations among speakers."

There are variations among signing, but more important there are two sign languages used by American Deaf people. "American Sign Language", taught at UMass is most commonly used. The other, "Sign English," follows a rigid, English grammatical scheme while "American Sign" doesn't follow the English syntax but is a different language from English.

"Sign English" and "American Sign Language" do not share the same sign-order.

While "Sign-English" strings signs together in the same order as English, "American Sign Language" omits prepositions and strings signs together in its own unique way.

As the students applied it in their "quiet weekend", "American Sign Language" entails the use of body movements and eye contact.

Inflections usually found in a voice are communicated to deaf people by facial expressions. For example, frowning, smiling, or frightful eyes all disclose emotions.

Reading lips is used simultaneously while reading sign, since in sign language there are many synonyms designated by the sign. This is known as "Total Communication."

A handful of one-credit colloquia and three-credit classes are available to students at UMass. Hampshire College also has a program. Information is available at the Student Handicapped Affairs Office.

Beneficial results of the weekend of quietude were felt by the students. One of them found "A great deal of peace in having to totally communicate with others without the use of sound... I've learned to value my communication (verbal and nonverbal) because of my experience in Woodstock."

A student who had no knowledge of sign language before the weekend learned the sign alphabet, allowing him to finger-spell each individual letter, slowly creating words.

The word games the English language allows people to play, the judgement of intelligence society places on speaking English accurately not only by what one says, but the style in which one speaks, became apparent to the students during the weekend. All agreed that they now value their sense of hearing which they often took for granted.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Wednesday, December 15 – Born today, you are one of those persons who makes decisions quickly and "for all time" – and within a short time, turns around and unmakes them again. Those who work with you will no doubt have come to depend more upon your unpredictable view, changing as it does from day or day, than upon the firm decisions you come up with. You would do well to arm yourself with an associate who knows you well enough to know, more or less, what you true mind is, an associate who, based upon such knowledge, can advise others as to which of your decisions really have the staying power claimed for them and which do not. With such an associate in your corner, others will not be reluctant to join you in work -- or, for that matter, in play.

In spite of the fact that restlessness and changeability mark your character most clearly, you are not one to be either restless or changeable when it comes to your relationships with members of the opposite sex. It would not be at all against your nature, therefore, were you to select a marriage partner while still a relative youth -- and to keep to that partner all your days. You will take tremendous joy out of home and heart, most particularly from the bringing up of a family. You will be a wise and good parent, developing in your children precisely that independence of mind that you do not possess.

Highly sensitive to the moods of others, you at times actually do yourself harm by thinking more of the other fellow's reaction to what you plan to do than of your own.

Thursday, December 16

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) – Financial reverses may make it difficult for you to decide upon family matters for the time being. It's best to lie low.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) – Lend a sympathetic ear to one who has shown himself willing to do the same for you in the past. Don't pretend not to notice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) – Unless you have confidence in yourself as a speaker, you would do well to write out your views of the present situation on the home front.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) – Radical changes are not indicated, though you may fear they are. Prepare youself, however, for minor adjustments.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) – Take a broadminded view of another's conversation. You may have to look beyond what is said to what is meant.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) – Take care that your fickleness does not lead to the serious emotional upset of another. Try to make a clean, kind break.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) – Errors made at this time should not be serious enough to be termed grievious: they may, however, prove to be exceedingly annoying.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) – Qualities imparted to the young may not prove tenacious. Make sure you do not ask a child to carry out a man's work.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) – You would do well to adopt new methods of operation where an old project is concerned. Progress requires a different slant on things.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) – Combine decisiveness with determination and you should be able to accomplish your ends before the opposition has time to interfere.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) – Substitutions may work in matters of food: they prove to be unhappy solutions when applied to people. Seek the company you wish.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) – Don't allow yourself to become discouraged simply because indications point to a coming failure. You may, with fortitude, win out.

Women, tension subject of course

The Women's Studies Program is offering a Winter session course, WoST 19Q, "Lives in Tension", during the January term, Jan. 3 to Jan. 22.

The course will examine the lives of Ida B. Wells, Emma Goldman and Agnes Smedly, all of whom dedicated themselves to social activism; we will analyze the reasons for this choice and the problems they encountered as women involved in various movements for social change. The interdisciplinary nature of the study of women's lives will also be emphasized.

Discussion explores the trade union movement, anarchism, racism, lynching, the struggle against poverty and other topics. Lectures, discussion, music and films included. All students welcome. Enroll through Continuing Education-Wintersession, Hills House, 545-3653.

The FCSCB, in conjunction with the Commuter Collective, has made the computer ride board "Easyrider" available to the entire Five-College Student Community. Easyrider is funded by the SGA with matching money from the office of the dean of students. The Easyrider number is 545-0859 and is open during the following hours:

A holiday bag of goodies

By MIKE BERGER
Collegian Staff

As this holiday season comes into view, let us take some time to remember the sporting world and some of its current personalities. For without them, life would be mundane, dull, listless and without a doubt, boring.

So therefore, I have organized, planned, and put together Berger's Bag of Goods for those somehow affiliated with the wide and wonderful world of sports. Last year, at this time, I isolated myself for a period not withstanding 40 days and 40 nights in the spacious Collegian office, then located in the Student Union in order to write this article.

However I was unsuccessful in locating the new and ultramodern Collegian sports department this year. Asking everyone "where the hell it is" and getting no response, I then decided to take a vacation in the well known and scenic vacationland located in Auburn, Mass. to seek an inspiration.

Lake Chaugaggagog, Manchauggagog, Chaubunagunganaugg, was the brainstorm of this article, and for those readers already confused, this lake is commonly known as Webster Lake and is the largest natural lake in Massachusetts.

Translated in English, this nature wonderland means "You fish on your side, I fish on my side, and nobody fishes in the middle."

So without further adieu, my holiday presents:

1. President-elect Jimmy Carter: a 6x10 glossy of the "All-American Peanut" and the site of the 1980 Super Bowl game to be played in Plains, Georgia.

2. Patriot quarterback Steve Grogan:

Congratulations on being named the most outstanding person ever to come out of Kansas since Dorothy and Toto in the Wizard of Oz. We will even throw in Jim Plunkett's latest hit album with thanks to singer Tony Bennett, "I left my heart in San Francisco."

3. UMass running sensation, sophomore Mike Quinn:

Long playing tapes of "Disco Duck," and "Shake Your Booty" and any other disco music played in the Bluewall. Little do the readers know that Quinn, the winner of 3-4 of all the races he ran in this past season, psyched himself up before the race by listening to disco music.

4. UMass basketball players Mike Pyatt and Alex Eldridge:

While we are on the subject of tapes, I present to you the tape of the five minute standing ovation given to both of you when you entered the Penn-State game.

5. Red Sox outfielders Fred Lynn and Jim Rice:

A speech written by Richard M. Nixon entitled "I just love to live in Boston" and "Carl Yastremski is my best friend."

6. Newly Acquired Red Sox first baseman George Scott:

Gold fillings, "taters over the Green Wall" and the best after-dinner speeches of Woody Allen.

7. The Best Basketball player ever to come into the NBA — Julius Erving:

A documented research paper written by UMass president Robert C. Wood entitled "The Inferiority Complex of a UMass Student."

8. The now defunct World Football League:

A primer on Economics 101 with an introduction by Governor Mike Dukakis was written on the Green Line trolley car.

9. UMass football players and tight ends Kevin Cummings and Moses Williams:

A trip to Mass. General Hospital, dinner with Dr. Marcus Welby, and a lecture on sprained necks, broken legs, arms and assorted appendages given by UMass head coach Dick McPherson.

10. UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman:

A best selling novel written by Celtic radio announcer Johnny Most named "How I save my voice and avoid heart attacks through pressure filled overtime losses."

11. The UMass Marching Band:

A testimonial dinner sponsored by the Harvard Band and those crazy Harvard fans in appreciation of that "awful and boring" halftime show.

JV women hoopsters win

By MEL WEBSTER
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's basketball team opened its season with a 63 to 52 victory over Central Connecticut State College last night at the Cage. Karyl Resnick poured in 15 points to lead the women. Beth O'Connell, and Elaine Howle each chipped in with 14 points. O'Connell also pulled down 23 rebounds. Connecticut was lead by Tammy Finkleday, who scored 15 points and had 14 rebounds.

Connecticut opened the scoring, but Chris Kelley hit a jump shot to put UMass in the lead. The lead changed hands five times, until Howle put UMass ahead for good, 14-13. A strong man-to-man defense kept Connecticut off the scoreboards, while UMass was building its lead to 20 to 13. The half ended with the score of 26 to 21 in favor of the Minutewomen.

Chris Kelley opened the second half by converting two quick steals into baskets. Another jump shot by Howle lenghthened the lead to 11 points, 32-21. The lead would not go below 11 points for the remainder of the contest.

With 11 minutes to go in the game, the lead was increased to 15. The UMass defense held Connecticut to only nine points in the first nine minutes of the second half, while they were scoring 19. With seven minutes left, and a 15-point lead, coach Rietschel began substituting freely. The subs finished what the starters began, giving the women a satisfying 11-point victory. The strong defense forced Connecticut into making 33 turnovers.

Coach Rietschel was very pleased with the way the women "kept their heads throughout the game," she said, "that work still has to be done on committing turnovers." At times we were trying to force the ball in, and we shouldn't have been," she said.

Rietschel thought it was a very strong team performance. She singled out Beth O'Connell for her strong rebounding at both ends of the court. She was also impressed with Chris Kelley's strong defense. Kelley had 4 steals, and sparked the quick scoring spree early in the second half.

The Huskies closed the gap even further at 7:30 when Paul McCormick put a dribbling shot over Redmond.

The shot came after a Terry Penedergast rebound. Both Redmond and Lamby were off their feet when the puck glided out to UConn's McCormick.

Lamby got his second goal of the afternoon at 8:52 of the third period. Lamby took a pass from Sullivan and put the disc into the twine.

McChesney flicked home a rebound shot at 11:46 as Mameli couldn't handle the puck. The score was then 6-2.

Sports world '76 turmoil and triumph

Bill Russell won it in 1968, Bobby Orr in 1970, and now for only the second time since Sports Illustrated initiated the award in 1954 a woman, Chris Evert has been awarded the highly coveted Sportsperson of the Year award for 1976. As usual the choice has brought about a large amount of debate from sportsfans who feel their cherished idol has been overlooked. The year 1976 has featured many outstanding achievements in both the amateur and professional ranks, thus before we pack our bags and bid the year a fond adieu, a review of some of this year's top events and performers is in order.

Football — The first major sporting event of this year was the Super Bowl classic between the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Dallas Cowboys. The Steelers captured the title with the superb combination of Bradshaw to Swann, and a terrifying defensive front four. The split season harms the chance for consideration of an athlete from this category; however, Swann certainly deserved consideration. College football '76 was once again the year of the running back, as Tony Dorsett, and Ricky Bell ran for the Heisman, with Dorsett finally out-running his opponent. It also featured the amazing story of the Univ. of Pitt. whose final chapter has yet to be written.

Hockey — This was the year for international competition with the Soviet national team playing various NHL squads, and of course Alan Eaglesson's famed World Cup competition. Squeezed in between was the Stanley Cup victory of the Canadiens over the Flyers, and although his team lost, Bobby Clarke remains the class of the NHL. The year also featured the departure of Bobby Orr and Phil Esposito from the Bruins, and Dave Schultz from the Flyers. Who'd a thought...

Basketball — While many fans basked in the sun during the warmth of June the "Green Machine" rolled to its 13th NBA championship over the scrappy Phoenix Suns, exactly seven months and four days after the season began. Months before, Indiana won the NCAA championship with one of colleges most powerful starting fives ever. Four of those players now robe themselves in NBA uniforms. The NBA and ABA finally merged to alleviate many contract squabbles, or so they thought, hello "Doctah". But among the legal hassles rose a star, a quiet consistent one at that: Jo-Jo White, who without the everyday press clippings, continues to establish himself as one of pro basketball's leading players.

Baseball — Amidst much controversy over contracts and free agent drafts, the Cincinnati Reds established themselves as one of baseball's all time great teams. Their four game sweep of the Yankees provided the finishing touch to a great season. The names are impressive: Bench, Rose, Foster, Perez, and "The Little One", Joe Morgan. Morgan captured his second consecutive MVP title while establishing himself as baseball's premier player. The 5-foot-7 second baseman was certainly one of this year's strongest candidates for the award.

Golf — Yes, golfers do qualify for the award. Ken Venturi, Arnold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus, and Lee Trevino have all won previously. But no one individual stood out among the tour this year, and all of the following names must be considered in the same class: Ray Floyd, Dave Stockton, Ben Crenshaw, Jerry Pate, and of course the "Golden Bear."

Tennis — Who was the number one player in the men's division this year? Bjorn Borg won at Wimbledon, while Jimmy Connors took Forest Hills. And what of "Nasty" Nastase, Arthur Ashe and Harold Solomon, all of whom continued to play at the top of their games. As the editors of Sports Illustrated saw it, when one mentions women's tennis Chris Evert automatically comes to mind. Although only in her early 20's, this young lady utterly dominates her sport. This year's sweep of Wimbledon and Forest Hills must be considered one of sports great accomplishments, and at such an early age no one seems capable of stopping her. Is there any doubt about Chrissie's popularity, just walk to the nearest tennis courts and observe how many people are using a two handed backhand. Kudos to Evert!

Yet when one reminisces about the year 1976, one thing must be remembered — it was the year of the Olympics! While the debate about their value and ethics continue, one point may not be argued — they are still a great spectacle to observe. The Winter Olympics were dominated by skiing brilliance, as Franz Klammer of Austria and Rosi Mittermaier battled the giant slalom, and Americas Bill Koch prevailed in the grueling cross country event.

What the Winter Olympics may have lacked in events, the summer games at Montreal surely made up for. The first week of competition was dominated by 14-year old Nadia Comaneci, who captured the hearts of millions around the globe as she performed the impossible — perfect scores in seven events. Her performance was truly remarkable and certainly must have gained the attention of the board of editors. But her's was not the only name that emanated from the games. There were many others: Juantorena, of Cuba, and Nelli Kim, Olga Korbut, Valeri Alexeyev, all of the Soviet Union, Harvey Glance, John Naber, the U.S. basketball and boxing teams, and decathalon champion Bruce Jenner...

The names are there all open to debate, each a champion in their own right. Was the choice of Chris Evert as Sportswoman of the Year a fair one? I think so, even though I would have chosen Fran Tarkenton, who in the year 1976 broke every quarterbacking record and must now be regarded as the greatest QB of all-time. The debate continues!

Bowlers place first

WILBRAHAM, Ma. — Two members of the UMass women's bowling team, Fran Griffen and Karen James, placed first in the EIBC Doubles Tournament held here on Saturday afternoon.

Griffen and James combined for a winning pinfall of 2748 for eight strings of bowling. The duo's average for the eight strings was 171, with Griffen averaging 166 and James 176.

In other results from the weekend competition, Central Connecticut's team placed second with a total of 2662. Two other members of the UMas women's bowling team, Patty Melanson and Amanda Garcia, placed third in the competition with a total pinfall of 2572.

UMass' Fran Griffen recorded the highest single string score with a 230.

The Minutewomen basketball team came roaring out of the locker room at halftime last night to turn a relatively close game against Central Connecticut into an easy 84-67 victory. The combination of tough full-court pressure defense and timely shooting led the way for UMass, which goes into intersession with a 2-1 record.

UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski explained the sudden second half surge. "I told them at halftime ," she said, "that if we were going to win that we'd have to make up our minds to play defense. We had to hustle a lot more."

Hustling is an understatement for the intensity of the Minutewomen at the outset of the second half. Within four minutes they turned a dangerously close 36-30 halftime score into a comfortable 50-34 lead. The full-court press and non-stop running game finally overtook Central, which had very little trouble bringing the ball up in the first half.

The first half showed all of the signs of a game as close as last year's Central one point victory. The Minutewomen scored the game's first six points, but Central countered with three hoops of their own. The two teams then traded baskets until about the twelve minute mark. At that point steady Nancy O'Neil (18 points, 9 rebounds, 5 assists) erupted for four straight field goals to give UMass some breathing room.

The Minutewomen played sloppy for the remainder of the half, as Central gradually climbed back. Only some timely outside shooting by Sue Peters and strong rebounding by LuAnn Fletcher kept the smaller Blue Devils from catching UMass.

A different UMass team walked on to the Curry Hicks floor in the second half. No, it wasn't Eldridge, Town, Claiborne, Donoghue and Pyatt. It was a quick, running, sharp-shooting team, however. It was Sue Peters hitting from everywhere. It was Nancy O'Neil and LuAnn Fletcher controlling the inside game. It was Chris Basile and Jo Balletta warming up to hit some key shots. It was everyone making their foul shots. It was a surprise for Central Connecticut.

Nancy O'Neil, who was part of last year's heartbreaking loss to Central, summed up the second half surge, "We kept up the fast pace so they couldn't even catch their breath, Their transition wasn't quick enough to stay with us."

The Minutewomen did have a size advantage, unlike the Vermont's game. Once again, Fletcher controlled the boards with 17 rebounds. She was also tops with eight assists. O'Neill, Peters (18) and Basile (12) led the well-balanced scoring.

Coach Ozdarski praised Central, calling them the "quickest and best outside shooting team we've faced," but she added with a smile, "We just took it to them in the second half."

Time for Celtics to get into gear

Unless the Boston Celtics get their act together right away and play the basketball they are capable of, I wouldn't bet too heavily on them to repeat as NBA champions this year.

In case you have been completely enthralled by all the excitement generated by the New England Patriots and haven't been able to keep a close eye on the trials and tribulations of the men in green — the Celtics — let me tell you, you haven't missed a thing. As a matter of fact, you are probably better off.

Prior to the start of the 1976 season, basketball fans all over New England were optimistically looking forward to another banner year for the Celtics with perhaps another championship won at the end of the season.

However, from the time prior to the start of the season to now a lot has happened to the Celtics. Less than a week before their first game, the Celtics obtained forward Sidney Wicks from the Portland Trailblazers; traded their star forward Paul Silas to the Denver Nuggets and in return for Silas, the Celtics obtained forward Curtis Rowe. On top of that, Boston's perennial all-star center Dave Cowens requested for an extended leave of absence for an indefinite period of time.

As of now, all the pre-season optimism of the fans has gone down the drain. The Celtics are presently in second place in the NBA's Atlantic Division, with an un-Celtic record of 13-11, two games behind the division leading Philadelphia 76'ers and only one game ahead of the onrushing third-place New York Knicks.

Don't let Boston's second-place standing deceive you, because it doesn't mean a thing. Right now, the Celtics are not playing like a defending championship team, come to think of it, they are not even playing like a second-place team.

Unlike previous years, the Celtics have been losing games at home with alarming regularity, something that is very uncharacteristic of Celtics' teams. Another uncharacteristic trait of this year's team is the fact that coach Tom Heinsohn's forces have lost too many games to the mediocre teams of the NBA.

In a way, the early Celtic downfall is very reminiscent of another Boston team that is well known for its annual collapse following a championship year, and that is the Red Sox.

But this isn't like the Celtics at all.

During the past weekend, the Celtics hit an all-time seasonal low when they were completely embarrassed by two mediocre, last-place teams. Now the New England faithful have become restless.

Last Friday night, the Phoenix Suns, the last-place team in the NBA's Pacific Division, invaded the antiquated but always friendly Boston Garden and promptly made the Celtics look terrible in front of their home folks. Not only did the Suns beat the Celtics on the scoreboard, but they outplayed Boston in almost every phase of the game including hustle.

But, as if losing to the lowly Suns wasn't bad enough, the Celtics made matters worse by being outclassed by the Chicago Bulls, one of the worst teams in professional basketball. The Bulls, a young and inexperienced team made the Celtics look like a team of rookies, as they beat Boston, 84-76.

This is certainly no way for a defending NBA championship team to play. There is no legitimate reason why the Celtics, with the talent they possess, should be losing to the Suns or the Bulls.

If the Celtics don't get their act together real soon, they are going to find themselves miles behind the 76'ers and a couple of games behind the newly revived New York Knicks.

Sure the Celtics are still smarting from the departures of Silas and Cowens. Without those two bulls under the boards, the Celtics are very weak in the rebounding department, a key aspect of their fast-break oriented offense.

But the Celtics are professionals, and it's time to set aside all excuses for the poor beginning. It's time for them to forget about what they've lost and work with what they've got, to mold another contending team.

Rinkmen .dump UConn, 6-3

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

Behind a four goal first period outburst, the UMass hockey team broke out of a two game losing streak by beating UConn, 6-3, yesterday afternoon at Orr rink. The win pushed the Minutemen's record to 4-3-1 and dropped the Huskies to 1-5-1, and winless in the division.

The Minutemen go on an extended break and will not return to action until January 22 when they play at Boston State.

"No question about it, it's very important that we finished over 500," said hockey coach Jack Canniff after the game. "It's the first time in a couple of years that we've gone into intersession over .500."

Chris Lamby scored the game winner when he fired a slapshot past Louis Mameli on a power play at 19:28. Eric Brody was off for hooking at the time. Brian Kitteredge and Frank Snow got the assists.

Lamby figured in the first goal, too, when he passed across the goal mouth to Scott McChesney who passed the puck to Kevin Sullivan who poked home the goal at 6:46.

Tim O'Brien put a wrist shot past Mameli 51 seconds later to make it 2-0. The play was set up by Bob McCormack who knocked down a Huskie defender and virtually set up a 1-0 as O'Brien put the loose puck in the crease.

Kevin Sullivan scored the third goal for UMass at 11:02 as he took a pass from McChesney at the UConn's goalie's right and put in the right lower corner. The play was set up by a centering pass to McChesney from Paul Hurley.

After building a 4-0 edge in the first period, UMass slacked off a bit in the second period as the Huskies scored two goals and closed the gap to 4-2.

"We were flat as hell," said Canniff about the let down in the middle frame.

UConn scored right away at the first minute mark as Gregg Hutchings' slap shot beat goalie Dana Redmond on the right side. The puck dribbled in after

Bromery: UMass near disaster

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

UMass-Amherst is "very close to the threshold of disaster," says Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

If the Massachusetts State Legislature maintains the level-funding which Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has talked about for the University, then the resultant budget could have "very serious" consequences for the school, Bromery said in an interview yesterday.

Low morale

Bromery said this lack of concern by the legislature is one reason for the low morale and subsequent exodus of faculty and staff from the campus.

"The morale problem is, of course, tied a good deal to the fact that there have been no salary increases for the employes for the past three years," Bromery said. "But there is also concern among the employes that those people in the executive offices don't look on them with much favor.

> "Level-funding doesn't sound very on-the-level to me."
> — Chancellor Bromery

Bromery said "level-funding" as being mentioned by the governor would mean that UMass would get the same budget allocation for FY '78 as last year. But this would actually be a cut of $6 million because of cost of living increases and inflation, he said.

Bromery reiterated his plea for public understanding of the University's budget problems, a theme he has repeated to audiences in the area in the past month.

"Level funding doesn't sound very 'on-the-level' to me," he said. "In order for the University to operate at the same level as before and offer the same services as before, an increase of $6 million is needed.

"There is a simple linear relationship in the minds of a lot of the people in the executive offices and the legislature 'down east'," he said. "They think of UMass as any state agency, but it's not. You can't take away something from the University and replace it in a few years and expect it to be the same.

"For example, in most state agencies, things can be cut out one day, but then can be restored again with no problem. However, if a department or part of one, is cut out of a university, it can't be restored again with no problem. It takes years and years to build up things to the level that UMass is at now."

"The heart of the state is its investment in its educational system," he said.

Trustees may raise fees by over $100

By TERESA HANAFIN
and JIM GAGNE
Staff Reporters

The UMass Board of Trustrees is expected to raise undergraduate student fees in April by about $136 per student according to Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert L. Woodbury.

This increase, combined with the $135 rise in tuition already passed, will cost each Massachusetts resident undergraduate more than $271 next fall.

Woodbury said yesterday that the University administration has recommended the increase to balance the deficit created by "cost of living" raises to state University workers. The trustees will ratify the workers' contract in early February he said.

Woodbury called the expected increase "not good," but added, "there will be more money available for financial aid — primarily federal aid."

The administration's full recommendation to the trustees is divided into separate recommendations for the various fees. The largest fee increase will be $56 for residence halls, an increase of 8 per cent. Percentage-wise the Campus Center fee, which could go from $64 to $79, tops the list at 23 per cent, followed by the Health Services fee at 17 per cent.

Woodbury said the administration recommended large increases in the Health Service and Campus Center fees because those services are labor-intensive, and therefore hit harder by the salary adjustment. He said the recommended $15 increase in the Campus Center fee did not include the cost of repairs on the leaking building. "I don't know how the Campus Center roof will be handled," he said.

Some of the recommended increases represent the rising cost of commodities rather than the salary adjustment. $20 of the $45 increase for boarding halls is due to the price of food.

Administrators also decided on increases in international programs, such as the Freiburg Summer Program, due to increased costs. These, however, affect "only 140 students" according to a report by Peter D. Graham, chairperson of the Undergraduate Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said yesterday that the salary adjustments here were "in line" with the cost of living raises for the Alliance union last fall.

Warren W. Gulko, director of the Office of Budgeting and Institutional Studies, said that nonunion UMass employes such as faculty and professional staff people will also receive a comparable pay raise. According to Gulko, the administration considered this when drawing up the recommendation to the trustees.

Other fee increase proposals include an additional $8 for the Graduate Student Senate, and $4 more for the Student Activities Tax Fund (SAFT), used to finance student organizations. According to Student Senate Treasurer Tommy Kerrins, the SATF has not been raised in four yyars. Woodbury said the New England Telephone Co. is seeking to raise rates on campus, but the administration has made "no recommendation at this time" for passing the cost onto students.

The average cost for attending UMass will be $2,337 next fall for Massachusetts residents if the recommendations are approved. Bromery said, "Students are the only source of revenue for these raises for the labor unions and nonunion employes on campus." He said the University has absorbed the costs already in effect to avoid raising fees in mid-year.

Search for new CC director narrowed to 13

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

The search for a new director for the Campus Center has been narrowed to about 13 people, according to Board of Governors (BOG) member Michael J. Pill. The results of the search are expected to be announced around the end of next month.

The director's position has been vacant since former director John W. Corker was transferred to another position last year. Dean William F. Field has been acting director since Corker's transfer.

Also on the BOG agenda for the semester is an Affirmative Action Title IX study to be conducted by several departments on campus. The study is a self-evaluation of the current affirmative action policy at the University.

The search for a new financial manager for the Campus Center is also nearing a close. This search has been narrowed to about four people, and the BOG has made its recommendation to Acting Director Field.

One policy contested last semester by a University student was the current dog policy which bans dogs from the Campus Center and other campus buildings.

The BOG reviewed the policy after it heard a complaint from a student who "just wanted to walk my dog through the building, and he had a leash on." The BOG has decided the policy should remain the same.

As a semester-long project, the BOG will support a bill to shift payment for the Campus Center from the students to the Commonwealth's taxpayers. The bill was introduced by Representative James Collins, D-Amherst, this legislative session.

"I think most groups on campus will support the bill. Who wouldn't?" said one BOG member.

The bill, if passed, will reduce greatly or eliminate the present $64 Campus Center fee. However, the fee will probably go up again this year, according to Field.

Board meetings are held every Thursday evening throughout the semester, and meetings are open. The BOG office, which is in the Campus Center can be reached at 545-0198 for the exact time and place of the meeting.

The Board's prime function is that of establishing policy for the Campus Center building. It is concerned with policies that directly affect students and other users of the building, as well as those guidelines that concerns building managers. Specific duties include reviewing the budget and allocating space to different groups in the building, along with establishing Meeting Room, Bake Sale and Textbook Return policies.

After temporary shutdown, buses are back in action

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

Buses were running in full force Monday just in time to transport the 11,000 or so average number of passengers that partake of the service daily. However, those living in the Amherst area during the intersession were not as fortunate, because on Jan. 1, 1977, the service was completely shut down.

The bus service was deactivated at that time due to the administration's inability to secure liability insurance for the vehicles for 1977.

After lengthy negotiations, a settlement was finally reached last Friday with the Boston-based firm of Marsh and McLennan. The firm agreed to insure the bus service with the extent of coverage requested by the University.

One major drawback in the settlement was a substantial hike in the premium rate. Although University officials would not release exact figures, the premium for this year's insurance is expected to skyrocket from last year's figure of $3,135 to an estimated $75,000. Exact figures will be released by the University pending finalization of the settlement.

The major roadblock in negotiations between the University and insurance firms was reported in the Daily Hampshire Gazette as an insurance officials unwillingness to provide the degree of coverage requested by the University. The information was attributed to Gerald Grady, coordinator of Community Relations at the University.

However, according to Thomas Kerrins, Student Senate treasurer, the feeling at the Student Senate is that the major roadblock in securing the insurance was mostly the result of an oversight by Donald W. Madsen, assistant at the University treasure's office.

Allegations made by Kerrins claim that a quote for the bid woud have been negotiated had the bid been sent out sooner. According to a Student Government Association document from the Economic Development Coordinator's office, "the insurance companies originally contended they need more time to prepare a bid." The bid was sent out on Nov. 24, 1976.

Kerrins also cited very low figures on claims made against the bus service in the past as a rebuttal against the statement given by Grady in the Gazette. "Total claims against the bus service in the last three years only amount to about $12,000, with five claims still outstanding."

In a telephone interview, Madsen maintained that the integrity of his office was upheld in all his actions concerning the matter.

"I started negotiations with our (then) present carrier early in October. We hoped that we could stay with the same carrier. After negotiations with our present carrier failed we sent bids out to 12 other firms on November 24th, but we didn't get a single quote," Madsen said.

"Not a stone was left unturned in our attempts to secure a bid," added Madsen.

Kerrin disgreed.

According to Grady, the substantial hike in the policy premium will not affect the service in any way. He attributed the hike to what he termed as "generally poor insurance climate throughout the state, especially concerning buses."

Joint conference peeks into crystal ball

By SUE RIVEST
and PAUL LOGUE JR.
Collegian Staff

Students, faculty and administrators got together last week to scrutinize the UMass undergraduate population at a workshop entitled "Studentology 101."

In his opening remarks, keynote speaker Michael Wolff, professor of English, condemned faculty and administrators alike saying they are "fighting a doomed rearguard action against the times in ignoring the demands of students for more career-oriented training."

Wolff said, "The University cannot take the attitude of the railroad robber barons in saying 'the public be damned'. We must be more open to changing student needs."

The three-day workshop was set up to promote discussion about where UMass students are now and where they are going.

"We don't really know the students we'll have in the future, but we do know the students we have now," Wolff said. "We must prepare people to make a life and a living."

Studies in student attitudes formed the basis for discussion as the participants tried to find a means to adjust to changing trends in the student population.

The undergraduate at UMass is drifting away from academic concentration in the Arts and Sciences and towards more vocationally oriented disciplinns in business, engineering and health professions according to surveys conducted by Larry Benedict of the Students Affairs Research office. Figures show that the Class of 1979 enrollment in English programs reflects the larger campus trends with a low of 2.4 per cent while enrollment in business programs was at a high of 12.3 per cent. These parallel national figures for university students.

Student Government Association co-President Jay Martus agreed with Wolff and suggested the University is too entrenched by institutional forces to allow programs such as those in the business and health services sectors to expand.

"We have to face the facts of the situation," said Martus. "Students want to be able to find a job when they get out of here. It is a question of economic survival for us all."

Nelson Pion assistant dean of the School of Business Administration, said he wished he had the enrollment problems which are plaguing other areas of campus. "We are in danger of losing our accreditation," he related.

"We have significant problems dealing with growth. Right now grad students are teaching courses. We have 75 students per semester accepted as transfers from within campus," he said, adding, "The demand far exceeds the supply."

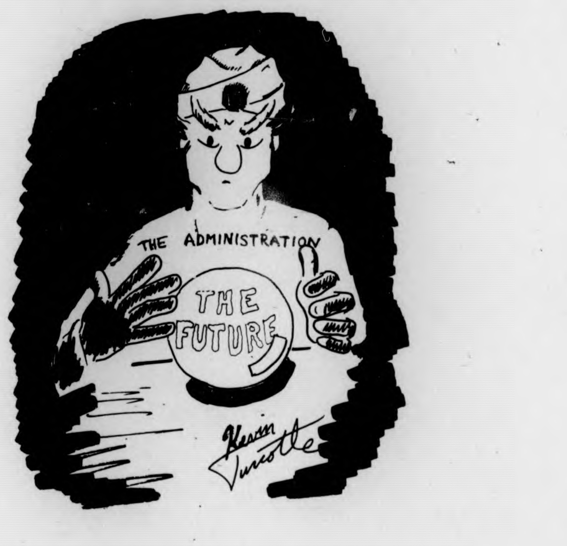
Pion stated that enrollment in December 1975 reached 2,500 students. They are now being forced to cut enrollment to 1,600 by fall of 1979. "The University should try to sell college education on something other than a vocational issue," he said.

Michael Jackson, Director of the Collegiate Committee for the Education of Black Students, wanted to talk about the "reality" of this situation.

"Because of closing admissions in areas such as health services and business, it is hurting people who are minorities; women, Blacks, Hispanics and foreign students," Jackson said. He emphasized the fact that the top minorities will go to the better private schools and the out-of-state tuition is too high to recruit them.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery, in a telephone interview, agreed with Jackson's contention that the squeeze especially affects minorities.

"Recruiting is very important," he said. "It is possible to take an affirmative action approach to get students into business school and other overloaded departments." He also stated, "We have fallen off in support services, i.e. financial aid, and we need better all-around counseling."



Jay Martus, Co-President of Student Senate questioned and change unless the Tenure situation is made workable. "75 per cent of the professors are tenured and about 20 per cent are on the tenured track. We have to wait for death or retirement in order to institute change," he exasperated.

Robert Woodbury, acting vice-chancellor for Student Affairs, agrees with the need of better recruitment and said, "We could be using students on outreach programs to do the recruiting. The best way of selling the school is by word of mouth and who are more in touch with the University and its experience than students. Also we need to have a shift in resources. Now this doesn't mean that we are going to cut the budget of one program and give it to another. But shift the amount of time that faculty are working with a particular program. This provides relief to areas without a budget shift."

He also hoped for a better use of our resources in public service.

"This is not to say that the programs working off-campus are not doing an excellent job, but we could use more," Woodbury emphasized.

Other speakers presented the role of the university from its traditional setting. Michael Wolff, Director of Orchard Hill questioned whether the classroom is still the center of the University. "Right now it looks like the Campus Center is the center of the university," he exclaimed.

Many people expressed an extreme interest in scrapping the 54 credit limit for transfers. This would open the door to more students both domestic and international.

Paul Puryear, Provost, stated that there should be some incentive to faculty to work trans-disciplinary. "We can have a relocating of people not money," he said.

League's Task Force looks for clean waters

By ROBERT DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

The goal is to have fishable, swimmable waters by 1983 and clean waters by 1985.

This is the intent of a Federal bill that was explained to the Amherst Board of Selectmen last night by members of the 208 Task Force, a committee sponsored by the League of Women Voters that hopes to preserve the nation's waters. The 208 Task Force is concerned with the problems that appear in water in the Lower Pioneer Valley.

According to Joan Ashwell, a member of the 208 Task Force, these problems deal with leachate (water that has percolated through land fill dumps), agricultural runoff, erosion, salt water and river intrusions such as oil spills, and the untreated sewage discharges that occur along the Ware and Westfield rivers.

According to Ashwell, the Federal Government hopes to achieve the standards set by bill 208 by dividing each state into regions that are adjacent to major waterways and their tributaries. Ashwell said all problems concerning the pollution of water near these waterways will in some way contribute to the pollution of the waterways themselves.

The 208 Task Force offered many solutions to the selectmen that could prevent the pollution of water. These solutions include better management of area forests and agriculture, revised health and sanitary codes, revised landfill and earth — removal policies, and better maintenance of septic tanks and sewage systems.

Although the Lower Pioneer Valley Planning Agency, the planning agency that will work toward the requirements set by bill 208, is still in its developmental stages, the 208 Task Force urged the Board of Selectmen and the town of Amherst to become involved with the agency so their future dealings will be smoother and complete.

Protesters seek ban on bomber construction

By CHARLES J. PELLET
Collegian Staff

Despite the cold weather Saturday, more than 50 protesters assembled on Amherst Commons carrying signs and placards urging President Jimmy Carter to drop plans to construct a fleet of B-1 Bombers.

Amherst police said the hour-long demonstration was peaceful with no incidents reported and no arrests.

The demonstration, sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee (AFSC) and locally by the Mt. Toby Friends' Peace and Social Committee, was part of a nation-wide effort to halt production of the controversial B-1 Bomber.

Opponents of the supersonic bomber fleet suggest the B-1, aside from having adverse, irreversible effects on the environment, might become outdated before construction is completed.

Critics charge that the plane may be of limited military use because of changing military policies; the age of intercontinental missiles making the use of manned bombers obsolete.

The Pentagon has estimated that each plane will cost $93 million, and the Air Force approximates the total cost at more than $22.8 billion. During the 30-year life-cycle of the proposed bomber, operational and maintenance costs are expected to run in excess of $93 billion.

The AFSX claims that B-1 Bomber funds could be better spent on domestic social programs rather than on Defense Department contracts. The Rockwell, General Electric and Boeing Corporations are three of the major contractors involved in the program.

Data gathered by the AFSC indicates that during the life-cycle of the B-1 Bomber program, enough money would be spent to provide low income housing for six million families, a tripling of social service grants to states and a quadrupling of the U.S. Food for Peace program, and sustaining the increase for 37 years.

Handouts provided by the AFSC criticize the plane on environmental as well as economic grounds, claiming the bomber might aid in depleting the planet's ozone layer, crucial in shielding the earth from some of the sun's radiation. In addition, full production of the B-1 would waste resources by consuming large amounts of fuel, protesters claim.

Playfair: noncompetitive games

The creators of "Playfair", an adult-oriented noncompetitive program of games will conduct a session Thursday in the Student Union Ballroom, according to Irene Richard, Student Activities Program Advisor.

Matt Weinstein and Pamela Kekich will also conduct a playfair training session for those interested in learning the techniques of what Weinstein calls a "totally different...kind of adult play."

Kekich and Weinstein were co-directors of the Games Preserve, a center for the development of play in Pennsylvania, from June, 1975 to September 1976, and it was there they first developed their ideas of adult play. While they were there, the Philadelphia Bicentennial Committee commissioned the staff to come up with a games event that could accommodate hundreds of players at a time, and Playfair was born.

Playfair consists mainly of physically active, non-competitive, large group games, according to Richard.

"In most situations," said Weinstein, "where adults are playing together, you have to be a good athlete to have any fun." But that's not true with Playfair, he said.

"People come up to us all the time and say 'I hate games, but I loved the Playfair.' That's because the Playfair games are so supportive. No one ever feels incompetent. You can't win or lose at Playfair games. It's totally different from any other kind of adult play."

Most of the games used in Playfair were originated by Kekich and Weinstein, although some are traditional games which they redesigned. One example of an old game which they have redesigned is what they call "Amoeba Tag". This, Kekich said, is the the old game of tag, with a twist. "It's played in slow motion," she said, "and the object is for everyone to become 'it'."

Kekich said there would be "a lot of games for many people" at the Playfair and "some for only two."

Weinstein and Kekich have toured the country, running Playfairs for such groups as The Association for Humanistic Psychology, The National Entertainment Conference, and the National Conference on Men and Masculinity, as well as numerous colleges, universities, school systems, hospital staffs, social service agencies, church groups, and senior citizens programs.

Kekich said Monday she expects a large turnout at Thursday's Playfair, scheduled for 7:30 p.m. The Playfair training session is scheduled to start at 1:00 p.m. Those interested in registering should contact Irene Richard (tel. 545-3600.)

NH flags at half-staff in protest of pardon

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Flags were flown at half-staff over New Hampshire state buildings Monday to protest President Carter's pardon of Vietnam era draft evaders.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson issued an executive proclamation Sunday night ordering that the flags be lowered over all state buildings until Friday evening.

The governor's proclamation stated that the "ultimate survival of the United States of America will rest eventually with the willingness of its youth to again unhesitantingly respond to the nation's call to armed duty."

The proclamation noted there are still American servicemen missing in action in Vietnam.

Black Affairs

Brown-Gethers' case

Twenty-nine months has elapsed since the robbery of MacDonald (in Hadley, Mass.) on August 7, 1974. Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers, who were convicted of the crime in 1975, are still incarcerated. Basically, we have to ask what has transpired since this time? In extending this question where will the New Year lead us in the Brown-Gether's case? The MacDonald robbery which took place in Hadley, was robbed of $1200 by three black males in the summer of 1974. The police were immediately summons, and the place closed. In interviewing perspective witnesses, three individuals came forward with the clearest description. Within two days Debra Cooke (one of the three witnesses) picked a candidate for the crime. Robert Brown from Cambridge, Mass. was chosen as the only lead in the case. The police in trying to find this individual, made a big mistake by arresting R. Earl Brown from Elmira, New York on August 23. Craemen Gethers' was mistakely identified on August 26, when we walked in Kentucky Fried Chicken on crutches and was selected by Debra Cooke and Kathy Clark (who were employed for the summer at Kentucky) for the incident. Eventually, this led to a Probable Cause hearing on September 26, 1974 where the two black males were bonded over to the Superior Court. The March hearing tried both defendant before a jury of eleven whites and one black. After fifteen hours of deliberation the jury was hung. Judge Raymond Cross then declared that the case was a mistrial. But the Northampton system did not stop here, because Craemen was tried in July, while Earl was tried over in October. Both were convicted by an all-white juries on the flimsiest evidence. Craemen sentenced to an eight to twelve year sentence, while Earl received a three to five year sentence.

Since the conviction Craemen has been unsuccessful in two attempts for new trial motion. In both appearance the judge refused to admit evidence that proved his innocence. Besides the injustice in the court system, the Norfolk State Prison has refused to give Craemen furloughs privileges. Even with the letters of support, Craemen will have to wait until April before the next board meeting. Effort to get him on a work-release program will be viewed in April. In the past month, Craemen has found out that Judge Hayer failed to rule on all motions during his last appearance. Which opens the door for a new hearing on bail, stay of sentence, and a new trial motion.

Earl returned from Walpole and Norfolk State Prison on February 5, where he was remanded to the House of Corrections at Northampton. While in the jail, he became eligible for a work-release program in mid-April. He has continued to be on the program, while attending school at the UMass campus. During the month of December, Judge Tamburello granted a motion for the March transcript, but denied bail because of his belief in the Work-Release program. A new trial motion was schedule for December 27th, but was scratched by Brown's attorney. In early January, Earl was notified by the Massachusetts Parole Board that he would be reviewed in April. Recently, Judge Tamburello (the trial judge) barred a suppression hearing, but scheduled a motion for a new trial hearing on February 4, 1977.

In summation, the Craemen Gethers'-Earl Brown case is taking a new emphasis in 1977. Prior to the school year ending, a petition for the pardon of Craemen was started. Four days produced 1500 signatures, and $160 in legal fees. January 31st is the scheduled date for the petition drive. Secondly, two films will present the case to the television audience. The short version will be ready by early February, while the longer version will be completed in May. Thirdly, a strategy meeting is being setup on January 27th and February 3rd. The meeting will tighten up communications among the funding organization, media outlets, and the legal area. Fourth, a petition to bring Craemen to the Northampton area will coincide with efforts to get the pardon petition signed. Fifth, both Craemen and Earl have continued to write judge's legislators, and other groups interested in helping out. The emphasis, is to make people aware of this case. We ask, that people make an effort to sign the petitions, that will circulate next week. Should any one know of any legislators, judges, or interested parties to contact the Cultural Center in New Africa House (545-0794). Finally, we ask for your support, because we never know who is next.

Richard Pryor and a new perspective

Rv ANGELA THOMAS

After the 1970's have past, and future generations look back trying to figure out what this decade was all about, perhaps they will come to view it as I do now. A decade where the beginning of a change of attitude in regards to mainstream media was noticed in black people.

This thought did not come to me out of the blue. It came about after viewing a recent showing of the Phil Donahue show during the intersession break. (Wed. 1-12-77)

On this particular showing guest star Richard Pryor was on to promote his latest movie, Silver Streak. Questioned by Donahue what he thought of the film, Pryor remarked that he had not seen the film as of that time.

Curious about the fact that Pryor was on the show to promote the film and yet had not view it, and interested in Mr. Pryor from jump street, I sat down to watch the show.

After watching for a few minutes, it became obvious that Richard Pryor was not at all the typical guest star.

Conversation between the host and guest did not flow easily as Donahue appeared to have been totally unprepared for such a response from Pryor. Very candidly Pryor commented on what he disliked in shows such as Donahue's. When asked by Donahue who are his friends, Pryor explained that he felt he did not have to sit in front of a audience with television cameras and tell who he hangs out with. Interesting to note was that when engaged in regular conversation Pryor mentioned some of his friends by name, but when asked specifically who were his friends Pryor refused to comment.

Moving on Donahue asked Pryor how he felt that his material was not always listened to nor enjoyed by mainstream America. The American Legion was used as an example to represent a segment of mainstream America. After a moment of thought, Pryor replied, "I do not give a good beep, beep."

In reference to the spicy material in Pryor's act, Donahue commented that yet Pryor is always conservatively dressed like Gregory Peck. This statement caused Pryor to reply that, "My father would be very upset that you said that." Wanting to know why he was compared to Peck and not Sidney Portier if a comparision had to be made, was interesting to me as I wondered how Donahue would answer. In his explanation Donahue said that he did not know if Pryor knew Portier. Pryor reminded Donahue that he had a part in the film, Uptown Saturday Night which starred Portier and Bill Cosby. Donahue had mentioned this earlier in the show during his introduction of Pryor. Wow, I said to myself, I wonder if Donahue realizes where Pryor was and is coming from, and what he was bringing out in him.

Undaunted, Donahue began to talk about the routines in Pryor's act. Zeroing in on black preachers, Donahue attempted of what he said he knew to be a bad imitation of a black preacher. Pryor quickly stopped Donahue once he began saying, "No, thats not a imitation." The reply by Donahue of, "That's whay you do," caused Pryor to do the dialect of a black preacher. Afterwards with eyes half closed and nodding slowly in self realization, Donahue said to Pryor, "I was doing an Amos Andy imitation, wasn't I?" For those not familiar with Amos Andy, it is a white created stereotype of blacks as whites perceive black people to be.

Richard Pryor is a man who by his perception of blacks and life makes people laugh and think. Because of the nature of his comments Pryor is sensitive that an accurate portrayal is presented as he knows it to be. This very fact is the major reason for Pryor's dislike of the media as it is presently controlled and operated. The only reason for Pryor's appearance on the Phil Donahue show was to promote Silver Streak. A film he hoped all would go see, but would not sit back and worry about the financial success of the movie if people decided not to view it.

The media has tried to restrict statements Pryor might say during his act, referring to comments such as the differences between black and white women not to be in "good taste."

At one time Pryor succumbed to these pressures that he says, "had me thinking, talking, and acting white." He now refuses to compromise any part of himself. I feel this is important because Pryor is revered by young blacks, and is quoted as a black woman from the audience said, "like Confucius." Certain segments of society which the media caters to can not bear to hear subjects areas that Pryor deals with, should not be a reason for him to change in accordance with what those in control feel should be presented.

Commentary

Awareness of himself and his influence among blacks I feel, has brought about this attitude in Pryor. He prefers an audience that he can be himself. An audience that is aware or willing to be shown what he is all about. One that can expect to hear things nevertheless true, but no considered wholesome as Apple Pie, American style.

It is good to see a black star acknowledge the wrong in mainstream media. (Pryor often does it by way of satire). Not only to acknowledge the wrong, but to rebuke it and not worry how highly she or he is thought of by it. This is extremely difficult for black stars to do for they still have to operate within the media as it controlled. There are yet no other alternatives which black stars con financially survive.

I have a feeling that as time progresses more black stars and entertainers will follow this trend of thought and action. Admittedly the pace is like that of a turtle's. Yet according to the fable of the race between the turtle and the hare, when the game was over the turle beat the hare, did he not?

Smith rejects proposals

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (UPI) — Prime Minister Ian Smith Monday rejected Britain's plan for a peaceful transfer to black majority rule. Negotiator Ivor Richard said the "tragic and fateful decision" means the end of the Geneva talks and continued war and suffering.

"Fighting will go on, sanctions will not be lifted and the people of this country, both white and black, will suffer further," Richard said. "The outcome is extremely difficult to foresee."

The drive for black rule in Rhodesia, where whites are outnumbered more than 20 to 1, began last September with negotiations by former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

Smith's dramatic announcement that he accepted Kissinger's terms, and the peace conference that brought together the white regime and all major black nationalist groups, were seen at the time as a last chance effort to avert a bloody race war in southern Africa.

Richard, who served as chairman of the first seven-week session of the stalemated Geneva talks and has since spent four weeks on a diplomatic shuttle trip throughout southern Africa, met with Smith for 45 minutes Monday and said the prime minister refused to budge.

"Mr. Smith alone has rejected our proposals as even a basis for further negotiations," the British U.N. ambassador told reporters, describing himself as "sad and apprehensive.... an extremely disappointed man."

Richard said Smith "bears, as we see it, a heavy responsibility for what may now happen," to Rhodesia, which broke away from Britain rule in 1965.

"Of course, Mr. Smith is perfectly entitled to take this attitude and he believes it to be in the best interests of his country. But it is a tragic and fateful decision," Richard said.

As the war continues, Richard said, "It seems to me... then the dangers of outsid[illegible] intervention become greater."

A Rhodesian government spokesman denied Smith had finally closed the door on further peace talks, but Richard said at a news conference he saw no point in recalling the Geneva conference delegates "merely to look at each other."

The Geneva conference stalled over Smith's insistence on sticking to the Kissinger peace plan which stipulated whites would control the police and the army during a two-year interim-government period before black rule.

Assassination committee faces obstacles

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A bid to revive the congressional probes of the deaths of John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King, Jr. Monday was delayed in reaching the House floor, a sign of lingering opposition to the $13 million venture.

A move to reconstitute a House select committee investigating the assassinations was delayed for one day because of the objections of a Maryland lawmaker responsible for cutting off its funding earlier this month.

A resolution setting up the panel is due before the House Rules Committee on Tueday and Rep. James Delaney, D-N.Y., the rules chairman, sought unanimous consent to be given until midnight that day to file a report so the measure could come before the House on Wednesday.

House rules require a report from the Delaney committee to lay over one day before it can come to the floor.

Rep. Robert Bauman, R-Md., objected to Delaney's request, meaning the resolution will come before the House on Thursday rather than Wednesday.

"We should have at least a day to study the rules committee hearings and decide on what amendments we want to offer," said Bauman.

On the opening day of Congress, Bauman objected to a unanimous consent request to reconstitute the committee on a sto-gap basis until a formal resolution could be passed.

Since then, several members of Congress have indicated objections to the price tag the dual probes carry.

The committee was created last year and investigations have begun but its future was jeopardized when it asked for a $13 million, two-year budget — part of which would be used to purchase telephone eavesdropping equipment.

Bauman and other members objected both to the size of the planned budget and the methods of investigation.

Delaney told Bauman he was confident the rules panel would clear the resolution for floor action under an "open rule", which would permit offering of amendments.

Life in a cave - heating bills just $1.79

ARMINGTON, Ill. (UPI) — His daughters feared their classmates would call them the Flintstones. Neighbors were skeptical too, when Andrew Davis started hollowing out a hillside to build a cave home.

Davis got the last laugh.

In spite of all the record subzero weather, he says his heating costs this winter will be $1.29.

"It's nice and warm," says his wife, Margaret. "It's just wonderful. It's not costing us anything to heat and I don't think of it as being any different than a house."

Davis, a 48-year-old electrician with a caveman-style beard, got a little miffed last winter when he received a $167 monthly heating bill.

So he dug out a hillside and shaped stone cave walls eight inches thick to form a one-level, three-bedroom abode. He topped it with a foot-thick stone ceiling and covered the cave with four feet of dirt.

His family moved into the strange dwelling in this tiny central Illinois town in December amid national publicity.

"This is quite a thing," Davis said Monday. "Being underground is what makes it work. Dirt is a constant temperature of 58 degrees winter and summer. All I've got to do is raise the temperature from 58 to 70 degrees. It it's 10 below outside, people in a house have got to raise the temperature from 10 below to 70 degrees."

The little heat Davis needs is provided by a wood-burning Franklin Stove.

"I've got my own chain saw," he said, "What it amounts to is I'll heat the whole winter from two dead trees. The price of the wood cost me $1.29 — that's for my gas and oil for the chain saw. I didn't count labor because I enjoy cutting wood.

"Most of the reports I have is that most people are envious of me."

The home is furnished with thick carpeting and the latest appliances, but the Davises preserved the cave-like atmosphere by keeping the stone walls exposed, and using cowbones for doorknobs and towel racks.

Besides saving heating expenses, Davis says the home has a number of other advantages for his family of 11, including 5 older children who no longer live at home.

"Tornadoes can't bother us," he said. "Fire can't hurt me. I don't even carry insurance on it.

"Just 20 miles from here we're building a nuclear power station. You never know what could happen. I've got a bomb shelter."

Cigarette smoking expected to rise

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Cigarette smoking will continue to rise at a 3 to 4 per cent annual rate due to population growth and because tobacco is the first luxury item poor people buy, agriculture officials said Monday.

In addition, low-priced tobacco from Brazil, Mexico, South Korea and India, more bland in flavor but lower in nicotine, is cutting into the U.S. market.

Foreign Agriculture Service analyst B.G. Andrews said cigarette consumption is likely to keep rising at a 3 to 4 per cent annual rate in the near future even with the warnings about health dangers.

Andrews said population growth offsets the number of people who quit smoking. Also, he continued, the increase comes from rising incomes, particularly in developing nations.

Tobacco consumption has traditionally been held down by poverty in those countries, and cigarettes are among the first "luxury" items bought when incomes rise, he said.

In an interview, Andrews said although the tobacco market is expanding steadily, the U.S. position as top exporter is being cut by other nations pricing their crop far below the U.S. level.

The United States sold $1.4 billion in the year ending June 30, but its share of the world market declined from 27.7 per cent in the late 1960's to 20.8 per cent in 1975.

"In recent years, competition has been rising as developing nations like Brazil and Mexico in addition to South Korea and India have entered the picture and capitalized on their relatively low production costs," Andrews said.

The quality of the Brazilian and Mexican leaf is lower, he said, but the market for it has increased because it is lower in nicotine. At the same time, Andrews said, increasing use of bland tobaccos in places like Italy has brought increases for more flavored American tobacco.

Vermont to participate in nuke hearings

MONTPELIER, Vt. (UPI) — Vermont apparently will be allowed to participate in federal hearings on plans to expand spent nuclear fuel storage capacity at the state's only atomic power plant.

The staff of the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission yesterday approved the state's petition to intervene in upcoming hearings which involve Vermont's Yankee nuclear power plant at Vernon.

Earlier this month, Atty. Gen. M. Jerome Diamond filed a petition with the NRC charging the public safety and health was threatened by Vermont Yankee's plans to triple its waste fuel storage space at Vernon.

Diamond's petition initially was opposed by Gov. Richard Snelling. However, after the attorney general toned down the petition's language, Snelling announced his support for state participation in the hearings.

Soviet message on nuclear arms

In first interview since becoming president, Jimmy Carter says he has received "encouraging message" from Soviets on nuclear arms limitation and has instructed Vice President Mondale to ask U.S. allies to join in international effort to curb arms sales.

Nuclear plant in Seabrook

Despite the latest setback at the hands of the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire remains committed to building the Seabrook nuclear plant, a company spokesman said Monday.

"We have no plans to scrap Seabrook station," Frank B. Shants said. "We hope this and the Environmental Protection Agency predicament can be resolved as quickly as possible... so we can get back to building Seabrook station.

Councillor gets Washington post

Stephen F. Coyle, director of the Dedham Housing Authority, said today he will serve as special assistant to the secretary of Housing and Urban Development in Washington.

Coyle, 31, also a Waltham city councillor, was named to the post over the weekend by HUD's new secretary, Patricia Roberts Harris. The position's salary is being negotiated, Coyle said.

Historic inns destroyed by fire

Two historic southern Vermont inns have been left in ruins by fires that sent more than 40 people fleeing into sub-freezing temperatures, authorities said.

No serious injuries were reported in either weekend blaze.

The major portion of one of Vermont's most exclusive resort hotels was gutted by fire Sunday night, when a candle apparently ignited some drapes on the third floor of the Mountain Top Inn in Chittenden, fire officials said.

About 20 miles to the south, a late-night fire Saturday in Wallingford left the Virginian, a restaurant and boarding house, in ruins.

Tax alternative to bottle bill

HARTFORD, Conn. UPI — A business tax to finance litter cleanup is getting attention as a possible alternative to Connecticut environmentalists' goal of banning non-returnable beverage containers.

The so-called "bottle bill," modeled after laws in Oregon and Vermont banning non-returnables, has never mustered the votes for passage in Connecticut.

But Rep. Andrew Grande, D-Bristol, thinks his plan, modeled after a Washington state law, could be combined with - or even replace - the controversial bottle bill and in the process generate the needed support.

UMass buses resume schedule

AMHERST, Mass. [UPI] — The University of Massachusetts bus system resumed operation Monday after a three-week shutdown due to insurance problems and just one day before 23,000 students returned to classes.

A university spokesman said the buses resumed their regular schedules Monday morning as students began registering for spring semester classes. An agreement between the school and the Marsh & McLennon Insurance Co., of Boston, allowed the buses to return to service, the spokesman said.

Deed restoration hits snag

PROVIDENCE [AP] — Plans to restore and preserve a 17th Century deed between Roger Williams and the Narragansett Indians for the settlement of Providence have run into a snag.

The restoration project, for which the city allocated $100, apparently will not start because custodians of the deed are reluctant to let the document out of their sight.

Robert Chase, an aide to Mayor Vincent A. Cianci, said the office of city recorder cancelled the job, fearing that the restoration process might damage the deed.

The office cited a "traditional and legal precedent" that the deed cannot be taken from the security of a wall safe in the land records office of City Hall. Recorder Corinne Sormanti said Sunday that she thinks there is either a state or cty law declaring that the deed cannot be removed.

Coffee prices to continue climbing

By GREGORY JENSEN

LONDON (UPI) — International coffee negotiators said Monday they are powerless to bring coffee's price down or keep it from skyrocketing still higher. Two major coffee producers said thereal shortage has not yet begun.

One producer predicted "hysteria" among coffee-buying housewives by summer.

The 16-nation executive board of the International Coffee Organization, governing body of trade in the world's most valuable commodity apart from oil, brushed aside routine business Monday to ponder what action it could take to lower coffee's price.

There seemed little it could do.

"If the price were the result of some artificial situation," said a United States delegate, "then we would have a field of action. But you're powerless when it's a question of fundamental supply and demand."

Just how much coffee there is to go around was a matter of contention.

"The ICO says there is enough to go around," said Juan Santos of Colombia. "But we say their method of counting is wrong.

"Stocks of coffee which can be exported are virtually exhausted," Santos said.

Delegate after delegate gloomily predicted high prices to come. Marcello Raffaelli, the Brazilian delegate, did not quarrel with predictions of coffee retailing at $4.25 to $5 a pound in New York before the year's end.

"The real shortage is still to come," Raffaelli said. When the shortage becomes really bitter "people will get hysterical in June, just as the Brazilian winter begins."

The steep rise in coffee prices arose from a series of disasters in coffee-growing areas, starting with Brazil's frost in June, 1975.

Since then, according to an official ICO paper presented Monday, coffee producers' exports have been at or near all-time record highs.

"but as exports have gone up, stocks have gone down," Santos said.

He said the run-down in exportable stocks spelled real shortages to come.

Brazil and Colombia wanted a special ICO meeting to explore this problem. Raffaelli said they did not push the matter Monday for fear of creating "market panic."

Bitter winter factor in crises

Energy crises mounted in Ohio, Pennsylvania and other states Monday in one of the bitterest and most unrelenting winters on record. The federal government took action to keep homes warm.

Fresh snow, sleet and rain belted the Southland.

The Florida Emergency Board of the U.S. Agriculture Department scheduled a meeting to determine whether damager to citrusand vegetable crops made the state a disaster area. A 10-day embargo on Florida citrus shipments took effect.

Gov. Otis R. Bowen declared an "energy emergency exists in the state of Indiana."

Georgia officials said a worsening natural gas shortage has forced an estimated 75,000 persons from payrolls totaling $30 million a week. Gov. George Busbee said the state is seeking Canadian natural gas and will consider emergency legislation if necessary. The Atlanta Gas Light Co. pleaded with commercial consumers to cut hours of operation and even hospitals were asked to dial down thermostats.

In Washington, the Federal Energy Administration said it will order five refiners to produce more kerosene for home heating. The act may cut fuel available for airlines, but acting FEA Administrator Gorman Smith said "protection of the public health, safety and welfare requires these measures."

While other states wearied of snow, Colorado Gov. Richard Lamm — fearful that the state may be facing its worst drought since dust bowl days — told legislative leaders he needs at least $150,000 for cloud-seeding. The state desperately needs snow in the moutains, he said.

Cold-induced energy shortages have put Pennsylvania in a state of emergency since last week and a natural gas emergency was declared over the weekend in Ohio.

Ohio Gov. James Rhodes called the legislature into special session Tuesday to deal with the worst energy crisis in the state's history. The Philadelphia Gas Works said further cutbacks might be necessary even though Mayor Frank Rizzo said he believes the city is being "ripped off."

New snows in the Southland piled up a half-foot deep in northwest Georgia. The snow was only an inch deep at Knoxville, Tenn., but that was the heaviest fall of the winter and enough to close schools.

Near Jackson, Tenn., a school bus with 32 children aboard slid on a ice-covered downhill curve, grazed a bridge railing, and overturned in a water-filled ditch. Eighteen children were hurt.

The town well was dry in the Alabama mountain village of Gaylesville because the townsfolk pumped too much water to keep their pipes from freezing.

Carbon monoxide kills Rhode Islanders

Carbon monoxide poisoning killed three Rhode Islanders in parked automobiles Monday and hospitalized a fourth person.

Park police found Linda E. Hayhurst, 14, and Thomas J. Goff, 18, of Pawtucket, unconscious in a car with the engine running in Lincoln Woods State Park about 12:15 a.m. They were pronounced dead at nearby hospitals.

Police said the parents were unaware the teenagers knew each other but a Valentine card was found in the car with their names on it.

Henry Farrell, 37, and Emma Colantonio, 38, both of Johnston, were found unconscious in a car, its engine running, in a parking lot near the woman's home about 1:30 a.m.

Farrell was pronounced dead at Roger Williams General Hospital. Mrs. Colantonio was in satisfactory condition.

The incidents in Lincoln and Johnston prompted a warning against sitting in closed, parked cars with engines and heaters running.

"It's dangerous and it shouldn't be done." Dr. William Q. Sturner, state medical examiner, said Monday. He said a window should be opened to allow fresh air to enter the car.

"The most important thing is not to sit stationary for a lengthy period of time in a completely closed car," Sturner said.

Kissinger hasn't changed according to classmate

NORWALK, Conn. (UPI) — Has success spoiled Henry Kissinger? No, says a man who went to kindergarten with him.

"It has been very exciting watching the growth of an old friend from humble beginnings to a position of such power. The position hasn't changed him. He hasn't forgotten old friends," says Frank A. Harris.

Harris is the food service coordinator for the Norwalk school system, and a leader in he American School Food Services Association.

He visits Washington frequently, buttonholing congressman on behalf of the association, and sometimes visting Kissinger.

The two were boys in Fuerth, Germany, and Harris recalled their last two years in high school.

"He was bright, but not the brightest. He was the more intellectual. He had an early interest in history. He was an above average student." Kissinger's father was a school teacher, and Harris' father owned a toy factory.

Harris said Kissinger gave little inkling then of becoming the debonair figure he did.

"He was a little on the quiet side socially," Harris said. Harris says he has always felt free to criticize Kissinger during their long friendship.

"One of the things about friendship is that is should allow one friend to criticize another, regardless of the high standing of one criticized," says Harris.

He disagreed with Kissinger on Vietnam and said he felt his greatest triumph was establishing ties with China.

"I also said that while I was preduduced in favor of the preservation of the Israeli state, I didn't expect him to be biased in handling the situation.

"After all, he is our secretary of state and not the Israeli foreign minister.

"I said, too, that I had disagreed with the returning to Fuerth recently to accept an award from some of the same old timers who wanted to kill us in the 30s.

"I am very adamant on that point and I told the secretary I was disappointed," Harris said. Harris' memories of growing up in Germany under the Nazi jackboot are still vivid. His father was put in a concentration camp and the family was able to buy his freedom by selling the toy factory and the family car for exactly $12. Harris was allowed to leave Germany in 1940 aboard the "Children's Express," which carried youngsters under 16 out of Germany. He went to Holland, to England, and then America. Kissinger had left in the summer of 1938 with his parents.

They met in a New York synagogue and decided to enlist in the Army which they both did on the same day, Feb. 7, 1943. Harris was a combat engineer of the 7the Army when it liberated his hometown of Fuerth, and he was the first American into it.

"I remember the excitement in my heart when I came over the hill to see the town. I went quickly to all the homes I remembered, but none of my friends were left. They had all disappeared or were murdered. It was suddenly very sad."

Trial begins for prominent Massachusetts lawmakers

BOSTON (UPI) — At least nine jurors were seated Monday in the federal extortion-conspiracy trial of two prominent Massachusetts lawmakers accused of taking $40,000 from a New York firm in exchange for an uncritical report on the firm's work.

Lawyers for Senate Majority Leader Joseph J.C. DiCarlo, D-Revere, and Senate Assistant Minority Leader Ronald C. MacKenzie, R-Burlington, exhausted nine of their 10 peremptory challenges. Assistant U.S. Attorney Edward J. Lee used five of his six.

U.S. District Judge Walter J. Skinner, who said he expected the trial to last two or three weeks, interviewed in private nearly four dozen prospective jurors in obtaining the 11 jurors — seven men and four women — seated by the close of court Monday. However, since each side has one challenge remaining, only nine jurors so far are assured of hearing the case.

"The parties have some concern about the extent of publicity that has surrounded this case and we will be having an individual examination of the jury," Skinner said in brief comments before beginning jury examination.

DiCarlo and MacKenzie are accused of extorting $40,000 from McKee, Berger and Mansueto, a New York management consulting firm which was hired to supervise construction of the Boston campus of the University of Massachusetts.

DiCarlo headed a special eight-member legislative committee which was formed in 1971 to investigate MBM and cost overruns on the UMass construction job.

The indictment accuses DiCarlo and MacKenzie, the alleged go-between, of soliciting a bribe from MBM officials in 1971 and 1972 in return for a favorable report by the special committee. MacKenzie was not a member of the committee.

As many as 40 witnesses and John Doe, an unindicted co-conspirator, who appeared before the federal grand jury investigating the charges, have been subpoenaed for the trial which is expected to last about three weeks, sources said.

The subpoenaed witnesses include the members of the special committee — present and former members of the legislature — and the powerful chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford.

The indictment was returned before the November elections, but both were re-elected despite the charges.

DiCarlo voluntarily relinquished his official duties when the indictments came down but not his title or salary. He was re-elected without question in November. MacKenzie survived a challenge by only 237 votes.

Three-year project instituted to increase newspaper readership and circulation

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — A major program to build newspaper circulation was unveiled today by an industry offcial who called for the restoration of "the public's traditional feeling that reading the newspaper every day is an essential part of civilized existence."

Otto A. Silha, president of the Minneapolis Star and Tribune Co. and chairman of the Newspaper Advertising Bureau, outlined the three-year project during a keynote address to the winter sales conference of the International Newspaper Advertising Executives INAE.

He said the Newspaper Readership Project's major goal would be to increase newspaper readership and circulation in the face of competition from broadcast stations.

"The key challenge we face is to convert younger people to the habit of regular readership as they enter the world of being active citizens and consumers," Silha said.

The project was developed by the Newspaper Advertising Bureau and the American Newspaper Publishers Association ANPA, but will be supported by contributions and ideas from many industry sources, he said.

The project includes efforts in four areas: Research, promotion and public relations, training and communications.

"ANPA already has important programs underway that will be strengthened as part of this plan — Newspaper in Education, news research in the universities, development work on new circulation equipment and systems through the Research Institute," Silha said.

"And ANPA will be working with the International Circulation Managers Association and the American Press Institute in the vital area of circulator training.

"One of the Bureau's assignments will be to provide largescale research on the newspaper and its readers that will be helpful to newspaper managements, editors, circulators and promotion executives." Silha said newspapers must develop stronger marketing strategies.

"I think there are three elements of this strategy. We've got to maximize our utility to our readers. We've got to work as a team. We've got to make things easier for our customers.

"It is also clear that due to an unusual combination of factors, newspapers have a remarkable opportunity in the next few years to assume a more important position than they have ever held in the media world."

Chauffeur service not for Carter

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Carter ended door-to-door chauffeur service for his top aides Monday, and eliminated 20 limousines from the White House fleet to help his staff "stay closer" to the American people.

Press Secretary Jody Powell told reporters Carter has wiped out "door-to-door" limousine services for White House aides in line with his campaign promise to end the imperial presidency.

The "A list" of those entitled to the services, has always been one of the perquisites most desired by the aides. During the Nixon administration, the "A list" was an indication of which staffers had the ear of the President or were blessed by top aides H.R. Haldeman and John Ehrlichman.

Powell said other "perks" were being reviewed with an eye toward their elimination, including a possible reduction in the fleet of Air Force jets on standby to carry administration officials and members of Congress.

Powell said 12 Chrysler sedans, leased for $6,000 a year, and eight other vehicles would be taken out of service, and the personnel — all army sergeants — would be transferred back to the Pentagon.

At the same time, Powell said Carter told his Cabinet members at their first meeting to cut back on their own motor pools, but did not ask them to give up their limousines.

From now on, White House cars will be mainly used for courier service.

Powell said Carter was motivated by economy and to demonstrate that he and his administration feel it is incumbent on them to demonstrate that in calling on the American people to make sacrifices, they will do likewise.

"It helps us to experience the frustrations," he said, including fighting rush hour traffic.

Powell said the President had called Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., and Rep. John Moss, D-Calif., both severe critics of misuse of government cars and planes, and told them of his action. Powell said it was "to their credit" these matters were brought to Carter's attention.

Amy Carter holds her new black and white 12 week old puppy which was presented to her in the Diplomatic Room of the White House 1-24. He is part Springer Spaniel and his name is Grits. (UPI)

Amy's late for school and gets warm welcome from classmates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Escorted by the Secret Service, Amy Carter was late for school on her first day today because of Washington traffic, but she made an excited entry to a special welcome from her classmates.

First Lady Rosalynn Carter went to school with her 9-year-old daughter to get her launched and somewhat sheepishly explained to a gathering of reporters that "we miscalculated how long it took to get here."

The school bell had rung twice and it was about 9:12 a.m. when the sleek, black White House sedan drove up in front of Thaddeus Stevens Elementary School, five blocks from the White House. Police and Secret Service agents had roped off the entrance to keep back a crowd of about 50, made up mainly of reporters and a few passersby who stopped to watch.

Wearing a blue and red cap, blue denim jeans and a blue jacket, Amy carried a canvas bag with "Snoopy" written on it and bounded up the stairs with her mother. She paused to turn and wave at those below.

Mrs. Carter said Amy was "really excited" about her first day as a fourth-grader at Stevens. In fact she was so excited she turned down a chance to go bowling with her father Sunday night at the White House so she could get her school materials together, Mrs. Carter related.

The 23 other classmates in the combined fourth fifth grade class welcomed Amy and said "good morning Mrs. Carter," as they arrived at the class, according to press secretary Mary Hoyt. They had put up a "Welcome Amy" sign and a special mobile with a blue and purple feathered bird as a welcome.

According to Mrs. Hoyt, Amy had a white sweater with a big red Snoopy on the front and she bounded in to hang up her coat, helped by another student, and quickly took her seat at one of the tables. She was familiar with the classroom, having visited there previously before Carter took office.

Amy will eat hot lunch in school daily, at a cost of $1.75 a week, Mrs. Hoyt said. She has enrolled in an after-school Spanish class that runs from 3:15 to 4:15 p.m., Mrs. Hoyt said.

Mrs. Carter blamed the tardiness of her daughter on rush-hour morning traffic. They left 20 minutes for the drive from the White House to the school, Mrs. Carter said, but it took almost 28 minutes.

Secret Service agents looked a bit sheepish about it, and it was obvious they would check out the route again to get her there on time.

The First Lady saw her daughter into the classroom and left about 10 minutes later. Mrs. Carter does not intend to accompany Amy every day.

But the Secret Service agents stayed. They will keep guard outside the classroom door and escort Amy during her school

Governor Snelling confirms it

Solzhenitsyn to live in Vermont

MONTPELIER, Vt. (UPI) — Reports that exiled Russian author Alexander Solzhenitsyn plans to make his home in Vermont have been confirmed by Gov. Richard Snelling.

Snelling told a news conference yesterday he had a three-hour lunch Saturday with the 1970 Nobel Prize winning author. Snelling said Solzhenitsyn told him he plans to live in Vermont until he can return to a "free Russia."

Asked exactly where Solzhenitsyn plans to live in Vermont, however, Snelling smiled and said, "I guess you'll have to learn that from him."

Persistent reports and immigration papers filed with the U.S. State Department last year indicated Solzhenitsyn planned to live in the southeastern Vermont town of Cavendish. But those reports have not been confirmed.

Snelling said Saturday's meeting was requested by Solzhenitsyn.

Solzhenitsyn was interviewed in Montpelier Friday by a reporter for the Barre-Montpelier Times Argus who learned he was in the city.

The Russian author came to Montpelier city to pick up papers from the secretary of state's office so he can start a non-profit publishing business to distribute literature on Russia in America and abroad.

Snelling refused to go into the details of his discussion with Solzhenitsyn. However, he said they talked about the state's laws governing the publishing business.

A spokesman for the secretary of state's office said Solzhenitsyn also took out papers needed for a foreign non-profit corporation to do business in Vermont.

The spokesman said Solzhenitsyn said those papers were for a Swiss corporation that apparently would handle the Vermont-printed material.

Solzhenitsyn reportedly left Switzerland last summer because of harassment by Soviet agents.

Volpe returns home after four years

BOSTON (UPI) — John A. Volpe flew home after four years as U.S. ambassador to Italy yesterday, saying he may teach or write a book. But he said he is through with politics.

Volpe, 68, a former Massachusetts governor who served as U.S. transportation secretary before being named ambassador by former President Nixon, was greeted by a small crowd of relatives and friends at Logan International Airport as he stepped off a direct flight from Rome.

He told newsmen he would go to Washington to brief Carter administration officials before taking a vacation. He said he had no specific plans for the future.

"I don't say I'll retire completely," he said. "I expect to keep busy. I may even write a book. I probably will give some consideration to some teaching and maybe be on the board of directors of one or two large national firms.

"But as far as going back to the construction business or politics, per se, no. I have given 24 years, almost a quarter century to public life and I think I've done my share," he said.

Volpe became a millionaire contractor before serving as federal highway administrator in the Eisenhower administration. He later served two and a half terms as governor before being appointed transportation secretary by Nixon in 1969.

N.H. nuke construction halt upheld

MANCHESTER, N.H. (UPI) — The Nuclear Regulatory Commission yesterday stayed an order by its appeals board which would have halted construction Feb. 4 on the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire's $2 billion nuclear power plant at Seabrook, a company spokesman said.

"On Feb. 7 in Washington there will be oral arguments heard on whether the construction permit is to be permanently suspended or not," PSC spokesman Frank Swierz said.

"In the meantime, we are to file our briefs and the intervenors conservationists who have fought the plant for more than four years are to do the same," he said.

On Friday, for the second time in five months, the appeals board of the NRC ordered a complete halt to construction of the 2,300 megawatt plant on New Hampshire's 18-mile coastline, effective at 6 p.m. Feb. 4.

The board had done the same thing Sept. 30, and five days later was overruled by the full NRC.

The appeals board said Friday there should be no more construction until further hearings were held by the NRC's Atomic Safety and Licensing Board. The hearings were expected to consider whether cooling towers might be used at Seabrook.

The Federal Environmental Protection Agency has indicated it might favor such towers instead of the planned system of forcing ocean water used to cool the reactor through 7,000 feet of under-ocean tunnels.

The EPA earlier had forced the PSC to extend the tunnels from 3,000 to 7,000 feet offshore because they would have surfaced near valuable lobster breeding grounds.

Resources for women

Everywomen's Center (506 Goodell): Everywomen's Center offers a place to relax and meet other women, as well as programs and counseling services. The Center offers short term counseling service including career and discrimination, lesbian, affirmative action, rape, and survival counseling, with referrals to other sources. The staff also facilitates self-growth groups and support groups.

Project Self sponsors a series of workshops (February 28 through May 1) designed to offer women a chance to share their skills, potential, and life experience in a supportive atmosphere. There are forty-four workshops, including everything from guitar to carpentry, and credit can be obtained either through Women's Studies or Continuing Ed. Registration begins January 21 and ends February 18.

Staff Women's Services presents workshops and forums of interest to University staff women, and acts as advocates for women's grievances. The Everywomen's Center also publishes a monthly newsletter with University as well as international news of interest to women.

The Poor Women's Task Force aims to increase availability of higher education to poor women, and educate the community about poor women's needs.

Central Area Women's Center (Baker House): The Central Area Women's Center sponsors speakers, colloquia, and assertiveness training sessions. The Center includes a reading room, office, kitchen, living room, and library. The Center also offers some material on general University information, health information, and academic regulations.

Northeast-Sylvan Women's Center (B-4 Lewis House): The Northeast Sylvan Women's Center provides workshops, films, panel presentations, guest speakers, counseling, and colloquia. The Center also includes a library, health information, study area, and meeting place.

Orchard Hill Women's Center (Field House): The Orchard Hill Women's Center functions as part of the human awareness program on the Hill. The Center offers workshops, colloquia, and speakers to bring greater understanding of the problems to the Orchard Hill community and the University.

Southwest Women's Center (Crampton-Mackimmie apartment): The Southwest Women's Center offers courses, colloquia, workshops, and a wide variety of counseling services. There is also a library with new books and materials by and for women, and films.

Women's Studies Program (508 Goodell): The Women's Studies Program offers a wide variety of courses in many departments and field work in the community to interested students. Now in its sixth semester, the program offers a major and a certificate minor in Women's Studies.

The Program attempts to inform and develop awareness of the roles, contributions, and existence of women in all fields of inquiry.

The Program provides an opportunity for students to formulate an individually designed plan of study in consultation with a faculty sponsor, which may include courses offered at the University and in the Five Colleges, independent study, and field work.

A program in Women's Studies may be approached in two ways:

1. You may earn a Certificate, equivalent to a minor concentration, in addition to a major.
2. You may develop an individualized major in Women's Studies.

During the spring semester, over one hundred courses will be offered in Women's Studies throughout the Five College area. A complete course description guide is available at the office (Monday through Thursday, 9-5; Friday, 9-1).

Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration Program (416 Goodell): (BDIC) has provided many women with access to fields that have been traditionally "male-oriented": pollution control, environmental studies, computers, etc., as well as the various helping professions: counseling, family planning, social service, etc.

Women who are returning to school after working or raising a family may see in BDIC an opportunity to retrain or specialize in a new field.

Rape Task Force: The Rape Task Force is a collaboration of campus agencies dedicated to informing the community about rape, and providing services for rape victims. The Task Force has sponsored guest speakers and conferences, and maintains a file of information and books about rape and child abuse.

The Task Force also sponsors panel discussions and films for dorms and campus organizations, counseling service for rape victims, and has printed pamphlets about rape prevention and campus services for victims.

Sensitive Crimes Unit, Department of Public Safety (Dickinson Hall): Public Safety created this specialized unit in response to the need of University and community women when dealing with rape, attempted rape, exhibitionists, harassment, and obscene phone calls. Trained male and female officers are available 24 hours a day to counsel and aid victims.

Victims may report a crime anonymously, if they wish to leave a description of the criminal and prevent other women from becoming victims. The Department provides full referral services for counseling, medical treatment, and aftercare. For assistance, call 545-COPS.

Title IX Task Force: The Title IX Task Force is planning a full week of activities in celebration of International Women's Day for the week of March 6-12. Plans for the week include women's entertainment, art exhibits, and other activities in addition to the workshops and speakers.

Possible workshop topics include women and the media, lesbianism, health care, sexuality, Third World Women, sexuality, women and art, rape, child care, alcoholism, and women and professional careers.

"The better people on campus will naturally be the ones to go first. But I also think UMass is now being perceived as an incubator for people. It has, so to speak, arrived on the scene. Many departments are losing people to other universities and private jobs, such as the business, economics, and polymer science departments. Their personnel are being seen as viable in other places now.

"What has to be done now is make these people stay here — we want to keep them.

"The University's primary mandate is as an educational institution, but it is also one of the largest employers in western Massachusetts. The economic health of this area depends on this University, and the legislature and the governor have to realize that," he said.

Government job still possible

Bromery said he believes he is still being considered for a position in a Federal government department, but that he is not actively looking for a job.

"There has been some communication with some people from Washington, and I know some people in President Jimmy Carter's cabinet, such as Pat Harris (Secretary of Housing and Urban Development).

"If I had to name a department I would like to serve in if asked, I would have to say I was partial to the Interior Department because of my experience there. I am not interested in a position as a position, but rather for what I could do in a certain area depending on where the department was going in the future.

"I am approached often with job offers. It is just more often during an election. This doesn't mean I am looking to leave.

"I don't want to mislead anyone. If I were offered anything, I would not accept immediately — it would depend on the position. And the major factor would be that I am still in this office as chancellor and still have responsibilities here at UMass."

Carter's Cabinet

Bromery called the composition of Carter's cabinet "not half-bad," saying that his choices showed that Carter did not engage in "tokenism and empty gestures."

"There is a difference between what a candidate says during a campaign and the hard responsibilities he faces as president," he said. "One has to weigh those promises and responsibilities.

"There were a lot of people I would have dreaded see get in that didn't get in. As for Griffin Bell (Attorney General), I have a long, long list of people I would have rathered see get the position other than Bell. I would have preferred someone else, but a lot of civil rights advances have been made by people from the South.

"Griffin has to prove he's liberal, unlike someone from the North, such as Boston, our 'Cradle of Liberty'," Bromery said sarcastically.

"Bell has been called 'moderate with the times' during which he served, but I would have preferred someone who took some risks."

> "I have a long, long list of people I would have rathered see be appointed Attorney General than Griffin Bell."
> —Chancellor Bromery

Appointments

Bromery said he is very close to choosing a vice-chancellor for Administration and Finance. He expects to be given a short list of three to five candidates within a week to 10 days, and after narrowing it down to about two, he will re-interview these and then choose.

The position of Campus Center director is not as close to being filled, with the field of candidates still being narrowed down.

As for finding a permanent vice-chancellor for student affairs, a position now held by Acting-Vice-Chancellor Robert L. Woodbury, Bromery said appointments are being made now to the search committee for that position.

Nursing school move?

Bromery said he has received "no indication" that a committee formed to study the possibility of a UMass Nursing School move to UMass-Worcester would recommend such a move.

New Courses in Geography
Science major and need a "D" course? Liberal Arts major who needs a related course? Humanist who wants to be educated?

GEOGRAPHY 155B (D)
Introduction to Human Geography.
MWF9:05 — Flint 201
Purpose: to introduce student to variety of problem perspectives in Geography; Explain why environments develop as they do. Themes to illustrate how geographers explain human experience of space and social and economic problems which reflect themselves in the landscape. Four broad themes include: 1) Approaches to Environment and Value Systems; 2) Environmental Images and Activity Patterns; 3) Ideology and Environmental Modes of Production and reflections in Space; 4) Urban Spatial Structure and Contemporary Urban Problems.

GEOGRAPHY 271
Urban Environments: Problems and Prospects.
MW 12:30-1:45 — Morrill 245
Purpose: to consider how urban landscapes reflect social and economic principles associated with particular modes of production. Problems of urban employment, housing, transportation, and social services considered from a geographic perspective. A critical analysis made of (a) conceptualization of problems (b) past planning "solutions."
Aim: to consider alternative approaches to community development.

GEOGRAPHY 392B
Seminar in Decentralization: Community, Work, and Environment.
M 2:30-5:30 — Morrill 245
Concentrations of power and economic activity breed alienation and inequality. This seminar will consider effects of work structures on the activities and socioeconomic well-being of people within their communities. Decentralization in work and community will be explored in the theories of Peter Kropotkin, Paul Goodman and other decentralists who have posed alternative modes of human organization based upon territorial and economic federations.
Aim: to consider the practical application of decentralist ideas in a contemporary urban and rural context.

University Health Services Pediatric Nurse Practitioner Estelle Trabucco and Staff Pediatrician James Abel offer their services to student.

Dependents now eligible for care at health services

In May of 1976, the University Board of Trustees authorized the University Health Services to make available comprehensive health services for dependents of students through the University Health Center. This makes it possible for students who have paid the basic health fee ($46 per semester) to enroll their spouses and children at the University Health Services for an additional $55 per semester. Dependents may receive the same comprehensive package of services, previously provided only to students.

The $55 is an inclusive fee which covers the spouse and all dependent children. However, these basic services are available at the University Health Center only. Included are unlimited physician and nurse practitioner consultation, as well as specialty consultation in the areas of pediatrics, general surgery, orthopedics, ophthalmology, allergy, obstetrics and gynecology.

Also included are complete laboratory, physical therapy, X-ray and EKG services; allergy shots and immunizations (except cost of serum); and maternity care, including pre- and post-natal care (delivery is covered under the supplemental insurance program, which must be paid separately). Most medications prescribed by plan physicians are available with a 50 cents co-payment. Inpatient care at the University Health Center is provided, as is 24-hour emergency coverage. Eye care examinations by an optometrist are available with a $10 co-payment.

Mental health services include 24-hour crisis intervention; individual counseling and psychotherapy up to 15 visits per academic year; couples, group and family counseling and inpatient psychiatric care at the University Health Center.

Dental services include initial examination (except x-ray), emergency pain relieving, care during and after hours, and dental education. Endodontic care and removal of impacted teeth are provided on a co-payment basis, and routine restorative dental services are available on a fee-for-service basis, as staff time permits.

Health education services include self-care, patient education, nutrition education, educational programs in alcohol and drug abuse, human sexuality and women's health among others.

The Basic Plan is designed to complement the Supplemental Health Insurance Plan to provide total coverage for the student and family. Therefore, students and dependents enrolled in the basic health program are urged to also enroll in the supplemental insurance plan for an additional premium of $56.50 per year for the student and $42.50 per quarter ($170 per year) for the dependents. Services covered under the supplemental insurance plan include hospital care, surgery, delivery, termination of pregnancy, mental health consultation in excess of the 15 visits covered under the basic plan, and emergency services other than at the University Health Center.

Dependents who prefer not to enroll in the basic plan, but who would like to enroll in the supplemental insurance must pay $52.50 per quarter ($210 per year) for the supplemental insurance.

The deadline for spring semester enrollment in these optional student dependent programs is Feb. 15, 1977. Additional information concerning these programs can be obtained at the Health Center, 549-2671

Explosion rips Philly refinery

PHILADELPHIA (UPI) — Firemen battled a blaze that broke out shortly before noon yesterday at the Atlantic Richfield Co. refinery in South Philadelphia.

There were reports the fire was triggered by an explosion. Occupants of office buildings in the downtown section of the city, some five miles away, reported feeling an impact.

The first firemen on the scene ordered additional alarms.

Smoke could be seen billowing up from the huge refinery.

Women's Week planning under way

To the Editor:

This letter is to inform you of the kinds of work and organizing that is taking place for International Women's week, March 6-12. Our committee is presently requesting input, support and information from campus organizations and individuals, for such a project.

If your organization has planned programming for the week, we need to know. We are concerned that important events get the proper publicity and are not in conflict with other major activities.

If you have not yet committed yourself to do international women's programming for the week, we urge your participation as individuals or as an organization. Ideas, materials, funds and people power are needed.

We may also be of assistance in publicity and over-all coordination if you have programs planned already.

Various working committees have already been set up such as Music, Workshops, Childcare, Transporation, Publicity, to name a few. If you are interested in plugging in to any of the committees, we urge you to come to a fun-filled evening of planning on Monday, January 31st, at 8:00 p.m. in Campus Center Room 168-172. Committee work will be laid out at that time, as well as a discussion of the over-all programming for the week.

The serious need for educational women-oriented programming on this campus cannot be stressed enough. For further information please contact the following people.

Competence of bargaining agent questioned

To the Editor:

In the Feburary 8-9 collective bargaining election at the University of Massachusetts, I am one of the officers of the American Association of University Professors Chapter who will be voting for No Agent. Because I have supported collective bargaining in the past, I would like to elaborate on the position I am taking.

Collective bargaining, when employed with expertise, and sensitivity to the needs of higher education, can have a positive effect on faculty welfare and academic programs. Where administered with less of these qualities, the effect is not neutral but devisive and disruptive of academe. In this light I direct attention to the records of the Massachusetts Teacher's Association and the National Education Association, the joint agent seeking to represent the University faculty.

MTA represents six state colleges in Massachusetts and the Community College System. In three of the state colleges MTA has not been able to effect faculty acceptance of a contract, with as long as a six year effort in one case.

An agent must demonstrate sensitivity to academic freedom and individual rights in order to effectively serve the faculty. MTA follows a policy of seeking dismissal of teachers who question MTA's use of agency fees. In 1976, 18 Leominster teachers were taken to court by MTA in an attempt to have them fired because they would not pay the fees. The teachers withheld payment because they charged MTA was using the fees collected for political activity unrelated to servicing the contract in Leominster and MTA would not give an accounting of the use of the fees. The NEA went to the U.S. Supreme Court in 1976 in an attempt to keep teachers from expressing independent views to school committees meeting in public session.

While the MTA's local on the Amherst campus . .ublicly supports the basic tenets of academic freedom and tenure in their platform the Boston campus local, the FSU did not. The proposed MTA collective bargaining board for UMass violates the principle of one person, one vote and tends to disenfranchise the Amherst campus faculty by giving equal control to the much smaller Boston faculty.

On the national scene the NEA has been ousted from all three major universities which it organized. These were the State University of New York, the City University of New York and the Pennsylvania State Colleges and Universities System.

In a real sense the December collective bargaining election was a vote of no confidence in the centralized administration of the University. The next election contains no such symbolism for me. To vote for MTA-NEA requires full confidence in their ability to lead the University toward academic excellence. Their state and national record do not permit me to share that degree of confidence which some seem to hold. Because I respect the sincerity of many who hold another view, I wish conditions were otherwise. However, I suggest that a realistic assessment of the situation provides no evidence that a sincere local group can change the nature of either the MTA or the NEA. They, despite the hopes of many faculty, have failed elsewhere and I am afraid that the University of Massachusetts would suffer similarly at their hands.

Drink tea

Many people, miraculously, seem able to survive solely on coffee. Among them are students, who find the caffein boost especially conducive to their late-night studies. Thus it is perhaps unrealistic to expect much support for a coffee boycott here, or anywhere. But the arguments in favor of at least cutting down on coffee consumption are good ones.

According to Time magazine, coffee prices have just about doubled in the past 18 months, and are expected to continue climbing for some time. The major cause of the present java-flation was an unusual Brazilian frost in 1975, which damaged approximately one-sixth of the world's coffee trees.

Taking advantage of shortages that have not actually reached the market yet, Brazil has increased coffee export taxes, and prices should rise significantly as the supply diminishes. One might also assume that American middlemen have recognized the opportunity for greater profits by blaming higher mark-ups on the frost and the Brazilians.

Whatever the cause, coffee will probably be selling at four dollars a pound in the near future. And since the trees apparently require four years to recover, we can't anticipate prices to drop all by themselves.

We can let the coffee profiteers know that we won't put up with ridiculous prices by cutting down on our intake. That might mean foregoing that second cup in the morning for some of us, or going altogether cold turkey for others. Only through the show of a little 'consumer muscle' will anything significant be accomplished in the way of price reductions. So boycott coffee. And before you read the rest of the paper, go get yourself a cup of hot tea. It's gonna be a long winter.

All unsigned editorials represent the opinion of a majority of the Collegian Board of Editors.

"The people in the United States do not have the happiness that comes from drinking good natural water. Instead they drink dilute sewage containing chlorine and organic and industrial contaminants. They breathe air contaminated with oxides of nitrogen and sulfur, with hydrocarbons and aldehydes, with lead and carbon monoxide and soot.... The quality of food continues to deteriorate."

The desk

I felt somewhat like a historical researcher, rummaging through dusty archives in order to piece together evidence of a bygone era. Ancient history it was not, for I was merely cleaning out the desk of the former Collegian Executive Editor so that I might replaae the semester-old contents with my own new mess.

It seemed almost criminal to disturb the desk, it being in such a state of disarray, yet not without a certain coherency that was consistent with the person who had occupied it. I was astounded at how much one might have learned about the ex-editor from his desk alone. And so, lest ye be all too familiar with cluttered desks of your own, I warn you now — this column is an analysis of a cluttered desk.

As one might expect, an editor's desk is a jungle of typed sheets of paper. Buried amidst them in this particular desk were numerous books and pamphlets on various subjects, ranging from Roget's Thesaurus to, ironically enough, Mao Tse Tung's "Oppose Book Worship". Among these were also a great deal of IRA (official) literature, files on the consumer organization Fair Share, and pamphlets on how to hold socialist workshops.

Seventeen or more magazines were stowed away, including recent issues of Business Week, Aircraft Bulletin, and Moneysworth. And as befits the heavy reader that the ex-editor was, more than $32 worth of library overdue fine slips.

For the musically inclined, a new set of "Augustine" guitar strings; for the artistically inclined, a bottle of India ink and uncounted photographic negatives and contact sheets.

Should a person have become lost or trapped within the desk — which would not have been difficult considering its condition — she or he would have found an environment quite favorable to survival. In the way of food was a can of tuna, a bag of raisins, a jar of honey. In case of illness, a bottle of cough medicine, some 200 vitamln C tablets, and several bottles of unidentified antibiotics.

For personal grooming were two disposable razors (one without a handle) and a collapsible toothbrush; for portable appliances, four size "C" batteries; for warding off undesirable intruders, strategically located knife blades and thumb tacks.

Warm day? A pair of cut-off shorts. Cool day? Two sweatshirts, a sweater, and a tattered coat (the editor left office in the winter, hence the lack of seasonal balance).

In all fairness, last semester's editor took his work seriously and was dedicated to his politics as well. Posters supporting the Irish and Native American struggles and opposing the oppressive S-1 bill were in rolls and stacks. Journalism is a political endeavor, no matter how hard many of us attempt to forget it. My predecessor never tried.

Perhaps most revealing were the words of the Italian journalist Oriana Fallaci, pasted up somewhat haphazardly on the file cabinet next to the desk: "Journalism exists not to fulfill banal curiosity, but to help people fight ignorance, which requires reporting not only facts, but the interpretation of facts."

This column was not intended as an expose of the inner life of an editor through the examination of his personal belongings. He is a person whom I like and respect, and I don't really wish to leave any superficial impressions of him, except possibly that he was very much a real person.

That's something we are likely to forget in this age of mass media and plastic personalities — that behind the printed page and TV screen are real people, some of whom are dynamic and rather unique. And this is not an excuse for human errors, past, present, or future. Just an explanation, of sorts.

So wherever you may be, Joe, I send whatever spare luck I have. Drop by to visit sometime.

As for the new editor, I can only hope that the contents of his desk prove just as fascinating to his successor a year from now.

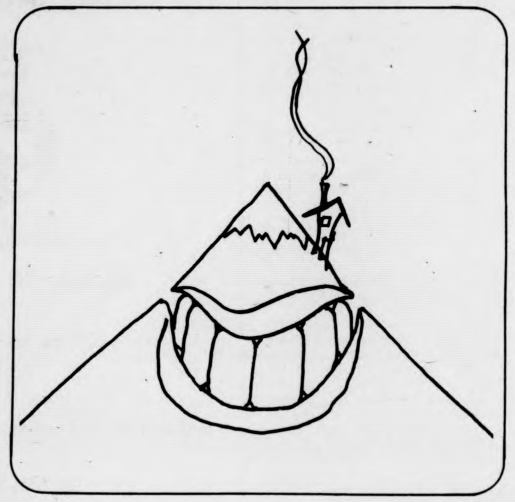
Carter's mountain



Doodle loo do do do, doodle loo do do, doodle loo do...

Up heah on Carter's mountain there have been good and bad times. There is one time that is imprinted on my mind as clear and sharp as yesterday's frost. We were all excited on the mountain on account of the fact that Jimmy-Bob had just been elected President a couple months before and Amy had got the highest score of everybody on her Bible class test.

Doodle loo do do do (softly)...

Amy — "Granma Lillian, my toy toaster is broken."

Granma — "Oh dear, not the one that pops up cards bearing Bible verses and prayers."

Amy — "Yes Granma. I'll ask Uncle Billy to fix it. Bye now!"

Jack — "Hi Granma Lillian!"

Granma — "Jack, get that piece of straw out of your ear. I swear you're getting more like your father every day. Where is your daddy, anyway?"

Jack — "He's outside talking with God."

Granma — "Well go outside and tell your daddy to invite him for dinner."

Jack — "I will. I will. Where's Ma?"

Granma — "She's upstairs knitting the Lord's prayer into your daddy's diapers."

Jack — "Diapers?"

Granma — "Of course child. When your daddy became a born-again Christian a couple of years ago he decided to go all the way!

Oh, after you talk to your daddy would you be a good boy and go down to the filling station and fetch Amy and tell Uncle Billy he's invited for dinner."

Jack — "Sure Granma."

Doodle loo do do do...

Jimmy-bob — "Granma Lillian, would you pass the giblets. Bless you."

Ma — "Well Amy, how was your first day of public school?"

Amy — "Oh mommy, I had such a good time. I pledged allegiance to the flag, I ran around at recess, and I sold my tuna fish sandwich to the kid sitting next to me for a buck and a half."

Billy — "I have such an enterprisin' young niece! Urp! 'scuse me."

Ma — "Is that somebody at the door? Would you get it Jimmy-bob."

Jimmy-bob — "Come on in. It's a state trooper."

State trooper — "Is Billy Carter here?"

Billy — "I believe so. Let me go out back and check."

State trooper — "Whoa there Billy! You're under arrest for selling beer on the Sabbath."

Billy — "Damn all! I'm gonna bust some heads. Who finked?"

Jimmy-bob — "I did Billy. Go now and follow the light of the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever."

Billy — "What the hell, ivorymouth?!"

Jimmy-bob — "But so whoever shall smite thee on the right cheek, turn to him the other, also."

Granma — "Billy's gonna miss his favorite dessert. Oh well, Amy can sell his portion in school tomorrow."

Amy — "Who's going to help you with the spring planting now, pa?"

Jimmy-bob — "The spring planting don't trouble me. I'm worried about who's going to help me with my remaining cabinet picks."

Ma — "Why don't you ask our neighbor from up the way, Griffin Bell?"

Doodle loo do do do...

Amy— "Ma, do you think Uncle Billy will be out by Christmas?"

Ma — "I don't rightly know Amy. Daddy was talking about giving him a padon if he moves off the mountain. It's like your daddy says — you're given your relatives — thank God you can choose your friends."

Amy — "You know somethin' Ma, I like it up here on Carter's mountain."

Ma — "So do I, so do all of us."

Amy — "Ma?"

Ma — "Yes Amy, what is it now?"

Amy — "Momma, I love America."

Ma — "You're a true Carter, my daughter."

Fastest method for madness

By BRIAN HARVEY
Collegian Staff

"Chicago works" was the battle cry of Richard Daly's Chicago. Despite charges of corruption and malfeasance, it could always be said, with some truth, that the buses ran on time and the garbage was collected faithfully.

It is my sad duty to report, however, that the University does not work, at least not during the first few days of the semester. Anyone who has attempted to add or drop a course, confer with an academic adviser, or straighten out a housing assignment will bear mute testimony to that effect.

If one is drawn by the sight of human misery, it would have been necessary only to walk about campus Monday or Tuesday to be satiated. It was necessary to wait in line to accomplish almost any task, however trivial. Worse yet, one's patience was not always rewarded with the successful completion of the task.

As a painful example, consider the situation in the English Department offices Monday. All course changes for the English Department were routed through a single person, sitting behind a desk on the second floor of Bartlett Hall, facing an apparently endless stream of dissatisfied customers.

The University does not work; it whimpers; it crawls; it waits in corners for the first days of each semester to pass.

A few minutes after noon, an authority figure announced that the office would be closing in order to allow the employees to escape for lunch. While those working in the office had performed with unappreciated heroism throughout the morning, and were more than entitled to dine in peace, there were forty or fifty students waiting in the hallway to get into that office, some of whom having waited for over an hour.

Friends, that is the fastest method known for making people mad. People will wait in line, they will maintain their good humor, they will even speak civilly when they finally arrive at the head of the line. But they will not tolerate waiting in line, only to have their goal plucked from their outstretched hands.

The experience of the English Department is duplicated across campus. In every building there are secret, silent lines of students with pieces of paper in their faltering hands. It is, of course, largely their own fault, as correct pre-registration eliminates many of the problems at the beginning of the semester.

The University does not work; it whimpers; it crawls; it waits in corners for the first days of each semester to pass. It is not the fault of departmental secretaries, or students, or even administrators. It is a phenomenon rooted in the myth of the University, of ivy-covered professors called to battle twice yearly with the minions of OSCAR.

The fact of the matter is that we are simply not physically or emotionally equipped as an institution to deal with the unbridled fury of confused students. Each semester the problem recurrs, and each semester it is forgotten after the tide has been turned.

If you are reading this while waiting in line, trying to mentally formulate the proper question to ask the person behind the desk ahead, do not be distressed. Remember that one of the primary functions of the University is to help the student develop a philosophy of life, an ability to face adversity with grace and good humor.

Or, if that doesn't work, remember that it only happens twice a year.

Steps taken to provide energy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Federal energy officials took emergency steps Monday to make available more of the fuels needed to heat homes through the severe winter.

Acting Federal Energy Administrators Gorman Smith announced his agency:

—Was ordering five refineries to make more home heating oil, at the expense of jet fuel production.

—Would allow highest-priority users of propane, such as homes and hospitals, to get all they need through the winter.

—Would help natural gas utilities get enough propane to fill the gap at peak demand, for the highest-priority users.

"Protection of the public health, safety and welfare requires these measures," Smith said, "even at the expense of some inconvenience."

The heating oil order applied to "No. 1 oil," which is kerosene. Many homes in the coldest parts of the country use kerosene for heat, storing the fuel in above-ground tanks, Smith said.

The No. 2 oil used in many parts of the country gets too thick in extreme cold, so kerosene is used in some areas, he said.

Kerosene is also a base for some types of jet fuel. Smith said the effect of the kerosene order on airlines will be "minimal," although some may have to cut back some flights.

Smith said the initial orders for more production of kerosene were going to refineries in Michigan, Wisconsin, North Dakota and Minnesota, the states most hurt by dwindling supplies of kerosene.

The FEA's propane actions were twofold:

The FEA gave the "Priority One" users, including homes and hospitals, an allocation of 100 per cent of their needs, compared with the existing 100 per cent of a base period a few years old.

The agency also arranged to make more propane available for natural gas utilities, if they show they have curtailed all their low-priority users first.

The effect of the heating oil order will be to raise production of No. 1 oil by 7 to 8 per cent, or by 10,000 barrels a day, Smith estimated.

"If that is not enough, we will do whatever we have to do to get more," he said.

Dukakis set to announce list of new prison sites

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis is ready to sink his teeth into the year's hottest political potato by unveiling a list of new prison sites.

The administration is bracing for community opposition.

The key site on the list to be announced this week — perhaps today — is Grafton State Hospital, a mental institution that is shut down. Central Massachusetts residents have fought past plans to turn it into a medium security prison for 250 men.

Plans also call for the expansion of the existing Correction Department facility at Bridgewater.

Dukakis has already announced plans to add cells to Framingham and Norfolk state prisons and use the reopened Warwick Forestry Camp.

Still under consideration, sources said, was a portion of Foxboro State Hospital and purchase of a private reserve, Shadowbrook Seminary in Lennox.

Dukakis worked feverishly yesterday to make his final decision and win backing from legislative leaders. One administration official has conceded privately that the entire exercise may be fruitless because the legislature will oppose any prison expansion plans.

The Correction Department has been lobbying for months to get new facilities, saying its current prisons are dangerously overcrowded. That agency is also backing the Lenox acquisition, favoring an institution in western Massachusetts.

The administration all along has sought to use vacant state buildings for the new prisons and an administration source said Monday the same sites have been under consideration for months.

'Hester Street' to be shown tonight

The film "Hester Street" will be shown tonight in Thompson 104, at 8 p.m. Richard Eder, New York Times film critic, called the movie an "unconditionally happy achievement." Molly Haskell of the Village Voice wrote that the film "grows progressively funnier, more complex, and is finally quite moving. All the actors are compelling."

This free screening is being sponsored by the UMass B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation and is open to the public.

Artists preparing for craft exhibition

Area artists and craftpersons who are members of the Deerfield Valley Art Association (DVAA) are preparing their entries for the 14th annual winter exhibition in Wilson's Gallery, Greenfield.

The week-long show is scheduled for Feb. 21 through 26 during store hours. Entries will be received FEb. 19 from 1 to 5 p.m., according to DVAA President Dario Politella of Sunderland. There is no entry fee.

Co-sponsored by Wilson's Department Store and the DVAA, the art and crafts show invites visitors' votes for their favorite oil canvas and watercolor painting. Each winner in the two categories receives a $25 U.S. Savings Bond donated by Wilson's.

Artists may exhibit a single original work in any medium, not to exceed 40 inches, including frame in either direction. To avoid crowding, exhibitors are urged by Politella to exhibit smaller paintings, which must be suitably framed, with picture wire and screw eyes securely attached.

Craft exhibitors with more than five pieces to enter must obtain tags in advance of Feb. 19 by calling Hostess Ruth Wyman at 773-8789.

Commissions from sales will benefit the DVAA building fund.

Area artists and artisans are invited to join DVAA by calling Treas. Alice Crawford at 772-6992.

Education in China: Film and discussion

A film depicting education in the People's Republic of China will be shown tonight at 7:30 in CC rooms 904-908 by the Philosophy Club. Following the film, Marvin Kalkstein, a representative of the U.S.-China People's Friendship Association, will lead a discussion about non-competitive, cooperative learning and its influence on Chinese society.

Anyone interested in the philosophy of education is welcome. Refreshments will be available.

Art of silversmith to be demonstrated

The art of the silversmith and the lapidary will be demonstrated at the monthly meeting of the Deerfield Valley Art Association (DVAA), Jan. 27 at 8 p.m. in the Capen Room of Stoneleigh-Burnham School, Greenfield.

The public is invited to the show-and-tell session of Gary Jackson, a silversmith of Sunderland, and Bill Gardner, a gemstone expert from Turners Falls.

Snow brings trolley out of retirement

KENNEBUNKPORT, Maine (AP) — Once a museum piece, a 57-year-old snow-sweeping trolley car is returning to duty in Boston, clearing the way for commuters on the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority.

The car was leased to the MBTA for the rest of the winter by the Seashore Trolley Car Museum in Kennebunkport. It will be used to clear the rails on the Mattapan-Ashmont line, according to museum director Richard Lane.

Hard pressed by recent snow and ice storms, the authority asked to borrow the "snow broom" from the museum. The dark red car, with the designation S-31, was to arrive at the Mattapan yard on Monday.

Lane said the sweepers are more useful than snow plows since they can get closer to the rails. The sweepers have circular brushes with heavy rattan bristles that are powered by electric motors.

"As the car moves slowly along, the whirling broom sweeps the snow ahead and off to one side. With a broom in each end, the car is bidirectional. It can sweep in either direction without having to turn around," he said.

The sweepers carried no passengers, and were put in service only for winter storms. During the summer and in fair weather, the sweepers sat idle in their car barns.

For S-31, the trip to Boston marks a return to its point of origin. It was built in Pennsylvania in 1920 for the former Massachusetts Street Railway, and battled Bay State winters until 1935.

Sold to New York City for the Third Avenue Railway system, the car later was resold to the Toronto Transit Commission. In 1973, when the TTC retired its fleet of snow sweepers in favor of highway snow plows, the car was acquired by the museum.

The sweepers used to be a familiar sight in much of New England, but they disappeared along with the trolley. Lane said sweepers haven't been used in Boston since the late 1940s.

Even as a museum piece, S-31 has gotten occasional workouts each winter, clearing the mile-long track here. "Once it's inspected and lubricated, it will be ready to run," said Lane.

SR-56 $109.95*

If you want an incredible slide rule calculator that's also programmable, then this is the one for you.

There're 74 preprogrammed functions and operations. And it has AOS, TI's unique algebraic operating system, the underlying reason an SR-56 is so powerful. It'll let you handle problems with as many as 9 sets of parentheses. Talk about memory. An SR-56 has 10 (11 if you count the T-registered.). And you can do arithmetic with all of them.

Chances are you'll soon discover how really easy it is to program. An SR-56 has 100 steps. Six logical decision functions. Four levels of subroutines. Decrement and skip on zero. Compare a test register with the display to make a conditional branch. And this is just the beginning.

Think about it. Can you really afford to put off getting your SR-56, now?

SR-52 $299.95*

If you want the computer-like power of a card programmable then choose this one.

Techniques like optimization, iteration, data reduction, what-if matrices, mathematical modeling, need not tie up your mind—or your time.

But learning to use it is a hassle, you say. Not true. Prerecorded programs are gathered into software libraries: Electrical Engineering. Math. Statistics. Finance. All you need do is load a mag card, press a few keys and you'll get answers that previously required a computer.

You can make your own programs just as easily. In just a couple of hours you'll begin to prove what a powerful asset you have—right at your fingertips.

And there's not a better time to get an SR-52 than right now.

FAC events open with Gil Evans

Spring semester events of the Fine Arts Center begin with the appearance of the Gil Evans Orchestra on Saturday, February 5. An arranger and composer of unparalleled talent, Evans will lead a 12 piece ensemble that includes tenor saxophonist George Adams, trumpeter Hannibal Marvin Peterson and several other New York jazz scene heavies in a program of challenging contemporary music.

Evans served as arranger for the Claude Thornhill band in the forties and has since worked with Cecil Taylor, Cannonball Adderley and Miles Davis as well as maintaining his own working group. He has been a perennial winner in the Downbeat jazz poll Arranger category. Tickets are on sale now for You.

On Friday, February 18, the FAC will present internationally acclaimed flautist Jean-Pierre Rampal and his keyboard partner Robert Veyron-Lacroix. Last year's Rampal concert drew raves from local critics.

His performance at the Fine Arts Center is part of his present tour of North America. On his 1976 tour Rampal performed at Carnegie Hall, Symphony Hall in Boston and the new Kennedy Center along with his stellar performance at the Fine Arts Center.

The Rampal concert is part of the Fine Arts Center Concert Series. Also on the concert series is the presentation of the famed OSIPOV BALALAIKA ORCHESTRA at the Fine Arts Center on April 4, 1977.

Direct from Moscow, the company of 75 under the direction of Victory Dubrovsky features singers from the Bolshoi Opera Company and dancers of the Bolshoi Ballet. The presentation of the Osipov Balalaika Orchestra at the Fine Arts Center is part of a 12 week tour of the United States in which the orchestra will play in over 70 cities.

The Broadway theatre series concludes with the timeless production of SHERLOCK HOLMES featuring Barrie Ingham. This Victorian melodrama by William Gillette has been delighting theatre audiences for over 75 years. This is the same production of the Royal Shakespeare Company that has received rave reviews including the one word by Clive Barnes of the New York TIMES that says it all, "Miraculous." The play which matches Holmes against his arch-enemy Professor Moriarty will run one night only, on April 28, 1977.

Tickets for events at the Fine Arts Center go on sale two weeks before the performance at the box office at the Fine Arts Center. Additional information for tickets and events at The Fine Arts Center is available at the box office, 545-2511.

A list of most introductory courses which have openings is available in CASIAC to help students who are either registering late or dropping and adding.

This list, updated periodically during the first week of the add-drop period, lists not only courses which have openings in them but also the number of openings in each section and where a student goes to sign up, thus eliminating wild-goose-chases.

Students may use the list by stopping by at CASIAC, E-20 Machmer Hall, Mon-Fri 8:30-4:30.

Anthropology 390J

A new course, Archaeological Moments and Great Debates, is being offered this semester in the Department of Anthropology in an experimental two-credit, ten-week, seminar format. The course offers undergraduate students an unusual opportunity to read, in the original, the site reports and position papers that record the more dramatic landmarks of archaeological research, and to understand how archaeology has arrived, through the past three centuries, at its present status in the social sciences. Participants will act as discussion-leaders and will write one short evaluation "opinion-paper" as course requirements. The course may be registered for as Anthropology 390J. It is scheduled to meet Fridays, from 12:00-3:00 p.m., between January 28 and April 9. Prerequisites: Introduction to Archaeology (Anthro. 102) or permission of the instructor (545-0998).

Comparative Literature:

101A Film: "Faust: The Demonic Imagination" Monday 7:45-9:45

This semester the Department of Comparative Literature is offering a new course entitled Faust and the Devil: The Demonic Imagination in Literature and Film (COMLIT 101A). The course will study a variety of Faustian characters — characters, deriving from the legendary Doctor Faustus, who bargain with the Devil in order to attain knowledge, love, wealth, power, wisdom, or other forms of fulfillment or pseudo-fulfillment. The course will also investigate the role of the Demonic in the human creative process and will compare and contrast the ways the Faustian heroes-heroines are treated in literature and the cinema. An important emphasis in the course will be how one views and "understands" a film, in contrast perhaps to how one reads and "understands" a work of literature.

There will be weekly Monday evening screenings of the films, with discussions of the films, books, and themes of the course on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Other requirements for the course are listed in the Course Description Guide.

The course will meet twice weekly, 1-2:15 p.m. and will include lectures, discussion, guest speakers and presentations by class members. TO BE TAUGHT IN AMHERST

The New England Reading Lab is offering their famous speed reading course to a limited number of qualified people here in Amherst. The average person who complete's this course can read 5-8 times faster, and with substantially improved comprehension and better concentration.

This famous course has taught many thousands of people to read over 1000 words per minute with the ability to understand and retain what they have read much more effectively. Average graduates can read most novels in less than one hour. In rare instances speeds of up to 20 times faster have been documented.

For complete details about this famous speed reading course be sure to attend one of the free one hour orientation lectures that have been scheduled. These lectures are open to the public above age 13 (persons under 18 should be accompanied by a parent, if possible,) and the course will be explained in complete detail including class schedules, instruction procedures, and a tuition that is much less than similar courses.

These meetings will be held in the Campus Center Room 903, UMASS-Amherst on Thursday, Jan. 27, at 6:30 p.m. and again at 8:30 p.m., Friday, Jan. 28, at 6:30 p.m. and again at 8:30 p.m., Saturday, Jan. 29, at 2:30 p.m. only, Monday, Jan. 31 at 6:30 p.m. and again at 8:30 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 1 at 6:30 p.m. and again at 8:30 p.m., Wednesday, Feb. 2 at 6:30 p.m., and again at 8:30 p.m. TWO FINAL MEETINGS WILL BE HELD on Thursday, Feb. 3 at 6:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

Classes are limited and class places will be filled on a first come — first serve basis only. Be sure to attend the earliest meeting possible to insure a class place.

ATLANTA — Snow, ice, and sleet closed schools here yesterday, freeing these youngsters to enjoy a seldom-seen pasttime. Two weeks of below average temperatures have cut gas and power supplies and closed schools and many businesses.

Mondale pledges NATO support

BRUSSELS, Belgium (UPI) — Vice President Walter Mondale pledged yesterday the Carter administration will keep America's military commitment to NATO despite plans to trim "waste but not muscle" from the domestic defense budget.

But Mondale said any further increase in U.S. aid to NATO beyond the "modest increase" already planned will depend on corresponding increases from NATO allies.

Mondale also spoke with the president of the Common Market's executive commission, Roy Jenkins, in talks centering on world economic and monetary problems, unemployment, inflation and the status of multilateral trade negotiations.

Is he worth it?

Garland defends big salary

CLEVELAND (UPI) — Wayne Garland says he's going to try to be a consistent winner next season to justify the $2 million worth of faith the Cleveland Indians have shown in him.

Garland, who was 20-7 with Baltimore last season, said at a news conference yesterday he thinks he's tailor-made for the Indians. He talked about Cleveland's good defense and youth. And his chance to play regularly.

"I think I can win here," he said. "I'm a ground ball pitcher and we've got the defense.

"I just want to be a consistently winning pitcher. I think the biggest thing is to go out and try to win 20 games. I wanted to go some place that would give me a chance to go out and pitch every four days."

"If I don't," he added, "I hope the whole burden doesn't fall on my shoulders."

Garland has former Baltimore teammate Frank Robinson, the manager, in his fan club.

"He's hard-nosed. He's a bulldog. He has backbone," Robinson said. "He's going to go out there and do good, day in and day out."

Robinson made a special point of adding that he will handle Garland like any other pitcher regardless of the 10-year contract Garland won from Cleveland in the free agent sweepstakes.

"Whatever he got, more power to him," Robinson said. "I'm happy for him. But now it's my job to handle him.

"If he's not pitching well, I'll take him out of the rotation and maybe put him in the bullpen. Look what it did for Dennis Eckersly last year.

"Garland's contract doesn't bother me," Robinson said.

However, Robinson made it clear he doesn't expect Garland to run into the kind of trouble that gave Eckersley a poor start and a strong finish as a sophomore last year.

"He's got four pitches that he can get over the plate. He has pride. He's a battler and he's got confidence in his ability."

Garland,26, has purchased a house in nearby Chagrin Falls and will live there with his wife, son and daughter all year.

The Nashville, Tenn., native became a starter last season after going 4-0 as a reliever and compiled a 2.68 era.

Asked about playing out his option, he said would do it again.

"Sure I was lucky," he said. "If I'd had a bad year, where would I have been now?"

"I'd rather be lucky than good. Luck's a part of life."

Bayi in indoor debut

NEW YORK (UPI) — Filbert Bayi of Tanzania, the world 1,500-meter recordholder, will make his 1976 indoor debut Friday night at the 70th Wanamaker Millrose games.

Bayi, who three years ago set the world 1,500 meter mark of 3:32.2, is expected to arrive in the United States Wednesday and will compete in four indoor meets this winter including the AAU National championships Feb. 25.

Originally, any U.S. appearance by Bayi seemed doubtful because of his country's protest against New Zealand's sports links with white minority-ruled Africa. World mile record-holder John Walker and his New Zealand countrymates Rod Dixon and Dick Quax had earlier announced plans to compete in the United States this indoor season.

But in a scheduled worked out by the AAU, Bayi will not compete in any meets in which the New Zealanders are entered.

Indiana's Benson could go to Kings

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (UPI) — Kansas City Kings' general manager Joe Axelson said Monday if his team gets the first pick in the National Basketball Association draft it would probably take Indiana Center Kent Benson.

The Kings, who are just two games under .555, won't earn the first pick on their own merits, but they are hopeful the first round draft choice they will receive this year from the New York Nets as part of a trade for Nate Archibald will wind up the top pick in the NBA.

The Nets currently sport the worst record in the NBA Eastern Conference at 13-31 while Milwaukee is at the bottom of the Western Conference with 14-35 mark. At the end of the season the teams with the worst records in each conference flip a coin to decide which one gets the first pick of the college crop.

"Should we win the toss the player we favor at this moment is Kent Benson," Axelson told the weekly Kings media briefing. "The only other center in his class is Tree Rollins of Clemson and we plan to look at him some more."

As a New York Net, Julius Erving had to go to the basket for support. In Philadelphia, Doctor "J" is an All-Star.

Erving an All-Star

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Philadelphia 76ers and the Denver Nuggets, yesterday, each had three players selected to the starting lineups for the National Basketball Association's all-star game at Milwaukee on Feb. 13.

In a balloting conducted by the NBA of more than 1.25 million fans, the 76ers had forwards Julius Erving and George McGinnis and guard Doug Collins named to the Eastern Conference starting team while the Nuggets placed guard David Thompson, center Dan Issel and forward Bobby Jones on the Western Conference squad.

Center Bob McAdoo of the New York Knicks and guard Pete Maravich of New Orleans complete the Eastern Conference starting lineup and Paul Westphal of Phoenix and Norm Van Lier of Chicago round out the Western Conference unit.

Thompson emerged as the leading vote-getter with 319,047 votes while last year's top vote-getter, Rick Barry of San Francisco, finished third among Western Conference forwards.

The closest race was for the second guard spot on the Western Conference team where Van Lier beat out Slick Watts of Seattle by only 4,200 votes.

The remainder of the Conference squads will be selected by the 11 coaches from each Conference. The All-Star coaches will be from those teams who have the best respective Conference records after games of Sunday, Jan. 30.

NHL All-Star encounter a round-trip ticket to ho-hum

VANCOUVER (UPI) — Forty of the National Hockey League's finest players gathered yesterday for the league much-ado-about-nothing game, the annual All-Star contest.

With little at stake in the outcome of today's game, some of the players worried more about the 6,000 miles of traveling than they did about who would win — Scotty Bowman's Prince of Wales Division All-Stars or Fred Shero's Campbell Division All-Stars.

Montreal Canadiens' defenseman Larry Robinson said it was a "thrill" to be named to an All-Star team but he added ruefully: "It's a long trip to play a game, especially when you've been traveling like we have lately. And then we played two games at home on two successive nights. But for the good of the league we know we have to put the game on, even though it means traveling 6,000 miles to play it."

Right wing Guy LaFleur hoped the game, which he called the "Showcase of the League" would bring him a change of luck.

"Personally, I hope I get a chance to score because I haven't been playing that well in the past week," the Canadiens' star said. "Maybe it'll do me some good to play in the game. Sometimes you can run a mile for the puck and never get it, and other times it's just at the end of the stick.

"The All-Stars game will give me a chance, possibly to shake what could be possibly bothering me. Anyways, I'll be on the same team as Marcel Dionne and right now he's very close to me in scoring, so maybe that'll have an effect on my play."

The Canadiens' Bob Gainey was cool about the game. A replacement for left winger Steve Shutt, Gainey said he had planned to be in Vancouver anyway for a meeting of the NHL Players Association so subbing for Shutt would add no problems. Shutt was knocked off Bowman's roster because his wife is expecting a baby.

Bowman admitted it was hard getting mentally prepared for the game.

It's hard to get up for a game like this because so many players are traveling so many miles to get here and they're coming in from all parts of Canada and the United States," said Bowman. "There's not even a chance to have a proper practice because there just isn't enough time. The first time we get together is Tuesday morning but then it's only to put on the uniforms and take the official pictures.

"I won't even know until just before game time what game line combinations I'll use or who my starters will be."

Sox sell team affiliate

PAWTUCKET, R.I. (UPI) — Retired mill owner Ben Mondor was awarded the Triple-A Pawtucket Red Sox franchise yesterday by the International League with full support of the parent Boston Red Sox.

The action came seven days after the league revoked a tentative agreement with Marvin Adelson, a Sudbury, Mass., insurance entrepreneur. Adelson, who proposed a world baseball league several years ago, has threatened to take the matter to court.

Mandor, of Lincoln, R.I., said he was starting immediately to prepare for a 75 home game season which opens April 15 at McCoy Stadium.

He decided to change the team name back to the Pawtucket Red Sox from the Rhode Island Red Sox, which the club was called under previous owner Phil Anez.

Marchibroda fires asst. coaches

BALTIMORE (UPI) — Jerry Smith, defensive line coach of the Baltimore Colts for three years who shaped one of the more fearsome lines in the National Football League, has been fired because his style differed from that of coach Ted Marchibroda.

Marchibroda also fired end coach Pete McCulley.

Smith said Marchibroda told him he "didn't conform to his program."

Smith, 45, said he was "shocked" by the decision considering that the front four, nicknamed the "Sack Pack" because of its ability to sack rival quarterbacks, had such an outstanding record.

"If I had done a bad job, I maybe could have expected this," Smith said. "But people in the football business had nothing but compliments for the job I was doing. I worked long and hard for Ted and was loyal to him."

McCulley said of his dismissal, "He told me he didn't feel I had fully accepted his coaching program."

The Eraser erased?

. DENVER (UPI) — General manager Carl Scheer said yesterday there was no truth to reports the Denver Nuggets planned to trade reserve 7-foot-1 center Marvin "The Eraser" Webster.

Scheer said the report reports of a trade for Buffalo's Ernie DiGregorio and George Johnson was "totally unfounded and without any truth at all." The Nuggets and Braves met last night at the sports arena.

Morgan was out most of his rookie year last season because of illness, but he has seen much more play this year in a reserve capacity.

"We never have considered such a trade and don't intend to," Scheer said. "In fact, we we will not trade any of our players before the Feb. 1 trading deadline. We may add another player, but there will be no trades."

Co-captain Adamson continued his long jump domination in New England with a second place vault of 23'3¼, in addition to capturing first place in the USTFF meet at Dartmouth January 15th.

In the pole vault Ted Power came within four inches of tieing the school record set by himself with a jump of 13'6". Power placed third.

Miler Frank Carroll, although far behind the Northeastern sweep of Ken Graham, John Flora, and Kevin Prest, turned in a respectable mile time of 4:19.5.

Besides coming within 1¼ seconds of breaking the 600 yard run school record of 1:12, at the USTFF meet in Dartmouth, Healy turned in a second place time of 1:15.5 time against the Huskies.

Co-captain Jim Hunt, in the best race of the meet, was unable to hold onto the lead and, settled for second place with a time of 2:17.5. Hunt, "fighting tooth and nail" with Huskie runners Kurt Stolle and Bob Flora, took the lead for three quarters of the race but faded in the stretch as Stolle and Flora came from behind to pass Hunt.

Lou Panaccione, beating senior John McGrail and all-American runner Mike Quinn, finished second in the two mile with a time of 9:15.2.

The unit of Peter Bloom, Steve Lafler, Chris Farmer, and Steve MacDougall won the only event for UMass with a two mile relay of 8:09.4.

The runners will have two weeks to practice before seeking their first dual meet win of the season. This weekend Coach O'Brien will choose selected runners and throwers to compete in the Dartmouth Invitational.

Stabler narrowly wins Hickok Belt award

NEW YORK (UPI) — Ken Stabler, who quarterbacked the Oakland Raiders to their greatest season ever which culminated in a one-sided victory over Minnesota in the Super Bowl, yesterday was named winner of the 27th annual S. Rae Hickok Award as the "Professional Athlete of the Year."

The 31-year-old Stabler will receive the diamond-studded Hickok Belt, valued at $20,000, at the 42nd annual dinner of the Touchdown Club of Washington, D.C., on Saturday evening, Jan. 29.

In one of the closest ballotings in the history of the award, Stabler won by only seven points over baseball star Joe Morgan of the Cincinnati Reds. Morgan was the first National League player in 17 years to win back-to-back most valuable player awards.

Stabler received 31 first-place votes and 135 points from the 155 voters who participated in the balloting while Morgan got 28 first-place votes and 128 points. Voters are asked to select three athletes in order of preference and votes are distributed on a 3-2-1 basis for votes from first to third.

Chris Evert, who dominated women's tennis last year, finished third in the voting — higher than any woman ever had previously. Evert received 25 first-place votes and 108½ points.

In fourth place was rookie pitching sensation Mark Fidrych of the Detroit Tigers followed by tennis ace Jimmy Connors and the National Football League's leading rusher, O.J. Simpson.

The final voting was so close that only 66 points separated Stabler from Simpson. A record 24 athletes received votes for first place.

1963 — Sandy Koufax, Baseball
1964 — Jimmy Brown, Football
1965 — Sandy Koufax, Baseball
1966 — Frank Robinson, Baseball
1967 — Carl Yastrzemski, Baseball
1968 — Joe Namath, Fottball
1969 — Tom Seaver, Baseball
1970 — Brooks Robinson, Baseball
1971 — Lee Trevino, Golf
1972 — Steve Carlton, Baseball
1973 — O.J. Simpson, Football
1974 — Muhammad Ali, Boxing
1975 — Pete Rose, Baseball
1976 — Ken Stabler, Football

Rounding out the top 10 vote-getters were World Series hero Johnny Bench of the Cincinnati Reds, pitcher Randy Jones of the San Diego Padres, quarterback Bert Jones of the Baltimore Colts and golfer Jerry Pate.

There have been closer finishes for the belt — Joe Namath won by only four points over Denny McLain in 1968, Phil Rizzuto won by just six points over Ben Hogan and Jimmy Brown won by only seven points over A.J. Foyt in 1964 — but never have six athletes gone down to the wire with so slim a spread.

Stabler's statistics for the 1976 pro football season rank among the best quarterbacks of all time.

Over intersession, the UMass wrestlers fell to defeat against Central Connecticut State, 31-16, in their lone match.

Head coach Dave Amato attributes the loss to a few key deficiencies.

"It was the worst that the team has done all year. Our problem was with the lightweights, some of the guys were up two weight classes; a few just could not make weight," he said.

Despite the lightweight disappointments, "the middle and heavyweights looked really good", Amato commented.

Although the final score was 31-16, the Minutemen won four games and Central won six.

The winners were: Steve Jabaut at 150 lbs., Kevin Griffin at 158 lbs., Mike Reilly at 177 lbs., and Dennis Fenton pinned at Heavyweight.

"Bob Spaulding," pointed out Amato, "looked excellent for the first two periods, and then just got pinned". Spaulding wrestled at 190 lbs.

Dana Cormier wrestled from a 9-2 score to a 9-7 finish, but fell short of the mark.

Going into the match the grapplers were ranked 9th in New England and Central was ranked 10th.

Amato said in reference to the loss, "The long vacation break really hurt us. Central Connecticut State didn't have as long a break as we had therefore they had that advantage."

He added, "Central was psyched from the beginning, when the team came running out the crowd really cheered them. The crowd was great."

Thursday the Minutemen host Springfield College in a much awaited match.

In reference to the upcoming match, Amato said, "The outlook for the match is good. Despite the absence of injured Larry Pontbriant at 118 lbs., the team will be at full strength."

Not only did the snow and cold create havoc for New England, but it made great difficulty for the UMass men's track team. The runners did not have an official team workout for six weeks, and it cost them as they were "blown off the track" against the Northeastern Huskies.

The official score was NU-78¼ Boston University-30 and UMass-28¼. The lack of conditioning obviously showed in UMass' performance as the 0-4 runners were only able to win one event out of the possible 14 events.

"The only positive thing I can say," said UMass head coach Ken O'Brien, "is that we know where we stand conditioning wise."

"For many of our runners and throwers it was the first time they had a competitive workout in six weeks. When they go home for intersession, they find little or no facilities to practice. "Combine this with the high amount of snow and cold and it makes it difficult to work out," said O'Brien.

O'Brien said he was surprised to the extent the team as a whole had degenerated in conditioning since intersession, but maintained that it would not take long for the team to get back into competitive shape.

"I estimate we will be back to the good shape we were in before the break within two weeks. That was not our real team against Northeastern. We will be back," O'Brien added.

The Huskies, unofficially rated the number one team in New England, swept three events, took first place in nine events and set a new record in the long jump, triple jump and two mile. NU's Ron Chambers, set the school's long jump record, with a jump of 23'9 three quarters, he also set a new meet record in the triple jump with a vault of 48'½.

Sophomore Huskie, Bruce Bickford, set a new "Solomon Cage" record with a clocking of 8:50.4 The time surpassed former record holder, senior John Flora's time by exactly four seconds.

UMass did have some good performances from shot-putter Ron Melkonian, long jumper Ken Adamson, pole vaulter Ted Power, miler Frank Carroll, 600 yard runner Mark Healy, and 1000 yard runner and co-captain Jim Hunt.

Melkonian took a third place in the 35 lb. weight toss with a throw of 47'1 and placed fourth in the shot put.

Reserve guard Dave Baxter scored six of his 16 points in the final minute and a half as fifth-ranked Michigan scored the final 11 points of the game for a 92-81 big ten victory over Ohio State Monday night.

The win was the 14th in 15 games for the Wolverines, who lead the Big Ten with an 11-0 conference mark.

But Michigan, leading 75-65 with 6:20 to play and in apparent control of the game, had some nervous moments before pulling it out.

Ohio State, paced by the long-range shooting of freshman guard Kelvin Ransey, took an 81-80 lead with 2:16 to play.

A free throw by Phil Hubbard tied it at 81 and Baxter put the Wolves ahead to stay 83-81 with a driving layup. Michigan then pulled away.

Terry Burris, who fouled out with 3:02 left, led Ohio State with 21 points, while Ransey had 19. Ohio State is now 2-4 in the Big Ten and 7-8 overall.

Seventh-ranked Kentucky used a ball-hawking defense and 65 per cent shooting from the field in the first half to romp past Mississippi, 100-73, in a Southeastern Conference game last night.

The Wildcats, 13-0 over-all and 6-1 in the sec, placed six men in double figures, with forward Jack Givens leading the way with 19 points. Mississippi, 7-9 overall and 1-6 in the conference, was led in scoring by freshman John Stroud with 20 points.

The Wildcats broke the game open late in the first half, outscoring the rebels 14-4 to take a 38-28 lead with 4:45 left in the first half.

Icemen to visit Williams after burying Boston State

By FRAN SYPEK
Collegian Staff

The UMass varsity hockey team figured to be rusty going into its game with Boston State last Saturday. After all, the puckmen hadn't played together since December 14 when they defeated UConn.

If the Minutemen were rusty, though they didn't show it as they posted a 6-3 victory over Boston State in the capital city. The puckmen are now 5-3-1 going into tonight's game against Williams in Williamstown.

The Frank Snow-Carl Burns-Mike Merchant line had a big night Saturday as each member scored a goal. Merchant leads the team in goals scored with seven and has three assists for 10 points. Burns and Chris Lamby also have 10 points on the season with four goals and six assists.

"We certainly were pleased with the win," said UMass coach Jack Canniff, who is sporting a cast on his foot because of an injury he sustained in a recent practice. "It was a good way to get off the mark."

The Minutemen took a 2-0 lead after one period on goals by Paul Hurley and Snow. Burns put the Minutemen up by three with a powerplay score in the second period.

Boston State then scored two powerplay goals of its own to close the gap to one goal, but Bob McCormack scored on a powerplay for UMass, which turned out to be the game-winner.

A couple of Mikes, Merchant and Badger, slid in insurance goals for UMass in the third period.

"We made our opportunities count, which was good," said Canniff. "We got good goaltending from Dana Redmond and by the third period we had control of the game."

Redmond had to be especially sharp in the game, as the Minutemen were outshot, 40-27. Redmond has a 4.00 goals-against average in nine games this season and has stopped around 87 per cent of the opponents' shots.

UMass will be without the services of two players for tonight's game. John Peters has a bad shoulder and Nick Carney has to sit out a contest because he was thrown out of Saturday's game for fighting.

BLUELINE BANTER: Williams is coming off a win over Wesleyan ... Last year the Ephmen were 12-8-1 overall and 8-8 in Division II ... The last time the teams met was two years ago when UMass blew a two goal lead in the closing minutes and lost the game ... The Minutemen resumed practice two weeks ago and have been practicing twice a day.

point lead midway through the second half, and withstood a mild UMass rally to record a 68-62 triumph. The win brought the PC home record to 72-6 since the Civic Center opened five years ago.

The final bright moment of the month came as Claiborne sank a 10-foot jumpshot with two seconds left to give his squad a dramatic 81-80 win over UConn.

From there, UMass did some traveling but came up empty-handed. The Minutemen dropped an 81-62 game to tough Villanova in the Palestra in Philadelphia, and followed that with an 81-77 loss to Niagara.

"We're just not playing well," Leaman said. "We're not rebounding well, not defending as well as we're capable of. And our shot selection has not been good.

"We're lacking that mental toughness as well as physical. We're becoming much too passive."

McHugh scored only two points but had three assists to go along with her tight 'D'.

The Lehman game was simply a mismatch. UMass dominated from start to finsih, as every Minutewoman was able to play.

Peters led the attack with 14 points, while Fletcher added 12. The Minutewomen also had a 45-26 rebounding advantag.

"We took it to them," Ozdarski said. "We really played well. I was especially pleased with the play of Cheryl Carey and Sue Henry, who hit some outside shots."

Ozdarski also lauded Grace Martinelli's play. The sophomore guard pulled down five offensive rebounds and scored seven points. She also had words of praise for freshman forward Maura Supinski, who chipped in with five points and played very aggressively.

FREE THROWS: Today's game against Queens, which is 5-6 on the season, should be a good one ... However, O'Neil is only a probable starter, as she suffered a sprained ankle in the Lehman rout, and Balletta will also be hurting with a twisted ankle ... UMass has a busy week coming up, with games Thursday against Worcester State in the Cage, and a big showdown versus Providence Saturday in the Civic Center ... Starting time for Saturday's contest is 5:15 ... UMass is now 4-2 on the year.

UM drops games, faces

B6 RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

A 7-6 record is not a usual cause for panic. But then again, the UMass basketball team is not your usual sports story.

Perhaps the situation has yet to reach such drastic proportions, but it is quickly heading in that direction. Overshadowing the Minutemen's mediocre record — and in many ways lending to it — comes the shout of "Where have all the faces gone?"

UMass dropped three of five games during the break, and now with guard Alex Eldridge's status in turmoil once again, top substitute Steve Mayfield thrown off the squad, and Eric Williams opting for the books rather than the courts, the Minutemen find their playing corps rapidly depleting.

Eldridge, the talented, controversial, flamboyant, but always interesting junior, dressed but saw no action in UMass' most recent game, an 81-77 loss to Niagara. Eldridge, who was suspended by coach Jack Leaman for the first two games of the season, had yet to meet with Leaman since the game as of yesterday afternoon, according to the coach, and did not practice yesterday.

"It's still up in the air," Leaman said. "I don't know if he'll be making the next trip (Vermont). I haven't discussed any alternatives yet."

Mayfield, the senior forward, "is done", Leaman said sharply. Leaman said Mayfield walked off the court in practice prior to the Duquesne game.

"It's the third or fourth time he's done that since he's been here, and I told him it was the last time," Leaman said. "He never came back. He's all through."

Williams, the sophomore forward, left the squad at the end of last semester in hopes of improving his grades. At the time, his absence was said to be indefinite, but Leaman hinted yesterday that it would be difficult for him to return for this season.

"He wants to be a doctor, and he was worried about his grades," the coach said. "We still have him in our future plans."

The absence of the trio did little to aid the Minuteman attack during the five-game break. After a long layoff, UMass began the new year on a happy note as it dumped Duquesne, 110-97, for its first ECBL win. In that game, captain Mark Donoghue enjoyed his finest scoring night in a red and white uniform with 35 points, Derick Claiborne added 28 as UMass shot 44-53 from the foul line.

Next on the agenda came Providence College, top ranked in New England. The Friars, always dominant on their home Civic Center court, opened up an 18-

Rimwomen capture New York twinbill

The parallels are almost eerie.

The UMass women's basketball team went into intersession with a 2-1 record. The Minutewomen were nipped in their first game, and then handled their next two foes with ease.

Now for over-the-semester-break action. UMass was edged in its first game, and then came back with two impressive victories.

The Minutewomen are right back in action today with a 3:00 game at Curry Hicks Cage against nationally regarded Queens College.

Taking them one at a time, UMass played Rhode Island a week ago Monday at the Cage and was beaten, 62-57.

"We weren't hungry enough," UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said in explaining her team's defeat. "We didn't take our game to them, they took theirs to us, and they won the game."

The Minutewomen had just come off a 34-day break since their last game against Central Connecticut, and obviously the vacation didn't help sustain the momentum that they had built up before intersession.

The Rhode Island game was tied, 28-28, at the half, before the Rams, sparked by guard Maryanne Kluge, who led all scorers with 21 points, pulled away in the final 20 minutes to post the win.

The UMass quintet was led by forward Nancy O'Neil's 17 points and 15 rebounds, Lu-Ann Fletcher's 11 points (but none in the second half) and 15 board clears, and eight points apiece from Sue Peters and Sue Henry.

But the real reason UMass lost the game was because of its 35 turnovers and 30 per cent field goal shooting. The Minutewomen outrebounded the Rams, 49-30, but weren't able to capitalize on the board advantage.

UMass was also unable to run its fast-break offense to its maximum capability, appearing sluggish at times.

But this past weekend, UMass traveled to New York City for a pair of games and won both. The Minutewomen defeated St. John's, 66-59, and Lehman College, 72-39.

Ozdarski was happy with the way her team rebounded from the URI loss.

"We played much better as a team," she said. "We used full-court pressure. They didn't make many turnovers but the ones they did make we capitalized on."

"They were a bigger team, a patterned offensive team. But our ability to go to the offensive boards gave us the edge," she added.

The rebounding Ozdarski referred to showed itself in 18 UMass offensive boards to St. John's eight.

The Minutewomen sported four double-figure scorers in the St. John's triumph. Leading the way was O'Neil, who scored 16. Fletcher had 15, Jo Balletta chipped in with 10, while Peters rimmed 10.

But a big key to the UMass win was the play of Julie McHugh. A freshman guard, McHugh went into the game when the Minutewomen were trailing 7-0 early in the first half. According to Ozdarski, McHugh played "the best game I've ever seen her play."

"She played really good defense. She held their top-scorer without a point for the rest of the first half," the coach added.

ECBL: A step to the top?

It has been somewhat less than spine-tingling. There have been no explosive moments to shatter the Richter scale, few to even increase the sonority of a partisan crowd. At present, it may not appear to be the greatest occurrence in UMass basketball since the arrival of Julius Erving. But I say, nay, I plead, give it time.

I am speaking, of course, of the Eastern Collegiate Basketball League, which we conveniently call the ECBL. When UMass announced its intended departure from the Yankee Conference some two years ago to accept an invitation to participate in the newly-formed ECBL, Minutemen fans were delirious. Why, at that time, hadn't UMass just been overlooked (a mild form of the word snub) by the ECAC in favor of UConn to play in the post-season tournament, despite UMass edging the Huskies for the YanCon crown? Affirmative.

But that is behind us now. The ECBL is ahead of us. And this fact clearly proved itself two weeks ago. UMass had just beaten UConn, 81-80, on a Derick Claiborne jump shop off the glass with two seconds left after UMass had squandered a 15 point lead. I thought back to how Huskie guard Joe Whelton had done the same to UMass last year in a much more important game in the ECAC tourney. "Revenge", I thought, watching Claiborne accept congratulations from his teammates. A relieved coach Jack Leaman then told reporters how his team needed to win a game like this.

"After already losing to Holy Cross and Providence this year, two of the top teams in New England, do you feel that you needed this win to save face in New England?", Leaman was asked.

"That doesn't concern me because we're not in New England anymore," the coach responded. "What concerns me is the win so we can go into the tournament at the end of the year with a 60 per cent won-loss record."

That tournament, the first week of March at the Spectrum in Philadelphia, will host all eight ECBL teams, with the winner gaining an automatic bid to the NCAA tourney. In its initial season, that is what the ECBL is all about, and it is that tourney which UMass will focus all its attention on.

The road to the tournament has been difficult for the ECBL thus far, at least in terms of glamour and recognition. No teams in either division are nationally ranked, while here in New England, both Providence and Holy Cross are. For UMass, this can only be described as frustrating. UMass left New England to upgrade its program, but the team exited just as New England teams are peaking in competitiveness.

As Providence coach Dave Gavitt put it, after his club had just beaten UMass, 68-62, "You can talk all you want about the ACC and other leagues and the competition, but I think we've got that right here in New England. When Mass. plays Connecticut, or we play Rhode Island, or Holy Cross, you're gonna get this kind of game."

Gavitt even mentioned that if these teams were in their own league, the competition would be great. Yet the fact is, New England teams will not gain recognition by beating other New England teams. Providence is not ranked for its beating UMass or UConn, but because of its stunning upset of then top-ranked Michigan. And this is just the reason the Minutemen opted for the ECBL. No matter how many Maine's and New Hampshire's the Minutemen would beat, it would do little for them recognition-wise in regions outside of New England. UMass being 21-4 and tops in New England and still not being nationally ranked last year attests to that. I guarantee that if any team in the ECBL has a record close to that at the end of March, it will be ranked.

Sure, the new league has its shortcomings. Rivalries will not take rise the first year. UMass opponents will be unfamiliar — none of the Wheltons or Hansons, or the Hassetts and Campbells. But in name only, and surely not in quality orquantity.Only Penn State, no regarded as a top ECBL team, will visit the Cage this year. But that's the price UMass fans must pay in order to see top talent. Didn't the Friars fill the Civic Center in Providence 12,000-plus worth when Michigan came to town?

Granted, the league has yet to place a team in the top 20. Its biggest boast came when Villanova beat Notre Dame. Rutgers, thought to be the class of the league in its debut season, is not what it was last year when the Scarlet Knights finished fourth in the country. But as Jack Leaman said, way back in the first week of practice this year, "Just to associate with athletic programs like Penn State and Pittsburgh shows we are on an upswing. These schools are giants in their fields."

UMass has made its move. In the long run, it will pay off. Just you wait and see.

Kelley named co-conspirator in extortion

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

Sen. James A. Kelly Jr. (D-Oxford), has been named as the mysterious unindicted co-conspirator in the federal extortion-conspiracy trial of two prominent State Senate colleagues in the scandal surrounding the construction of UMass-Boston.

The federal prosecutor accused Kelly of making the first attempt to extort money from a New York consulting firm which supervised construction of the Harbor campus in 1971.

Assistant U.S. Atty. Edward J. Lee named Kelly in his opening statement to the jury, but, according to Associated Press, did not say why Kelly is still unindicted, or whether he would testify at the trial.

Senate Majority Leader Joseph J.C. DiCarlo (D-Revere), and Assistant Senate Minority Leader Ronald C. Mackenzie (R-Burlington), are being tried in U.S. District Court on charges that they took $40,000 from the McKee, Berger and Mansueto management consulting firm in exchange for an uncritical report on the firm's work.

Kelly was unavailable for comment last night, but he told an Associated Press reporter earlier yesterday that he did not try to extort $100,000 from the firm.

If Lee's allegations were true, Kelly said, "why am I unindicted?"

He did admit meeting with an employe of the firm March 17, 1971, in Florida, where the bribe is alleged to have occurred.

"If a bribe has been offered, I would have had to turn him in," Kelly said.

Lee told the seven men and five women on the jury that DiCarlo complained when extortion payments were late, saying it embarrassed him because he was sharing the money with other, unidentified persons.

DiCarlo headed a special eight-member legislative committee which was formed in 1971 to investigate the consulting firm and the cost overruns on the UMass construction job.

The indictment accuses DiCarlo and Mackenzie, the alleged go-between, of soliciting a bribe from firm officials in 1971 and 1972 in return for a favorable report by the special committee. Mackenzie was not a member of the committee.

The contract for the consultation, under which the firm made about $6 million dollars, was criticized at that time by the state auditor for being open-ended.

An alleged by Lee, the company president was concerned about the criticism and the possibility of losing the contract.

He met with DiCarlo in 1971, did not get any satisfaction, and another company official arranged to meet Kelly, Lee alleged.

The prosecutor alleged that the subject of money first arose at the Florida meeting between Kelly and Anthony Mansueto, a vice-president.

Kelly told Mansueto that "DiCarlo was not a bad fellow and had kids to send through school and that for $100,000 the problem would be solved," Lee said.

John W. Haigis, former chairperson of the UMass Board of Trustees Building and Development Committee that commissioned the architect for the construction of UMass-Boston, said last night he could offer no comment on the case because the construction "has nothing to do with" the trustees once the architect is commissioned.

He said he was "naturally concerned about things like this," but that the situation after the commissioning had to do with the Dept. of Public Works.

Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said last night he felt it would be "inappropriate" for him to comment now on the situation.

State takeover of the bond indebtedness of the Campus Center, what student participation in collective bargaining could be, and a challenge to the funding mechanism of the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG) are three of many bills recently filed with the Mass. State Legislature which will directly affect UMass if passed.

The Campus Center bill, sponsored by Rep. James G. Collins (D-Amherst), may, according to estimates, save each student from 80 to 100 per cent of their Campus Center fee.

The current bond indebtedness of the complex is now assumed by students directly through their annual mandatory Campus Center fee of $64, and indirectly through monetary support of the Hatch, Coffee Shop, Blue Wall and Top of the Campus, all of which operate at a net profit.

The profits generated by these services are deposited in a Campus Center trust fund, and are then used to pay off the interest on the money borrowed to build the complex, according to Bryan Harvey, acting communications coordinator of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

Takeover of the bonds by the state, as proposed by Collins' bill, would mean students would only pay a portion of the Campus Center fee, depending on what percentage of the bond the state takes over.

Henry F. Ragin, rsearch assistant for legislative matters for the senate Coordinating Committee, said Collins' bill has not yet gone to committee. It would probably first go to the Education Committee and then to Ways and Means. Both committees are joint legislative committees composed of House and Senate members.

Ragin, former co-president of the Student Government Association here, cited the favorable response the bill has received from administrators and students alike, and said he "foresees that this could be the kind of bill that the administration and students could join together on."

He said there is a precedent for such a bill at Southeastern Massachusetts University, where the state assumed payments for the campus center.

Another bill, also sponsored by Collins in conjunction with Sen. James A. Kelly Jr. (D-Oxford), would set up a commission to study what happens to student input when the administration and faculty sit down to bargain collectively instead of through the traditional committee process, said Ragin.

The bill, House Bill 1378, would set up a commission to be composed of five state representatives, three state senators, and five citizens appointed by the governor.

The bill would establish "a special committee to study the effects of student input on governance and finances in institutions of higher education in the state, as a result of the implementation of Chapter 150E of the Massachusetts General Laws."

Chapter 150E gives public employes the right to collectively bargain with the state for salaries and other benefits.

Ragin said the bill has been assigned to the joint Education Committee, and may go to the joint Public Service Committee.

The third bill, a challenge to the current funding mechanism of MassPIRG at Massachusetts colleges and universities, has been termed by MassPIRG Director Stephen Morgan "blatantly unfair discrimination against students."

The bill, sponsored principally by Andrew H. Card, Jr. (R-Holbrook), would order "boards of trustees not to allow any funds for legislative agents.... or organizations attempting to influence legislation... to be assessed on student tuition bills."

Two road proposals considered

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

Two different proposals to reroute traffic from Pleasant St. are being studied by a committee appointed by the Amherst Board of Selectmen.

The committee was formed after the Northeast Bypass project was rejected by the Amherst Town Meeting last fall.

The first proposal before the committee would connect Rte. 116 and N. Pleasant St. In addition, the proposal, presented by the University, would extend Commonwealth Ave. all the way to North Village, a University apartment complex.

The University proposal would also close off Stockbridge Road at N. Pleasant St. Governors Drive, which runs by the Graduate Research Center, would be closed to all traffic except Physical Plant trucks and buses.

The second proposal, presented by UMass professors Richard Harper and Richard Minear, calls only for a road to link Commonwealth Ave. and Rte. 116.

According to Gerald Grady, UMass community relations coordinator and a committee member, the University plan would cost between $1 million and $2.5 million.

However, Mass. Department of Public Works estimates done last fall indicate that the project cost could run as high as $5 million. The estimates were done for the Northeast Bypass.

Minear said that he had no estimates as to the cost of his proposal.

"The major issue is which proposal is best for the town and the University," said Minear.

Both proposals rely on a scheduled improvement of Commonwealth Ave. according to Grady, Commonwealth Ave. will be similar to University Drive, after the improvements, with two lanes and two wide shoulders that could handle two lanes of traffic traveling in each direction during peak hours. In addition, traffic lights and other traffic controls will be installed at the intersection of Commonwealth Ave. and Massachusetts Ave.

$600,000 is allocated in the present capital outlay budget for these improvements. According to Grady the work will probably begin sometime in the spring of 1978.

The committee is also studying a report on University traffic patterns by Curran Associates, a Northampton engineering firm. The report was requested by the University last fall.

The report indicated that University traffic patterns have changed little in the past few years. In particular, it compared two sets of traffic counts that were done in 1973 and 1976. The report indicated that about 13,000 cars use the University section of N. Pleasant St. each day.

Curran Associates estimated that the University plan would decrease traffic on N. Pleasant St. by about 55 per cent. In addition, traffic might be decreased on N. Pleasant St. near the Marks Meadow School and on North Hadley Road, which connects University Drive and Commonwealth Ave.

However, the report indicates that traffic would increase on Clark Hill Road, which runs adjacent to Central, Eastman Lane which runs adjacent to Sylvan, and Massachusetts Ave., due to the closing off of Stockbridge Rd. on N. Pleasant St.

The report dealt mainly with traffic running to and from campus. It did not consider traffic running through the campus.

Grady said committee discussions have been general and not concerned specifics. According to Minear, the committee hopes to question Curran Associates on its report at the committees next meeting. The meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. on Thursday at the Amherst Town Hall.

Basically, it's an alternative

By BARBARA BICKFORD
Collegian Staff

"More and more of my friends are becoming vegetarians for either health or political reasons," one frequenter of the Basics food lines said recently.

The basic dining areas on campus at both Worcester and Hampshire Dining Commons have gained popularity with students recently, including strict vegetarians and others as well.

"Of the 1,000 or so people who eat at the two Basics, we only serve 250 completely vegetarian meals," Marie Cappadona, assistant director of Menu Services, said.

"Many people eat there for a change of pace, or for their diet, or just for the atmosphere," she said.

The Basics dining areas offer an alternative diet to students on the University meal plan. Basics does not include red meat in meals as the main source of protein.

Basics, open for lunch and dinner, serves at least two main dishes at each meal, one of which is strictly vegetarian. Supplements to the main dishes include yogurt, cottage cheese, celery, wheat germ, nuts, cheese, honey and tahini.

There is also a higher percentage of whole grain breads available than there is with non-Basics meals. Fresh fruits and juices are also available.

More attention to diet is necessary when red meat, high in protein, is absent.

"As a result of complimenting proteins and combining foods instead of just eating and not worrying about what goes into my mouth, I am a lot more aware of what I eat," said one Basics frequenter.

She continued, "I never liked the idea of eating meat; the whole philosophy behind it. I've read a lot about the unwise use of grains and our agricultural land. The U.S. feeds 79 per cent of all its grain to animals. That grain could be used to feed people in other parts of the world."

Cappadona explained that the Basics staff carefully monitors the nutrition available from different foods in preparing a meal for the Basics menu.

"We enjoy the program very much," Cappadona said, continuing, "We try to update it all the time in response to students desires. They suggest new dishes and we test them out in the kitchen to see if they can be made on a large scale. Many of our dishes have even made it onto the regular menu at the other dining commons. The program grew from demand."

Another byproduct that may result from eating at basics is a lowering of the pesticide concentration in the diners' bodies.

A recently released study made by the Environmental Protection Agency indicates a substantially lower amount of pesticide residue in the bodies of non-meat eaters. This results because meat and poultry in this country is fed on grains hevily sprayed with pesticides.

The pesticide is then absorbed by the animals' fat tissues and stored, and subsequently passed on to humans.

A 1969 study showed that meat, fish and poultry contain .282 parts per million (ppm) pesticide residue, while grains and cereals contain only .008 ppm and leafy vegetables contain .036 ppm.

Utilities info outdated charges Mass PIRG

Area utilities are distributing misleading information about the cost of solar heating, charges Peter C. Bogle, attorney for the Massachusetts Public Interest Group (Mass PIRG).

PIRG is charging Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMECO) and Northeast Utilities (NU) with distributing "outdated and overly pessimistic" information in a flier comparing electric and solar heating costs.

Solar heating economics have changed considerably since the middle of 1975, when information for the flier was gathered, according to PIRG.

The information, which is now contained in a pamphlet still distributed by the two utilities, states, "it would probably cost a homeowner about twice as much per month to own a solar heating system today as he would save on his electric bill."

Bogle says state and Federal studies indicate "solar heating is already cheaper than electric heat for a well-insulated home," and is calling for NU to revise the pamphlet.

"Northeast Utilities should recall the old pamphlet and issue a bill stuffer with more up-to-date information on the cost comparison between solar and electric heat," suggests Bogle.

PIRG charges that NU's information did not take into account future electricity cost increases and erroneously assumed that solar equipment property tax would be 18 per cent of a hypothetical overall solar heating system cost.

Almost 20 per cent of the NU predicted annual cost is erased, PIRG says, since Massachusetts has removed property taxes from solar energy equipment.

Times art critic charms local crowd

By BILL PARENT
Collegian Staff

Clive Barnes, London born dance and drama critic for the New York Times, overcame his lisp and conservative stage presence, and delivered a charming virtuoso performance speaking at Mount Holyoke College last night.

Barnes abandoned the usual speech format and answered questions from the capacity crowd in Gamble Auditorium with an interesting mixture of anecdotes and analysis on the state of the performing arts.

"The future of the arts," according to Barnes, "is a question of subsidy, a question of money."

Referring to the New York City Ballet Company, which performed last night for the first time following a lengthy musicians strike, Barnes said. "The same radical chic who complained at cocktail parties over the selfishness of the musicians would not themselves work for the small amount of money which professional musicians receive."

"It's the same as education, we wouldn't say Charlie can't have an education, but by having to raise ticket prices, we can say Charlie can't see Hamlet," he continued.

When asked about the influence of the women's movement on theater, Barnes said. "There is more sympathy to the concept of men, but ironically most of those plays are written by men. However, part of the difficulty is that the women's movement must still answer to the expectations of a previous generation."

Barnes was then asked about the difficulties he faced as a critic regarding the responsibility of opinion forming and said that compassion is very important for a critic and "... only the pretentious playwrites deserve the pretentious reviews."

The most difficult moments for Barnes come when he is confronted with, "a playwrite who is more insightful than I am." Barnes cited "Waiting for Godot" by Sammuel Beckett as an example.

"Sometimes you don't know what it is you've just seen. It's not difficit to miss a masterpiece," he said.

A more recent play, "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide-When the rainbow is Enuf" by the black poet Ny Ntozake Shange, caused Barnes a different problem.

"The play moved me so much, I was terribly scared that I wouldn't do it justice in the review," he confessed.

Barnes said, "A critic is a parasite who only bounces his interpretations off to the people."

Barnes also said that such factors as intestinal disorders on a given night, can, and possibly have, influenced a few of his reviews.

"At least once a season I get one play widely wrong," he said.

When asked about the role of amateur theater in the community, Barnes compared the actors to, "amateur airplane pilots and amateur surgeons."

Barnes said, "They are good for people partaking and their blood relatives but not a very good spectator sport."

Barnes also frequently referred to the influence of television on the performing arts.

"Television has influenced the popularity of dance," Barnes said, "though not in the way we watch dance on TV. Television has given us perhaps the first visually oriented generation with a keener appreciation."

However, Barnes said that television is a poor medium for observing drama. "Watching television is like going to see King Kong for the acting."

Barnes ended his 90 minute session with a serious note on the state of the arts in America by telling the story of an ancient Greek culture that "died because it had no poets."

"Intent on being Rome, we forget some of the advantages of being Athens," Barnes warned.

An in depth story on Clive Barnes at Mount Holyoke will appear in this Friday's Below the Salt.

ADVOCACY SER-VICES REPORTS

Senate book is informative

BBy JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff.

The fruit of Undergraduate Student Senate labors over intersession is a blue binder containing 116 pages (if you count the Economic Development Office's feasibility study for consulting services) of reports, minutes, charts and other goodies every senator should have to actively represent his or her constituency.

The only report missing from the book yesterday was the co-presidents' report, but this is forthcoming.

Year-long senate employes and a staff of intersession employes put the book together using a menagerie of typing machines, writing utensils and other communications tools. As a result, the book is a sometimes shocking collection of type-faces, handwritings and sketches but is, in a word, informative, though many topics are covered only in a cursory manner.

The book's largest sections are the Pending Senate Legislation and Senate Minutes sections. This indicates that while the senate may have done a lot of work last semester, it has a lot more to do this semester.

The Coordinating Committee minutes from intersession are also contained within. Coordinating Committee is the highest committee in the senate, and acts as the full senate when the larger body is not in session.

Also included in the book are a Treasurer's Report, a listing of senators' Parliamentary Responsibilities, Senate Committee Reports, and a report on Committee Appointments and Vacancies.

The Affirmative Action Officer's Reports, a Student Governance Update, various Miscellaneous Reports, an Office of Communications report, an Attorney General's Report, and reports on Advocacy Services are also included.

Under pending legislation, the senate is scheduled to deal with subjects such as the nature of Recognized Student Organizations Group and the maintenance of a group's status, a reorganization of the senate body, and a drive to inform students about getting involved with town government.

In keeping with senate tradition, debate on the senate floor will be a familiar sight this semester and the "blue book" reminds senators of the common courtesy they should observe when addressing their esteemed colleagues. The senate no longer uses the ancient "Robert's Rules of Order" as the source of parliamentary authority, dropping it in favor of "Sturgis' Standard Code of Parliamentary Procedure."

The Governance Update section contains a number of memos sent from senate Speaker Brian DeLima to various administrators and their responses concerning the state of student governance on the campus.

Observations made in this section on the Wellman Document, a Board of Trustees policy concerning student governance, characterize the process established as "burdensome and unnecessarily restrictive ... (and) of questionable legitimacy."

Next in the book is a report on the status of WATS line usage by the senate. Since the University has denied the senate the privilege of hooking into the University trunk line, WATS lines can now only be obtained by having the senate purchase the service.

Senate Treasurer Thomas J. Kerrins states in the book, "It is clear that the University could save us an eight thousand dollar bill, and the fact that they refuse says something about the 'spirit of cooperation' that they mouth so fluently when it is to their advantage."

Masses of UMasses?

By DOROTHY A. CLARK
Collegian Staff

During intersession, the Student Government Association (SGA) Office of Economic Development explored the possibility of establishing a student services consulting service to aid other colleges and universities in establishing, organizing, and operating student services similar to those at UMass.

"We were trying to determine the marketing feasibility for other schools around the country," said H. John Fisher, Economic Development Coordinator. "Most schools do not have what we have here."

Several RSO groups were selected for possible marketing because they receive successful student response, would need a minimal amount of funding, have the human resources necessary for consultation with other schools, or because they are unique to UMass.

Those groups selected were the Coalition for Environmental Quality, Counseling Assistance for Older Students, Earthfoods Natural Foods Restaurant Coop, Easy Rider Computer Ride Board Service, Legal Services Office, Motorcycle Coop, Off-Campus Housing Office, Outing Club, People's Market, and snack bars.

The Stereo Coop, Student Activities Office, Student Federal Credit Union, Student Organizing Project, Student Video Project, Student Senate Automotive Workshop, Student Senate Autopool and Field Services, Student Senate Lecture Note Service, University Day Care, and Student Center for Educational Research (SCER), were also chosen.

Larry J. Magid, staff director at SCER, said SCER is supportive of establishing a consultation service, and explained, "There is a high level of interest in colleges around the country in what UMass is doing."

A telephone survey of 40 schools in New England, the Midwest and the West was conducted and the results showed that the establishment of a student services consulting service at UMass was feasible.

The report is representative of personalized services demands in this area because of the inexpensive means of consultation. Fisher said the findings of the report show the consulting could be done.

"It could mean more money for UMass. It may tend to make what we have here stronger if other schools have it," he added.

Carter wishes to keep touch with people

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Having opened the floodgates of humility with his inaugural walk down Pennsylvania Avenue, President Carter is now awash with advice on how to keep the common touch.

Some diffident experts recommend that Carter refrain from referring to himself as "the president" and likewise avoid the imperial "we."

By definition, the use of "we" when the first person singular is indicated should be reserved for kings and other types of sovereigns, such as editorial writers.

Other authorities on non-pretension suggest that the playing of "Hail to the Chief" be restricted to state functions or other highly ceremonial occasions.

After a time, they said, all that musical genuflecting tends to go in both ears and stay there.

These points may be well taken, but they only touch one side of the problem. The presidency has so much built-in grandiosity, it probably is too strong for one person to resist.

Since Carter has said repeatedly he needs and wants the help of the American people in carrying out his duties, it behooves us to do our part in keeping him humble.

While I make no claim to expertise in this field, I do happen to be a natural born Texan, and therefore I think it can be said that I recognize modesty when I see it.

Here, then, for what they may be worth, are a few tips on how ordinary citizens can help our new president avoid aggrandizement:

—The president pays a visit to your home town. Join the welcoming crowd at the airport, preferably getting there at least 12 hours ahead of time so you will be assured of a place up front. Try to get into a position to shake his hand and as you do so congratulate him on his choice of Theodore Sorenson to be head of the CIA.

—Save up $1,000 for a ticket to a fund-raising dinner at which Carter speaks. This will entitle you to attend the VIP reception. When it comes your time to go through the receiving line, address the chief executive as President Mondale.

—Same situation as above. Only this time as you go through the line, tell him what a cute little girl you think his daughter Ami Bird is.

—Send a letter to the president to his home town address in Des Plaines, Ill.

—Write other letters giving his home town as Plainview, Iowa, Plain Dealing, La., Plainwell, Mich., Plain, Miss., Plainsboro, N.J., Plain City, Ohio and Plano, Tex.

Bell close to approval after Senate debate

WASHINGTON [AP] — The U.S. Senate moved yesterday toward expected approval of Griffin B. Bell's nomination to be attorney general after debate over his civil rights record and his long-time friendship with President Jimmy Carter.

Some sharp words were exchanged by Sens. Edward W. Brooke, R-Mass., and Birch Bayh, D-Ind., two liberals usually allied on civil rights issues but this time on opposite sides.

Brooke was among Republican senators who suggested that if Bell were the nominee of a GOP president, he would be rejected by the heavily Democratic senate.

Bayh denied Democrats were "rubber-stamping" the Atlanta lawyer because he was the nominee of a Democratic President, and at one point accused Brooke of demagoging. Brooke protested and asked for an apology. Bayh said he had made the remark inadvertently "in the heat of passion".

Bell, 58, served on the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals for nearly 15 years by appointment of President John F. Kennedy and has been described by Carter as the best qualified person he could find to head the Justice Department.

But at hearings held by the Senate Judiicary Committee, his nomination drew strong opposition from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Congressional Black Caucus, Americans for Democratic Action and other civil rights and liberal organizations.

Brooke, the senate's only black, called the six days of hearings held by the Judiciary panel "pro forma and perfunctory" and said additional witnesses should have been summoned in an effort to get all the facts about Bell's record.

Bayh, who took the lead in the senate debate in urging Bell's confirmation, said Brooke's indictment of the committee was unfair. He said its questioning of Bell, lasting some 13 hours, had been probing and detailed.

The committee voted 10 to 3 to recommend senate confirmation, with all the dissenting votes cast by Republicans.

Sen. Charles Mathias, R-Md., one of the committee members who voted against the nomination, told the senate that Bell's confirmation "would raise grave doubts about whether the people could look to the Justice Department in the future as a citadel of equality and justice."

During the debate, Sen. John Danforth, R-Mo., disclosed he had received a letter from FBI Director Clarence M. Kelley saying he intends to retire next Jan. 1.

Danforth said he had concluded this was a voluntary decision by Kelley and was "not in response to pressure" from Bell or anyone else.

Carter's package to perk economy

WASHINGTON [AP] — President Carter told Democratic congressional leaders yesterday that his is "the best way" to perk up the economy, and asked them to act swiftly on his package of tax rebates and limited public works spending.

He sought early action, too, on his request for authority to reorganize federal agencies subject to congressional veto.

And he asked for emergency legislation to cope with what he called "a very serious problem with natural gas."

Rep. John Brademus of Indiana, the House whip, gave that outline of Carter's first White House meeting with the leaders of Congress, and said he had promised "to meet Congress more than half way" in the quest for action on his programs.

At the same time, Carter heard complaints from two of them that they should have been consulted sooner on the natural gas measure.

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia said he and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill asked the President to include them in preliminary discussions on future issues.

Byrd said that as far as he knew, Sen. Adlai E. Stevenson of Illinois, chairman of a commerce subcommittee, was the only member of Congress consulted while the bill was being developed.

Brademus said Carter asked for congressional action to permit emergency sales of natural gas and to provide for some mingling of interstate and intrastate natural gas sales. The latter category is not subject to price controls.

While Brademus did not spell out details, the administration has been discussing a temporary waiver of controls that would permit gas suppliers to buy what they need at prices set by the marketplace during the current emergency.

Brademus said the President also asked for swift action on his economic package of up to $31 billion in tax cuts and jobs programs over the next two years.

He said Carter also told the leaders:

—He expects to submit a comprehensive energy program to Congress by April 20.

—The administration will have a comprehensive welfare reform plan by May 1.

Carter also took the occasion to defend his economic package, criticized by organized labor as inadequate to pep up the economy.

The President said his package is adequate. "The tax rebate the first year is the best way because it's the fastest way to stimulate consumer purchasing power, and then we can act on public works," Brademus quoted him as saying.

Meanwhile, White House sources said that despite his desire to ban nuclear weapons from the earth, Carter will not unilaterally halt U.S.

Court order on integration barred in Indianapolis

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Supreme Court, again indicating that it wanted federal judges to apply more stringent tests before ordering widespread school desegregation, barred yesterday the court-ordered plan to integrate schools in Indianapolis.

The justices voted 6-3 to strike down a federal judge's desegregation order, upheld by the 7th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, that would have required the busing of about 10,000 black students.

The case was sent back to the appeals court with instructions to re-examine the facts in light of two recent Supreme Court rulings which, in effect, make it more difficult to prove racial discrimination.

In those earlier cases, the court moved to establish an "intent" test for racial discrimination. Under that test, the court has said it's not enough to show that blacks are adversely affected more than whites. Rather, the court said it is necessary to show that the parties being charged with discrimination actually intended to do so.

In another desegregation case, the court refused Tuesday to review a plan already in effect for Louisville and surrounding Jefferson County, Ky. Some 25,000 students are being bused under that plan, which took effect in 1975.

In the Indianapolis case, the Justice Department sued the city's school board in 1968 for alleged segregationist policies. But the government never recommended a remedy that included the 10 predominantly white school districts in outlying Marion County.

Cancer-causing material possibly used in school

HARTFORD [AP] — Worried school officials in many Connecticut communities have asked the state Education Department whether cancer-causing asbestos was used in constructing their schools.

Asbestos may have been used in as many as half the 1,128 public schools in the state, Robert Langer, code inspector for the state Board of Education's building unit, estimated yesterday.

Langer said he has received about 50 calls from school officials who want to know whether asbestos was used in constructing their schools.

Asbestos is known to cause a chronic lung disorder called asbestosis and is a carcinogen, linked to lung cancer.

It is considered most hazardous when dried asbestos particles are inhaled into the lungs.

Langer said asbestos was commonly used for soundproofing, fireproofing and insulation between about 1952 and 1972 in schools and in other kinds of construction.

Gov. Ella Grasso Tuesday named a task force under Department of Environmental Protection Commissioner Stanley Pac, and Health Commissioner Douglas Lloyd. They will study asbestos as a health hazard and recommend laws and regulations to protect workers, students and homeowners.

And Langer said Tuesday he expects to meet Friday with representatives of the DEP and the Health Department to draw up guidelines for persons who want to know whether asbestos was used in building schools, offices or homes.

Convicted felon may be seated in Rhode Island House

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — The Rhode Island House starts debate Thursday on whether to seat a man with a felony record but may ask the state Supreme Court for advice in the unprecedented case.

The dilemma involving Rep.-elect William H. Bailey, a Democrat elected in the heavily black 19th District in Providence, stems from an 18-year criminal record which includes five apparent convictions.

Felons cannot vote or hold public office under the state constitution.

One House member supporting Bailey's fight for office introduced a bill yesterday to restore Bailey's right to vote and hold public office. Rep. Albert J. Lepore, D-Providence, said he will push for passage should Bailey be disqualified.

It would give Bailey the right to run as a candidate again in a special election, Lepore said.

"The people, aware of his record, could decide whether to defeat him."

When debate over his seating occurs Thursday, House procedural rules will be suspended "so everyone can be heard relevant to the seating of Mr. Bailey," Majority Leader Michael Higgins said Tuesday.

The House has three options as it considers a Jan. 17 Credentials Committee report recommending Bailey be disqualified because of two separate felony convictions for larceny in Medford, Mass., in 1961 and 1963.

It can vote to seat Bailey, disqualify him or seek an advisory opinion on various aspects of the case from the state Supreme Court. There is some question which of two constitutional amendments prohibiting certain people from voting and holding public office applies to the case.

Lepore said he will push for an advisory opinion. "There are serious questions as to whether or not he is eligible to be seated.

"The Supreme Court should answer these questions. I have sensed substantial support for an advisory opinion," said Lepore. He has supported Bailey throughout the controversy.

"I became friendly with him after the primary. I have heard he's a reputable man. I've heard he helps children and families. I've heard nothing but good comments from his constituents," Lepore said. "We should at least let them decide if he has rehabilitated himself since his last offense four years ago."

Bailey, 40, also faces a 2-4 year jail term in Michigan for a conviction for stealing record albums from a Port Huron department store in 1973.

When pleading innocent last Friday to a fugitive from justice warrant, Bailey said he will go to Michigan when extradition papers are signed by the governors of both states. He said he wants to use the interim time to fight for his House seat.

In Tuesday's House discussion, Rep. A.G. Garabedian, R-Cranston, said Bailey should be given a chance to address the House.

"We do the judging, the accusing, and are actually the jury all in one," Garabedian said. "It is only common decency to extend to the individual involved the opportunity to make a statement."

Higgins said the House will consider such a resolution on Thursday and Bailey can speak if it passed by majority vote.

Is it sick to love a pen?

Is it crazy to love marker pens that give you the smoothest, thinnest line in town…and feel so right in your hand? Is it mad to worship pens with clever little metal "collars" to keep their plastic points from getting squishy?

Not if the pen is a Pilot marker pen.

Our Razor Point, at only 69¢, gives the kind of extra-fine delicate line you'll flip over. And for those times you want a little less line, have a fling with our fine point 59¢ Fineliner. It has the will and fortitude to actually write through carbons.

So, don't settle for a casual relationship. Get yourself a lasting one, or two, to have and to hold…at your college book store.

Device can identify oil-spilling tanker

BRUNSWICK, Maine [AP] — Researchers at Bowdoin College are working with a "one of a kind" instrument they claim can provide nearly positive identification of oil spills.

By analysing an oil sample, the device — known as a gas chromatograph — can assist investigators in determining the identity of the tanker involved in a spill.

"We are on the very frontier of gas chromatography," said Dr. Dana W. Mayo, a professor of chemistry. "We have the only instrument system of this type in the world, and it allows us a more powerful attack on mystery spill identification."

Mayo and his colleagues have been conducting basic research on oil spills for seven years. Their expertise has been put to use in spills in Portland Harbor and Casco Bay.

"For legal purposes we would like a confidence level above 90 per cent," Mayo said. "With our current system we have the capability to make a larger number of analyses within that confidence level."

Bowdoin said its gas chromatograph incorporates the only known prototype of a "splitless sample injector" developed by Perkin-Elmer of Norwalk, Conn., in collaboration with Scientific Glass Engineering, an Australian firm specializing in glass-lined metal tubing.

The glass lining, only one one-hundredth of an inch in diameter, assures no decomposition of the oil sample while the analysis is conducted.

The process begins when a tiny sample of oil is dissolved in a solvent and injected into the gas chromatograph with a syringe. The sample is heated and vaporized, and a detector indicates the type of hydrocarbon ions present.

"We analyze samples which are virtually too small to see," said Mayo. "We can detect oil at the part per million level now, and I hope we can soon confidently go the part per billion level."

In a recent test, the college received samples from 27 different tankers entering Portland harbor, all carrying oil from the same port. A duplicate — but unidentified — sample was collected from one of the tankers, and was artifically weathered and sent along with the marked samples. Researchers were able to match the unidentified sample with the tanker which carried it.

Possible heir to Hughes' fortune

By MYRAM BORDERS

LAS VEGAS, Nev. [UPI] — District Judge Keith Hayes suddenly lashed out yesterday at witness Melvin Dummar, calling him a "liar" and threatening to "have a piece of your hide" if he fails to tell the truth about his involvement with the so-called "Mormon will."

"Brother Dummar," said the judge, who is a Mormon, in a traditional religious greeting to a fellow Mormon, "I want the truth. Where did it (the will) come from?"

"A man brought it to the station," Dummar, a Utah gas station operator, responded.

"Do you know who wrote it?" the judge asked.

"I do not," the witness replied.

"Did you participate in its preparation in any way?"

"I did not."

The judge's sudden admonition followed Dummar's testimony that he first saw an envelope containing the "Mormon will" — which bequeathed one-sixteenth of Howard Hughes' $2.5 billion fortune to him — on a counter of his station on the morning of April 27, 1976.

Dummar said a neatly dressed man apparently left it there.

Hayes called to Dummar on the witness stand, "Turn your chair around and face me:

"You have been examined by Harold Rhoden whom I consider to be a competent attorney. The majority of your testimony is that you're a liar. You have now launched into your third story.

"We are here seeking the truth. Mr. Dummar, I think you are lying now. If I were to ask for a raise of hands in this room, you would be astonished at how many people here think you are lying."

The judge allowed Rhoden to proceed with his examination of Dummar, but only after further chiding:

"There are a few things that are valuable. Personal freedom is valuable. Good health. Love and respect of your family and your own self-respect. I don't believe you. There is a saying that, 'Doth it profit a man if he gains the whole world and loses his soul?'

"I'm not concerned about your soul. I'm concerned about your hide. You better be concerned about your hide. I will make it my duty to have a piece of your hide."

The judge then instructed the attorney general's office to "prosecute if he is proven to be lying."

"I will make it my specific project to recommend you do prison time," the judge told Dummar. "If you are convicted of perjury or any other crime in this courtroom, you will go to the Nevada state prison. It's not a country club."

Terrorist bomber of Suffolk Courthouse identified

PORTLAND, Maine [AP] — A government witness identified fugitive Raymond L. Levasseur as the terrorist responsible for the bombing of Boston's Suffolk County Courthouse, according to a transcript read yesterday at the trial of suspected bomber Richard J. Pacariello.

Levasseur, a bank robbery suspect and former proprietor of a radical bookstore in Portland, was linked by Joseph A. Aceto to the 1976 bombing that left 22 persons injured, according to the transcript of an interview between Aceto and an FBI agent.

The transcript was read in U.S. District Court by Lewis Gurwitz, the attorney for Picariello, who is being tried on charges of transporting explosives used in the Massachusetts bombings of a National Guard truck, a jetliner and a Newburyport courthouse. Nobody was injured in the July 1-2 bombings.

Gurwitz quoted from a transcript of an interview on July 4 following Aceto's arrest. Aceto is the star prosecution witness at the Picariello trial.

"Earlier, Joe, you had maintained that Picariello had indicated to you that Levasseur had done the Suffolk County Courthouse. Just now you said that Levasseur placed the bomb. Did you pick up additional information along the line?" the agent was quoted as saying.

Gurwitz did not read Aceto's reply.

Credit for the Suffolk County Courthouse bombing last April 22 was claimed by the Samuel Melville - Jonathan Jackson Unit for Prison Reform.

No warrants have been issued as a result of the incident. However, U.S. Atty. Peter Mills has said he plans to seek indictments in connection with additional bombings following Picariello's trial and that of his alleged accomplice Edward P. Gullion, who is to be tried next month.

Gurwitz, who has sought to prove that Aceto was a paid FBI informant who "set up" Picariello, quoted from the transcript in an effort to show that Aceto had talked previously to the FBI.

Aceto has insisted he did not confess prior to the time he gave his sworn statement on July 4. However, under cross examination, he said he couldn't recall what the FBI agent had been referring to.

Gurwitz said no statement concerning the Suffolk County Courthouse appeared in the transcript prior to the exchange he quoted.

Aceto has said he first met Picariello at the Maine State Prison where they were members of the prison reform group SCAR Statewide Correctional Alliance for Reform, along with Carlson, Levasseur and Thomas Manning.

Manning and his wife Carol were indicted here last September with Levasseur for the Dec. 12, 1975, robbery of an Augusta branch of the bank of Maine. The Mannings and Levasseur are still at large.

Pressures caused by new snowfall

New England got a new snowfall yesterday, closing some schools, placing new pressures on snow removal budgets and bringing warnings of floods in Maine from ice-clogged rivers.

Southern New England was spared the full brunt of the latest storm, but northern New England — except for Vermont — was expected to get six to 10 inches of snow, the greater amounts in interior and mountain sections.

Warm air flowing northward ahead of the disturbance quickly changed the snow to rain over immediate coastal sections of the region.

Driving conditions in the storm's path were described as "a little tricky."

Snowfall in southern New England ranged from an inch or two in the Boston area to up to three inches in Connecticut and four inches at Springfield, Mass.

School children in numerous communities from Connecticut to New Hampshire got another day off from classes. Boston public schools cancelled both day and night sessions.

Nicholas Caraganis, director of the Maine Bureau of Civil Emergency Preparedness, issued instructions to state staff and county directors for implementing flood disaster plans because of the heavy accumulation of snow and ice jam potential.

Downtown Bangor was hit by a flash flood last year when ice jams clogged Kenduskeag Stream.

An ice flood problem in the Saco River is being studied to determine how damage to boats moored at Camp Ellis Harbor can be reduced.

The Portland public works superintendent said the ability to cope with the latest storm depended upon whether it continued to snow or turned to rain. With streets and sidewalks still piled high with snow from previous storms, he said if it turned to rain there may be problems.

As of midnight Jan. 24, the Portland area had 54.2 inches of snow since November, slightly above average.

Dover, N.H. city manager Jared Clark expressed concern over the new storm, suggesting a major snowstorm would have a "devastating" effect on the city budget and would probably result in at least a 0 cents per $1000 property tax hike.

"The budget for snow and ice has been more than 50 per cent expended. If we continue to receive typical New England weather in February and March we will be over extended."

Clark said it costs the city about $1,000 per inch of snow.

The storm forced a one day postponement by officials recounting voting machine tallies in Exeter and Portsmouth, N.H., on two constitutional questions.

The weather was blamed for a power outage early Tuesday in several communities in Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

An ice jam in the port of Hampton Roads in Norfolk, Virginia has slowed shipping of coal to a trickle. (UPI)

Farmers get welcome boost from harsh weather conditions

LOS ANGELES [AP] — The freezing weather that caused millions of dollars in damage to Florida's citrus crop has given a welcome boost to farmers in California, Texas and even Israel.

But industry spokesmen say retail prices for the western fruit, at least, are not likely to rise too much even though oranges and grapefruits are in shorter supply.

Before this month's deep freeze, Florida's citrus crop was running 15 per cent ahead of last year's size. California officials say their crop is 6 per cent greater than that of the year before and Texas also has registered a gain.

The bumper crops meant the prospect of low prices and low profits for farmers as stocks piled up. But along came the freeze, wiping out an estimated 35 to 40 per cent of Florida's citrus crop and causing some $150 million in damage.

Since Florida produces 70 per cent of the nation's grapefruit and 45 per cent of its oranges, western growers started raising wholesale prices in reaction to the shorter supply situation.

Agricultural officials in the West note, however, that growers stepped up shipments as they raised prices and say the price increases will have only a small effect in stores.

Wholesale prices of Texas fruit have risen 25 per cent since the freeze, said a spokesman for that state's citrus industry, which produces 12 per cent of the nation's grapefruit and 3 per cent of the country's oranges.

And Sunkist Growers in California has twice levied 25-cent-per-carton increases on 40-pound boxes of oranges, raising the average wholesale price from $4.99-$5.90 to $5.49-$6.40.

California officials say that before the freeze, growers were sending 1.2 million 40-pound cartons out of the state each week. Last week, growers shipped 1.7 million cartons, and new shipments have been set at 1.5 million a week.

"The prices will go up but the housewife won't feel the jump that much," said Dr. Calvin Lyons, citrus specialist at the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

"An increase in the price of a bushel or box of oranges will cause a real small increase in the price per pound at the grocery store," he said.

In Los Angeles, Sunkist spokeswoman Pat Harden said wholesale prices will probably rise again, to meet the demand for citrus fruit, "but we do not foresee a significant increase in the cost of oranges to consumers."

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. — Mayor John A. Markey of New Bedford, Mass., hands his clothing to city labor negotiator Arthur Caron as he strips to dramatize his opposition to the state's binding arbitration law and a recent award to firefighters that will cost the city $800,000. Pointing out that New Bedford has had severe financial problems, Mayor Markey urged taxpayers to protest the award. (UPI)

Mainers troubled with jobless rate

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — During December, 38,500 Mainers were without work, as the state's unemployment rate rose for the third straight month to hit 8.8 per cent, the state manpower affairs commissioner said yesterday.

The December jobless rate compared with an 8 per cent rate in November, when there were 34,900 jobless Mainers, according to Commissioner Emilien A. Levesque.

Figures for December 1975 showed an unemployment rate of 8.9 per cent, or approximately 38,100 unemployed Maine residents.

Levesque said that while the comparison of December figures for 1975 and 1976 is not encouraging, 10,800 new jobs were created during this period.

But at the same time, the labor force has grown by 11,200 which has dampened the effect of the increasing number of jobs, he said.

Although many manufacturing industries recorded small to moderate job gains, the improvements were not substantial enough to offset the seasonal declines of employment in food and related industries, Levesque said.

The largest employment increases occurred in wholesale and retail trade and local government, while contract construction experienced a seasonal over-the-month decline of 2,000 jobs.

New Bedford mayor strips clothing before cameras

NEW BEDFORD, Mass. [AP] — To dramatize that labor arbitration is stripping his city budget to the bare essentials, Mayor John A. Markey shed all but his underwear yesterday before television cameras.

"It's tragic to have to do things like this to get my message across," Markey said. "Now I have to go home and face my wife."

At a morning news conference in his drafty City Hall office, the major doffed his jacket, tie, shirt and trousers and handed them to the city's chief labor negotiator.

One mayoral administrative aide, a woman, stayed in the room while Markey, dressed only in yellow shorts and white T-shirt, talked about budget problems.

The exhibition came after a binding arbitration decision was handed down this week giving New Bedford firefighters a 18 per cent raise over two years.

Markey, 42, said the new contract, retroactive to July 1, 1975, will cost the city $800,000 in wages and benefits. The pact expires in five months.

Like most New England cities, this historic fishing center, of about 100,000 has been financially strapped in recent years.

"Binding arbitration is stripping us of everything," Markey, in office for six years, said after his display. "Unless the state legislature does something soon, there's no way we can survive."

The mayor said New Bedford taxpayers — who make an average $9,000 annually — will be paying $13,000 for each firefighter under the contract award, which was the union's last "best offer."

He said the city's property tax rate will rise 3.44 cents because of the arbitration agreement.

Although he called the news conference 24 hours ahead of time, Markey said he did not decide to take off his clothes until the last minute.

"I felt someone had to dramatize our plight," the mayor said. "But to be honest, I did it on a bet."

Dukakis budget goes to legislature

BOSTON [AP] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis will send to the legislature his record $4.1 billion budget for the next fiscal year at noon tomorrow. Some 70 per cent is in fixed costs.

Welfare and Medicaid expenses, as they have in the past decade, eclipse all other state demands. This item alone is expected to represent about $1.25 billion — roughly 30.5 per cent of the total.

Local aid in various forms takes another huge chunk of the state dollar — about $1 billion, or 28 per cent. Another area of fixed costs involve mandatory pensions and some related employe benefits, such as health insurance premiums. These represent about 15 per cent of the total budget, slightly more than $600 million.

"The budget will not require new taxes to balance and will include a modest surplus for the second straight year," the governor's office announced in advance.

New taxes have been the bane of the Dukakis administration to date. He was elected on a no-new-taxes pledge in 1974 and the following year increased taxes by a half-billion dollars, the largest one-year boost in the commonwealth's long history.

The governor plans to operate the state government with about 30 per cent of the entire budget, a shade less than the welfare-Medicaid allowance.

Nuclear conference spawns cooperation

BONN, West Germany [AP] — Vice President Walter F. Mondale said his four-hour meeting Tuesday with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt had enhanced chances for a "cooperative solution" to U.S.-German differences over the spread of nuclear technology.

But at a news conference after the meeting, the two men sidestepped direct comment on a controversial German plan to sell nuclear technology to Brazil, calling the deal a "sensitive question".

The meeting also dealt with economic topics, and Mondale said Schmidt had agreed on the need for international economic stimulation.

Asked whether Bonn would proceed with the Brazilian nuclear deal, Schmidt said: "Just as the Federal Republic of Germany has so far fulfilled the agreements it entered into along with their contractual obligations, it will do so in the future."

But, he said, "This does not exclude additional contractual obligations being entered into in this field in the future."

He did not elaborate. But German reports said the Bonn government, under pressure from Washington, is considering ways to drop sensitive aspects of the deal while retaining lucrative reactor contracts.

Besides reactors, the $4 billion deal involves dangerous uranium enrichment and fuel processing facilities.

Hollywood and the firing squad

By JON HITE

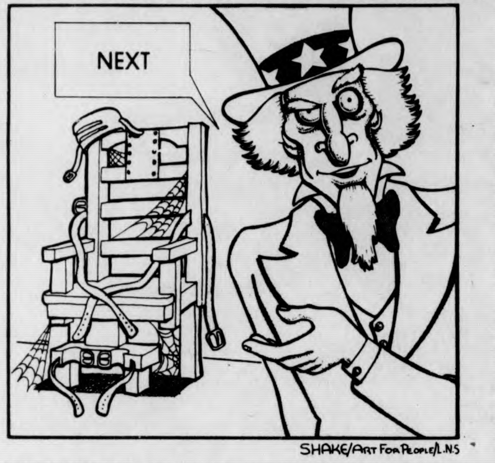
"Point of the Mountain" sounds like it could be a resort town. In fact, the influx of reporters to the small hamlet which survives because of the Utah State Prison there, was the largest gathering in the town's history. TV camera crews, news reporters, gawkers, telephone linemen, sickies; they all converged on Point of the Mountain to witness or at least try to witness the execution of Gary Mark Gilmore. And the State of Utah didn't let them down.

At 10:07 A.M. EST, with the full sanction of the State of Utah, the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals, the United States Supreme Court and the NFL Players Association, after having been led to the execution site on the prison grounds and strapped by the neck, arms, waist and legs to a wooden chair, 5 unidentified but eager volunteer head hunters standing behind a mesh curtain took aim and at the instructions of Warden Sam W. Smith fired their high powered rifles at the little red heart on Gary Gilmore's new white jump suit and eliminated the mother from the gene pool. And you were there, or could have been.

Of the forty-four persons who have been executed since Utah became a state, 38 of them have chosen death by firing squad over the next most popular brand, hanging. It must be better, although I wish the media had thought to ask Gilmore how it felt. After all, they did everything else within their power to witness the damn thing; highly sensitive boom mikes, zoom lens cameras, specials and interviews. If they could have, they would have had instant replay and it would have been announced by Curt Gowdy and Dandy Don.



SHAKE/Art For People/L.N.S

There are a lot of people who say that capital punishment is wrong. Very few of them live in Utah. Those that do, say that killing people who kill people to show people that killing is wrong is absurd. I tend to agree but I'm not really, positively, 100 per cent convinced. And in death there is no middle ground. My gut tells me that the sucker should fry but my head tells me that in 1977, with space ships and low calorie cat food as accepted parts of our society, that there has got to be a better way to punish our Gary Gilmores.

I can't bring myself to saying that under no circumstances, no matter what the crime, capital punishment is wrong. But it does seem pretty screwed up that a government of the people can kill one of its own. So, I'll lean with the anti's.

While I'm not sure about capital punishment, the one thing that I am sure about is that the media acted like a little kid in Disneyland in their coverage of Gilmore's execution. The networks were all there with their Instant Eye Electronic News Gathering equipment and were broadcasting to any corner of the earth that was willing to listen. Geraldo Rivera, who knows better, was there babbling on about the possibility of a riot taking place outside the prison's walls. In the interest of safety, his own, Rivera was inside the prison sealed away in a converted cell-anchor booth with a hot line to the death room.

Jimmy Breslin was the only member of the Fourth estate who kept his sense of perspective about the event. While all the others were using the death of Gilmore as either a 'justice is being preserved' or a 'love me, love me, I'm a liberal' soapbox with which to editorialize about the event, Breslin frankly stated that he wanted to be in the death room so he could "stick my fingers in the holes" and get a raise for doing so.

Then there was Larry Schiller. Schiller owns the rights to Gary Gilmore's life, all of it. He paid an enormous sum of money to write a book and the eventual screenplay about the life and death of Gary Gilmore. "I Left My Heart (or at least my Aorta) in Salt Lake City" will propel Gary Gilmore right up there with King Kong and Charlie Manson. I only hope that the widows of Gary Gilmore's deeds get a piece of the action. They deserve it. Schiller also owns what's left of the body after "Medical Science" gets through with it and I expect that he will shave the body and sell Gary Gilmore pubic hairs encased in "Lexan" for $8.95. The way this thing has been played up he will sell out in one afternoon.

The perfect example of what the press and their neo Madame LaFarge attitude did in their reporting of this tragedy lies in their treatment of Larry Schiller. On every occasion they could find and on every station Schiller was getting his ya-ya's kicked in. Yet the people with the steel-toed boots were the ones flocking around Schiller trying to pry any tidbit of information out of him in an effort to meet deadlines or get on TV with one more gory detail.

Gary Gilmore wanted to die. The State of Utah wanted him to die. Gilmore tried to kill himself twice and if the State of Utah had any decency they would have let him O.D. But that wouldn't have pleased Hollywood. And after 'The Texas Chain Saw Murders', 'Smash Up on Highway 5' and 'The Texas Tower Killer', Hollywood may be what it is all about.

Four-and-a-half week drag

By ELIZABETH S. KENT

The suggestion which I am about to present may sound like treason to many people, yet it should be considered. Why do we have a 4½ week vacation in the middle of winter? That period of time is much too short to do anything except waste money.

Look folks, I like having vacations as much as anyone, but intersession may not be to everyone's advantage. Have you tried getting a job for the three weeks following the holidays? I found out that it's not at all easy. Unless you had a job over the past summer which needs help over January, it's virtually useless to try to find a job which is interesting, which you might be glad that you gave three to four weeks to.

I understand that the reason for the long mid-winter vacation is to cut down on fuel bills and to give us hard-working students a rest from our studies. As I type this now, before I have even started back to school for Spring semester, I am thinking to myself that if school doesn't start soon, I am either going to be committed to an insane asylum or I shall be convicted of manslaughter, premeditated at that.

I am sure that anyone who also has a younger brother and sister as well as older ones will understand my problem. For those of you who don't, what I am saying is that it is awfully awfully hard to go back to Mommy and Daddy and brother(s) and sister(s) when they don't realize that you have changed and become more independent since the summer. I am sure that nearly everyone has gone through the same situation and come out with conclusions similar to mine.

I find that I have been side-tracked a bit so back to the original suggestion: How about beginning Spring semester three or four days after the New Year and getting out three or four weeks earlier at the end of the semester? If the schedule were changed in this fashion, many of us might find it easier to get jobs in the summer as we would be able to work that much longer. If this suggestion were tested, the University might find that the difference in fuel bills is not as great as expected and also that students might be more willing to make up the difference due to the advantages of a longer summer vacation.

Oh, by the way, does anyone want to share an apartment over next intersession?

Co-ed basketball scoring inequitable

To the Editor:

A question must be raised over the point scoring system in use with the intra-mural co-ed basketball program. We feel that the present system allowing four points per basket for women and only two points for men to be ridiculous. All other rules appear fair simply due to the size difference between many men and women, a telling difference under the boards. However, we propose elimination of the present point system and incorporation of equal points for equal baskets. We are forced to withdraw our team's entry in the league and we encourage others to follow suit until a more equitable point system is implemented.

...help...

Welcome back!

Realizing that this may be the only part of the semester during which students have much free time on their hands, I am once again asking for your assistance in making the Collegian's editorial pages a success. I still need writers, as well as political cartoonists and graphics people.

None of the above tasks requires experience or special training. All of them can be very rewarding and offer great potential for creativity and originality. Sound too good to be true? Maybe so, but give me the benefit of the doubt and come down to the office and talk. Or better, submit an article or drawing.

To repeat my words of last semester, I am looking for people with ideas who desire to present them to the UMass community. Your participation is more than welcome — it is necessary. Please contact me at the Collegian office downstairs in the Campus Center, or by phone at 545-3500. Thank you much.

the other room

White china with tiny painted green leaves and mauve flowers gathered together along the edges lie on the red and green covered table. All Christmas colors, of course, to go with the turkey and marzipan pie and ham and family. A tiny ornamented tree lies on the buffet in my grandmother's dining room with a circle of presents around it and more scattered on the floor to be opened after dinner.

It's a tradition in the family — my mother's side, that is — to get together and exchange gifts on Christmas Eve. The liquor flows to whomever drinks, us children excluded, of course, and the stereo blares Frank Sinatra, Morgana King, the Three Sounds, a few Christmas tunes for us all to dance to — and we do the whole nite long. Us children raucus, playing with new toys while the parents admire each other for how much we've grown and how clean our faces are. The traditions all last a long time (I used to get scared that we might still be there when Santa came and scare him off) except whoever the churchgoers are in our supposedly Catholic family who go off to midnight mass.

Well, the tradition has been broken a bit this year with my grandfather having passed away not loo long ago and my grandmother dreadfully ill. No stereos blare tonight. And there aren't any children left either. Somehow, without anyone really noticing, we've stopped getting toys, we've stopped playing, we've stopped believing in Santa Claus. We've grown-up (well, at least physically). We now, all pretty much college age, have come to adulthood — although backing away, scared, apprehensive — and covering it all with disgust for the changing role of living day to day for each day and not constantly as a preparation for the future. What is is us, the almost grown adults in the living room, and the 'matured' parents in the dining room, the 'other room'.

"Look at this," says my cousin Gary fresh out of the navy now sleeping late each morning barely making it to his classes at the nearby college. "the generations are separated."

"Yes, there they are the older generation and talking about the same old crap like how immoral the world is getting and how Jimmy Carter will save us all and how they can't even afford coffee anymore and all the rest of the garbage that reminds you how middle class life is a rut full of dullness, mediocrity, schedules, dull, dull," said my cousin Kathy who drives a cab nites in Boston, going to college in the day. "And here we are the younger generation talking about them."

"Yep, talking about the 'other room'," that's me, sitting in the corner collecting notes on the occasion for some future novel.

"It's like in five years we'll be in there, talking the same way ... oh God, I can't picture it," said my brother's fiancee who's a teacher and graduated from college last May. One of the lucky ones, you might say.

"Yep, and those of the 'other room' are trying to drag us in," I said.

Sitting next to his fiancee, "Good analogy, fine analogy this concept of the 'other room'," said my brother who tries very hard not to remind people he was a philosophy major in college and is now a law student in Greenwich Village.

"Never catch me there," said my cousin Gary. "Never catch me married."

"I can't imagine myself married," I said. Since I'd been home everyone I was bumping into from high school was flashing nicely cut diamonds under my nose saying my desire for a career was silly. I thought they were all crazy and while saying congratulations could picture myself saying, "Sorry about your divorce," next year.

"I can't imagine myself married either," said my brother's fiancee.

"But you're marrying me in August!"

"I can get along fine without growing up and busting my ass for a paycheck every week and a promotion," said Gary. "Do you know how much milk costs? And taxes!"

"But the 'other room' is coming to get us all," I said playfully.

"I'll never be caught by it," said my cousin Kathy quite content to drive cabs in dangerous places and be a student for the rest of her life.

"You won't be caught by what?" my mother asked her suddenly turning around in the midst of a vigorous discussion in the 'other room' on what the best methods are for cleaning kitchens.

"Huh ... oh, the other room ... the dining room ... I can't escape from helping you clean it up tonight," my cousin answered.

"Oh," said my mother satisfied turning back to the conversation which had now switched to the fact that one needed a graduate degree instead of just an undergraduate degree to get a job these days. My mother dove right in bringing up me and my brother as 'perfect' examples as to how true that was. (Why were the members of the 'other room' reminding me of such dismal facts of life?)

But what was the use of fighting it all — this grown up world? I knew we were all doomed. I remembered the end of Huckleberry Finn where Huck goes back with his aunt to be 'civilized' — not liking it very much — but, you know he'll end up being civilized — of Harry Angstrom, John Updike's character in Rabbit, Run who can't take the adult world and so tries to escape — running — but, having no place to run to that is 'unadult', 'uncivilized' — it just doesn't exist —

"Well," I said, "maybe it won't be all that bad after all."

"Of course it won't," said my mother winking, having been listening all the time. "How boring if there weren't actual bathrooms to clean and bridges to build but only part of a dream?"

Land of Enchantment

William A. Mills, a UMass junior, is interning at the Taos Pueblo Day School in Taos, New Mexico. He will be contributing columns to the Collegian regularly. The columns are an account of his experiences in New Mexico.

TAOS, NEW MEXICO — New Mexico. The Land of Enchantment.

But it's not the 48th state's gorgeous monadnock mountains that make it enchanting. It's not the state's old yet clean adobe cities that make it enchanting. And it's not the attractively low insurance rates or plentiful Coors beer that make the state enchanting either.

It is the people here that make it enchanting. The people are as enchanting as the white-capped mountain tops, as enchanting as the babbling brooks and streams that represent unending sources of life for most Native Americans.

In Taos, a hamlet of about 2,000 residents, the people are in harmony with nature. They reach out like branches in a tree, they flow like rivers in the mountain. They blend in with nature as a Chameleon blends with its habitat.

Native Americans, Spanish surnamed, and Anglo alike (excepting selfish tourists) are one in nature, one in love for each other.

To a newcomer (I don't consider myself a tourist), these people are most appreciated. The people here can not do enough to help me. It is unthinkable, as it should be, to walk or drive by someone in need.

On my way to Angel Fire, a large and popular ski resort about 30 miles east of Taos, I must have stopped four times to help a "brother or sister" in need of a push on icy roads. Shamefully, I feel I would not have stopped had it not been for natives travelling with me. They bade me to stop. After successfully helping the persons in need, however, I felt a great sense of satisfaction.

What makes New Mexico so different from Massachusetts or any other Eastern state, for the matter, is that the people here, for the most part, are NOT status minded. The most respected person in town is not the wealthy land owner or successful politician. It is usually the poor school custodian who has lived in love for her fellow human beings, who has sacrificed all for others, who has secured a bounty of trust and respect, whose integrity surpasses all excepting her Creator.

Here, hierarchies are not vertical — structures which can easily presume one's superiority over another. Hierarchies here are horizontal — built on wisdom and honesty, not wealth and charm.

The people's innocent thoughts and simple yet inspiring ambitions are reflected in the local parish priest's face — a face that is round, kindly, and always smiling; a face that could invite the devil to church; a face constantly emanating warmth and love.

Why can't all peoples be like the ones I've met in Taos? Why can't Massachusetts be filled with the same people? Why can't Native Americans, Hispanic, black and white dance, converse and love each other in all parts of the world as they do here in Taos?

Probably because most forget, most ignore the beautiful and simple things around them. One who truly lives with the stars, the sun, the moon and the trees is one who respects the worlds and its beings. As one Indian child wrote:

"My father the sky.
My mother the earth.
My brother the moon.
My sister the stars.
"The Universe is my Family and with Them I live in love."

People here have not forgotten and do not ignore these things that spell harmony and peace.

Once the world's people remember these things, once people appreciate these things, then all are reminded of their Creator, whoever he or she may be.

And that is the one and most important bond that can draw all peoples together, that can hold all peoples together. Because that Creator means love in all religions and beliefs. And what better antidote can cure today's illnesses, can heal the nation's wounds, can solve the world's problems?

Let us live in harmony with nature; for nature's Creator is the root of us all. It is love.

Change the channel, please

It was not so long ago that an FCC chairman concluded that American network television was a "vast wasteland", prompting officials to produce a few worthwhile shows while maintaining the status quo of proven sellers. The air waves today are filled with not - so - true - to - life police stories and situation comedies — perhaps not the best food for thought, but a tried and tested advertising vehicle.

Reports trickling out from some of the higher echelons of the advertising world indicate that a fourth television network may be in the offing. Advertisers are forced to pay higher and higher rates — whether ratings sag or not — and they are looking for another way to save the proverbial buck. Advertisers believe that their collaboration with the networks has gotten a little out of hand.

The three major television networks — excluding public TV for the moment — have long had things their way. The power of the medium itself has sent prices and revenues through the ceiling.

That a fourth TV network might be formed is not so surprising. There currently is an FTC investigation underway to determine what kinds of pressures are brought to bear on local stations by the all powerful networks.

There is no guarantee that a fourth TV network would provide the kinds of programs that educators and the like have long been calling for. If one accepts the premise that it is the advertisers that are looking into this possibility, one assumes that they would use it towards their own ends.

Certainly there are numerous local stations now unaffiliated that would welcome network feeds. They cannot afford to generate their own programming, and when they do get the time for local broadcasts, "Candlepins for Cash" and reruns of "I Love Lucy" usually are the order of the day. Not exactly the most compelling viewing in the world.

Viewers, though, seldom complain about that: the purpose of TV for the most part is to entertain the argument goes, not inform, though the latter purpose has long been neglected.

At the center of the problem is money. That is, if lower advertising rates can be offered by a fourth network, then that would be a springboard to success.

At any rate, it is doubtful that a new network could be formed in time to compete for the big contracts, like the Super Bowl and the Olympic Games. The three networks might welcome a fourth when it comes times to get down to the nitty gritty of negotiations for the Olympic Games.

The Russian Government has started the bidding for broadcasting rights to the 1980 games at $50 million, a characteristically capitalistic gesture when one considers that it cost ABC-TV $16 million for the rights to broadcast the 1976 summer games from Montreal. It seems as if the Communists, in upping the ante, could easily be mistaken for the capitalists that they periodically assail.

If a fourth network does take shape, it is hoped that they will provide the kinds of programs that the others have neglected. A ful fledged slate cannot be created in a short period of time — but reruns of Gilligan's Island will solve neither the problems of advertisers nor viewers.

WHAT'S HAPPENING

Student teachers needed for HS

The Alternative Learning Program is an alternative high school on campus that needs UMass students to teach courses during the spring term. The school involves 14 students from ages 14 to 18, who come from high schools throughout Hampshire County. These students come to 151 Hills South, Monday through Friday and take classes taught by three full-time staff members and a number of UMass students. In this way, they fulfill the requirements of their high school while taking small (4 to 5 students, average) classes in subjects that they are genuinely interested in. UMass students who teach in the program may earn credit(s) for their efforts.

For the spring term, people are needed who could teach classes in the following areas: Poetry, Journalism, Creative Writing, Writing Skills, modern novel, reading skills; history of the old west, history of crafts, American wars, the thirties and fourties; computer science, animal breeding, biology, anatomy and physiology, physics, silvercraft, leathercraft, silk screening, photography, Drawing and Painting, Applied Electronics, Typing, Bicycling, Tennis, self-defense, jogging, Algebra, Geometry, Business Math, Applied math skills, electric guitar, music and any other classes you think you could interest students in.

The program operates from 8:30 a.m. until 2:30 p.m. and classes will be organized during the week of Jan. 31 - Feb. 4. Many UMass students who taught in the program during the fall term found that it was their most positive educational experience. Come by 151 Hills South if you are interested.

Foreign affairs show presented on WFCR

Area citizens won't feel left out during discussions of foreign affairs this winter if they tune in to a special "All Things Considered" series on WFCR (88.5, 90.5 FM.) "Great Decisions '77," a weekly report on America's role in critical international issues, will invite listeners to express their views to the new administration and Congress.

The foreign policy series will be featured on "All Things Considered" every Wednesday throughout February and March. WFCR airs the 90-minute news magazine daily at 5 p.m.

Each week, the series will explore one of eight foreign affairs topics, ranging from the spread of deadly weapons to relations between the U.S. and Panama. At the end of each report, special opinion ballots will be offered to listeners for reactions to key policy questions, the results to be forwarded to members of Congress and the Executive Branch.

"We hope to cover the spectrum of viewpoints regarding American interests abroad," says Mark Stein, co-producer for the series. "The goal is to provoke the listeners' thinking so they can make intelligent choices about U.S. foreign policy questions." For 23 years "Great Decisions" programs have been presented by the Foreign Policy Association, a nonpartisan organization which seeks to develop in the U.S. an informed public opinion about foreign affairs.

The series starts Feb. 9 with the topic "The Spread of Deadly Weapons." Following that, the topics will be: "Southern Africa" (Feb. 9), "The Middle East Cauldron" (Feb. 16), "Western Europe in Transition" (Mar. 2), "U.S. Soviet Relations" (Mar. 9), "China and the U.S." (Mar. 16), "food and Population" (Mar. 23), and "Panama and Cuba" (Mar. 30).

Leaders sought for counseling program

Applications for student group leaders in the Summer Counseling Program are due by 5 p.m., Monday, Feb. 7 in the Community Development Center, 123 Berkshire House.

The orientation period for new freshmen and transfer students will run from June 5 thru July 25, 1977.

Training sessions for the 30 selected counselors will be held during the latter part of the spring semester and the week of May 31 through June 3. All positions require residence in an assigned residence hall and meals in the dining hall for the nine-week period. Summer counseling positions require full-time participation. Summer school courses cannot be taken. Interested and qualified students may obtain an application from the Community Development Center, 123 Berkshire House.

Economics journal plans spring issues

The student-written, edited and organized Economics Journal (ECLIPSE) is planning its spring issues. We're hoping to print articles on major issues like women, Third World, cooperatives, alternatives, theory and critiques. Students with old papers, new ideas or general interest in economics politics, journalism, etc. are encouraged to attend the next meeting: Thursday, Jan. 27, 7:15, room 100 Thompson Hall.

Campaigning course offered by Project 10

This semester Project Ten, the University's experimental college, is offering an unusual practicum in campaigning for public office at the local level. Each participant will be required "to work actively on a candidate's campaign for municipal office of his or her choice in Amherst's annual town election of April, 1977."

Town-wide offices to be contested include moderator, selectmen (three seats), school committee (two seats), and housing authority (one seat). In addition, 240 town meeting member seats will be vacated because of required redistricting of the town into eight new precincts.

Interested students may obtain further information by contacting the Project Ten Academic Office at 545-0871 or by attending the first practicum meeting Thursday at 7 p.m. in Classroom I or Pierpont Hall.

Long before anyone had heard of Consumer Agencies, etc., your Stop & Shop stores were listening and were concerned about you, the consumer. It was 10 years ago that we began talking to groups of our neighbors that represented various backgrounds, in order that we may find out what they wanted ... to let them sound-off on what was on their minds.

Today, our management people and store managers (as well as our Bradless and Medi Mart people) meet with more than 1000 shoppers, with some 55 groups we call The Stop & Shop Companies' Consumer Boards.

We continue to listen, to care, and do whatever we can to always be better stores to shop in. If you are interested in participating in your area please contact your Store Manager.

Exhibition opens at Worcester museum

The first of 15 exhibitions planned for a special college gallery over the next three years opens Jan. 25 at the Worcester Art Museum. Entitled, "Death and the Afterlife," the exhibition was organized by Ellen Kosmer, associate professor of art at Worcester State College.

The Dance of Death, Love and Death, the Last Judgement, and Resurrection provide subject matter for many of the 30 prints and drawings on view. The purpose of these works of art was not to instill fear of death, but rather to encourage a virtuosity in life.

Nuke takes dive

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — The Central Maine Power Co. (CMP) scrapped its plans Tuesday for a $1 billion nuclear power plant at Sears Island in a picturesque harbor of Penobscot Bay off Searsport.

E.W. Thurlow, president of Maine's largest electric company, said CMP would build a coal-fired power plant at Sears Island instead.

Thurlow said that plans for another nuclear plant would be deferred to the 1990s as a result of the decision, and that CMP was exploring an alternate site at Richmond, a community about 20 miles south of Augusta.

CMP is the major stockholder in Maine's lone operating atomic power plant, the Maine Yankee plant at Wiscasset.

Thurlow said in a prepared statement that his firm abandoned plans for a 1,150 megawatt nuclear plant at Sears Island solely because of a conflict with the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) on geological faults at the site.

NRC rules prohibit construction of an atomic plant on a site above a fault which has had an active earth movement in the last 35,000 years.

Studies at Sears Island revealed a 12,000-year-old fault, which was believed caused by receding glaciers.

Thurlow said CMP petitioned the NRC to change its rules to allow construction above a glacial-caused fault and to recognize that such earth movement was not likely to recur.

He said conferences with the NRC staff made it clear "that the commission probably will not act favorably to clarify its site criteria regarding geological faults."

A spokeswoman for the federal agency said that the NRC "never though it (the glacial fault) would be much of a problem at the site. But we can't say so with certainty without further information, which they (CMP) never sent in."

The NRC spokeswoman said CMB had asked for a "flat-cut generic change in rules applying anywhere," which would have required major study efforts.

"We are very disappointed," said Thurlow. "We regret very much having to defer our plans for another nuclear plant in Maine to the early 1990s."

See how cold it is. We know it's cold. You know it's cold. But the wire services keep sending us pictures to show us how cold it is. So we keep running them in the paper. See how cold it is ... (UPI)

Global Survival curriculum offers alternative education

If you are looking for a different kind of academic experience at the University this spring, the Global Survival Studies Program is something to consider. The program features small classes, close contact with faculty and a broad examination of some crucial issues of the present and future.

The program is interdisciplinary and focuses on five major areas of concern: war, peace and alternative systems of world order; population growth and control, environmental deterioration and economic development; availability and distribution of world resources and cross-cultural communication and conflict resolution. Although these are separate topics in themselves, the courses and seminars are structured to help students make connections between the various parts of the program.

An important part of the program is the integration of concepts and information that takes place over the course of the year. Students study such areas as the history of technology, views of nature, population policy, an introduction to the future, nuclear energy, values and the individual and culture change. There are a combination of seminars, lectures and modules taught by faculty drawn from throughout the University.

One question which many students who are interested in the program ask is whether being in the program will help them toward a major. Steve Guild, director of the Program, feels the Global Survival Studies is broad enough to relate to almost any field or major offered here at the University. In fact, he said, "many students have found that they have a much better idea of what they want to do or what areas they want to study after being in Global Survival. Many of the areas we cover are related to jobs that will be important in the future. Students who are in the program have more contact with these than in regular University courses."

The Program also offers the opportunity for some practical experience working with organizations or groups involved in related issues. Those who are interested in learning more about the program should contact the Global Survival office in Cance House, Southwest, 545-3100.

Eastwick bitter with Cincy

CINCINNATI (UPI) — Cincinnati Reds' ace relief pitcher Rawly Eastwick was quoted yesterday as calling the ballclub's trading of fellow reliever Will McEnaney an act of "stupidity."

Meanwhile, Reds' manager Sparky Anderson says he's going to ban clubhouse talk about money, contracts and playing out options on the first day of spring training.

Eastwick, traveling with the Reds' "media caravan" drumming up publicity in surrounding cities this week, complained about last month's trade that sent southpaw reliever McEnaney and first baseman Tony Perez to Montreal in exchange for pitchers Woodie Fryman and Dale Murray.

"I was surprised at the stupidity of getting rid of Will," said Eastwick. "It galls me. Young pitchers are at a premium and he is only 25. I know he had a bad year (in 1976), but he's a tough pitcher. Name me a better left-handed relief pitcher. There just aren't any around."

Eastwick, who hasn't yet signed his 1977 contract, also figured the Reds got Murray in case Eastwick plays out his option.

"I believe they got him only to back me up," he said.

Eastwick, who complained he was "underpaid" at $29,000 last season, said he is seeking a "four or five year" contract from the Reds.

Talk like that will be banned from the Reds' clubhouse this season, says Anderson.

"That's one of the first things I plan to make clear when I meet with players the first day of spring training," the 42-year-old manager said. "If a player isn't happy with the contract he signed, or the one that has been offered to him, the other players on the club shouldn't have to hear about it.

"If I saw some of the contracts, I might get sick."

Nelson draws rave reviews as Milwaukee's new coach

MILWAUKEE [UPI] — No one has ever accused Don Nelson of being a playboy. In his 14 years as a player in the NBA he scored nearly 11,000 points and pulled down nearly 5,200 rebounds while helping the Boston Celtics to five championships.

But since taking over as coach of the Milwaukee Bucks last November he has not only helped the Bucks start winning more but also to start enjoying basketball more. And that, perhaps, has been the key to his success.

"Often the attitude (of players) means more in a game than the talent or technique players bring to it," says Wayne Embry, a former Celtic teammate of Nelson's who is the Bucks' general manager.

"Before Nelson took over the players were uptight and it affected their ability to play the game. The resignation was a release at the time and since then things have been looser because that's the kind of guy Don is."

The "resignation" was that of Larry Costello, the man who had coached the Bucks since they came into the league in 1968.

He had taken them to an NBA title in 1971 and compiled a record of 407 wins and 249 losses in eight years but this season the team got off to a horrendous start and a big part of it was that the players weren't willing to "put out" for him. He finally resigned on his own for the better of the club" Nov. 22 and Nelson unexpectedly found himself a head coach just months after quitting as an active player.

It hasn't been an easy road for Nelson but under him the Bucks have improved and posted an 11-20 record. That doesn't sound very good until it is matched up with the team's overall mark of 14-35 which is the worst in the NBA.

"I was a little skeptical about whether I could handle the job," Nelson himself admits. "But after a few games there was no problem. I think I've adapted very well and the players have, too. I've really enjoyed it."

Costello resigned on a Monday night and the very next night Nelson coached his first game. It was against the Los Angeles Lakers and to no one's surprise Milwaukee lost.

Afterwards, Nelson greeted reporters with a small smile of resignation at the loss and honestly admitted he had been nervous all day. He has been the same way since — never so uptight about losing that he got way down in the dumps but never complacent about losing, either.

His post-game talks have contrasted with the brooding melancholy of Costello after a loss and he has used the same lighter, but still firm, touch with his players. One of the Bucks' veterans who didn't like Costello's style of play and his never-relax attitude was Bob Dandridge and since Nelson took over he has said it "is more fun now to play and in practice, too."

It has also been more fun for the fans as Nelson has produced a more exciting brand of basketball besides managing a few more wins. But that doesn't mean Nelson himself has been having fun all the time or is satisfied with the team.

"It's harder than being a player," Nelson says of coaching. "I feel that I get even more satisfaction out of winning as a coach. And it's even tougher than ever losing as a coach.

"We still have to win more games — a lot more games. It's (the team's development) not where I want it yet but we've come a long way. And I can't see us getting anything but better."

Costello's resignation capped a disturbing emotional period for the team and its fans that started last spring when the story first broke about management's disatisfaction with Costello.

His resignation cleared the air somewhat emotionally but at the time a lot of people wondered if the change would really accomplish anything. Nelson came to the job with only a few months of experience as an assistant to Costello and many doubted if he could do any better thnan Costello, an established winner.

One person who wasn't worried was Embry, though he was sad to see Costello leave.

Sports in Brief

PHILADELPHIA [UPI] — Four gold medal winners and the rest of their U.S. Olympic boxing teammates will be honored as amateur Athletes of the Year at the 73rd Annual Dinner of the Philadelphia Sportswriters Association next Monday night.

The selection of the U.S. boxing team is a departure from the tradition of naming one individual as the outstanding Athlete of the Year.

The four gold medalists who will be present are Howard Davis, the 132-pound champion, and his brother, Leon, 178-pound titlist. Not present will be Leon Randolph, the flyweight champion, who is still in high school in Spokane, Wash.

Also present will be the team coach, Sarge Johnson.

NEW YORK [UPI] — Six baseball luminaries, headed by American League Rookie of the Year mark "The Bird" Fidrych and two-time National League Most Valuable Player Joe Morgan, will be honored guests of the New York Baseball Writers at the group's 54th Annual Dinner and Show Sunday night.

Also selected for awards were Morgan's Cincinnati Reds' teammate Johnny Bench, New York Yankee star Roy White, Los Angeles Dodgers' outfielder Rick Monday and longtime Dodger manager Walter Alston.

Fidrych, baseball's biggest individual drawing card last season when he compiled a 19-9 record and league-leading 2.34 ERA with the Detroit Tigers, will receive the Sid Mercer Award as the Player of the Year. Morgan will get his MVP Award from National League President Chub Feeney.

Bench will be honored with the Babe Ruth Award as the Outstanding Player of the 1976 World Series. White is to be presented with the Ben Epstein "Good Guy" Award.

ANAHEIM, Calif. [UPI] — Major league strikeout king Nolan Ryan, the only pitcher in baseball history with four 300 or more strike out seasons, yesterday was signed to a three-year contract by the California Angels.

Pistons fine Porter after fight with coach

DETROIT [UPI] Guard Kevin Porter has been fined again by Piston coach Herb Brown after the two got in an argument which apparently led to a shoving match which required the peacemaking skills of center Bob Lanier.

"I don't want to talk about it," said Porter in a telephone conversation yesterday with the Detroit Free Press. "I simply don't want to talk about the Pistons. If you want to talk about the Pistons, call Herb Brown, he's the coach."

Porter did admit, however, that besides the $100 fine levied on him by Brown after he questioned why he had been taken out of Detroit's loss to Washington Sunday night, others were fined.

"There were more people fined last night than just me," he said. "But you'd have to talk to them."

The Washington Post reported that the 6-foot-10 Lanier stepped between Porter and Brown after Porter demanded to know why Brown pulled him from the game.

WMUC, a Maryland radio station, said that one of its reporters, Vincent Bruce, said he saw Chris Ford come out of the locker room yelling at Brown and then Porter came out yelling.

Bruce said a few minutes later, he saw Porter jump on Brown's back, piggy-back style, "and grab him around the neck. Then they closed the door and I heard Porter yell: 'Let me go, Bob, (Lanier) Let me go."

Brown fined Porter, who is 5-foot-11, $1,000 Christmas night for refusing to sit next to Brown after being taken out of a game, but that fine was reduced to $500.

Lanier, who is having his best season in keeping the Pistons in second place behind Denver in the Midwest Division of the National Basketball Association, said he didn't feel like discussing the incident.

"I don't really know what happened," the newspaper said Lanier said. "The two of them (Brown and Porter) were having a discussion and it got into a bigger discussion.

"They're the only two that would know about it. It's been a rough trip."

"I don't have any comment at all," Brown said. "I'm not trying to be cross but this is the position I've taken before."

The Pistons return home Wednesday night to play the New York Nets.

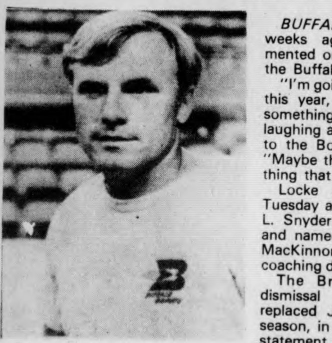
Locke bounced by Braves; GM becomes interim coach



Tates Locke

BUFFALO, N.Y. [UPI] — A few weeks ago Tates Locke commented on his future as coach of the Buffalo Braves.

"I'm going to coach many games this year, unless somebody does something about that," Locke said laughing after his club lost a game to the Boston Celtics on Jan. 8. "Maybe that could be the luckiest thing that could happen."

Locke got his "lucky" wish Tuesday as Braves' co-owner Paul L. Snyder fired the rookie coach and named general manager Bob MacKinnon to take over the coaching duties on an interim basis.

The Braves announced the dismissal of Locke, who had replaced Jack Ramsay after last season, in a terse, two paragraph statement and refused any further comment.

The statement read: "The Buffalo Braves announced they have released Tates Locke as their head coach. General Manager Bob MacKinnon will assume head coaching responsibilities on an interim basis and a search for a new coach will begin immediately."

A club spokesman said MacKinnon might coach the team "for the rest of the season or just a week."

Locke's dismissal had been rumored for several days and appeared imminent after Buffalo lost its 30th game of the season Monday night to the Denver Nuggets, against only 16 wins. The loss was the Braves' 10th in their last 11 games.

MacKinnon, who coached for 13½ seasons at Canisius College in Buffalo and one season at St. Louis in the now-defunct American Basketball Association, said the reasons for Locke's dismissal "probably was the won-lost record and results."

"I don't know that there is any one thing that led to the decision," MacKinnon added. "The reasons were discussed between Snyder and Tates. They're things that I don't think I should get into."

MacKinnon becomes the fifth coach in the stormy seven-year history of the 1970 Expansion Club. And will be on the bench tonight when the Braves host the Milwaukee Bucks.

Pistons pop C's, Ford leads surge

BOSTON [UPI] — Chris Ford scored six straight points late in the game and Eric Money added two free throws in the final minute last night to lift the Detroit Pistons to a 91-89 victory over the Boston Celtics in a sloppily played NBA game.

Boston was playing without center Dave Cowens, who suffered a twisted left ankle in Sunday's loss to Philadelphia.

The Celtics, trailing since early in the second quarter, overcame an eight-point, third period deficit to jump ahead, 82-79, at 2:59 of the final period on John Havlicek's three-point play.

But the Pistons scored 10 of the next 14 points, with Ford getting the final six, to surge back in front, 89-86.

Ford, a fourth-year player from Villanova, sank his last basket with three minutes to play, and Boston could answer only with a basket and a free throw by Havlicek, who led the Celtics with 30 points.

The decisive points came one and a half minutes to play, when money was fouled in the backcourt by Jo Jo White and hit the final two of three free throws.

Bob Lanier led Detroit with 22 points, while Howard Porter added 11. White had 17 and Sidney Wicks added 14 for the Celtics, who fell two games under .500 with the loss.

Alex the 'person' speaks his mind

By RON ARENA
Collegian Staff

We've always heard so much about Alex Eldridge the basketball player. From the time he arrived here at UMass some two and a half years ago billed as a legitimate college superstar, it's been hoop talk. Whether it be a cat-like steal leading to an easy layup, or a driving, double-pump scoop shot, he has always found ways to send a crowd into verbal motion.

The setting yesterday maintained the level of intensity associated with Eldridge, but from a completely different perspective. Eldridge, Minutemen coach Jack Leaman and his two assistants, Fan Gaudette and Ray Ricketts, along with a trio of reporters sat in an isolated room in the Cage at a mini press conference arranged by Leaman. The topic? Alex Eldridge — the PERSON.

After days of discourse and indecision concerning the future of the ex-high school All-American, Eldridge and Leaman had come to a mutual decision. Eldridge convinced his coach he really did want to play basketball, and Leaman convinced his player just how he would play. And so he will still be a member of the UMass basketball team.

To set the record straight, Leaman had Eldridge tell his own story. He spoke some interesting thoughts:

—On why he didn't play in the Niagara game — "Me and Derick and Mike came to practice late the day before. We were told to run laps, and I was running pretty hard and he (Leaman) didn't call me over, so I stopped running. The coach later told me I wasn't gonna start. He explained why, and I had no regrets.

"Then during the game, he came over to me and asked if I was ready to play. At that time, maybe I shoulda said ya, maybe I shoulda said no.

"But now I know where he's coming from. You shouldn't have to ask for a substitute to go in. What kind of team is that? If I'm sitting on the bench and wearing a uniform, of course I'm ready to play. He didn't recognize this, so I didn't say a word. Then he said, 'Just sit there then'."

—On first coming to UMass — "I had problems my first year, but I just wanted to go out and play to the best of my ability. Some things I did bothered people and I didn't know why.

"Like I used to wear my shirt untucked. When I play, I sweat a lot, and I used it to wipe my face. It was no big deal to me. I guess something little to me was something big to other people, and I couldn't understand that."

—On his treatment at UMass — "I've been treated fair. The coach has given me chances to play. Maybe he's even given me a lot of breaks. Maybe he did it for me, or maybe for my parents."

—On his personality — Yes, I guess I'm moody at times. But the thing is, after anything happened with me, everybody went to the coach and had him speak for me. I felt that I should be able to speak for myself. That kind of bothered me."

—On coming to UMass — "Am I happy I came? Well, yes and no. When I was suspended I thought a lot about guys like Butch Lee (Marquette) and Bernard King (Tennessee). They're really doing things for themselves. I played in high school with those guys, and I see how they're doing, and it bothers me cause they're no better than I am."

"But maybe I wouldn't have had the chance at other schools as I did here. Maybe I wouldn't have met a lot of the people I've met here — I've met a lot of nice people.

"So all I can say is yes, and no."

—On rejoining the team — "I hope it helps the team. It hurt a lot not playing in the Niagara game cause I know we would've won if I played. But I have to change a little, and maybe my teammates have to change a little in accepting me. Everybody's gotta make sacrifices."

Merwomen dunked

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

After the midseason break, a hopeful UMass women's swimming team hosted and lost to Yale University, 86-46, at the NOPE pool yesterday afternoon.

The victory boosted Yale over the .500 mark at a 3-2, and sent UMass back to .500 at 3-3. Several UMies performed exceedingly well as several swimmers qualified for the Easterns at the University of Delaware in March.

Head coach Eve Atkinson felt that the "kids really had good times," with many of them achieving their personal best times.

The only double winner for the Merwomen was Deb Schwartz with a 2:21.4 time in the 200 yard Individual Medley, and a fine 2:17.6 in the 200 yard butterfly.

Single Event winner off the 1 meter required diving board was Susie Strobel with 138.65 total points.

In terms of first place finishes, Yale had an impressive 80 to 20 per cent edge. UMass enjoyed a 62 to 38 per cent advantage in second place finishes and garnered 54 per cent of the third place finishes.

With the Easterns creeping up in March, several swimmers qualified under the Eastern Times standards. Deb Schwartz qualified for her time in the 200 yard Individual Medley. She also set a new team record in the 200 yard butterfly with a 2:17.6 time, and a record in the 500 yard freestyle with a 5:35.2 time.

The 400 yard freestyle team of Mary Totin, Mary Ellen Butler, Deb Schwartz, and Theresa Totin also qualified for the Easterns with a strong performance.

The Yale squad was led to victory by the outstanding performances of Carolyn Hyde. Hyde took home four wins in the individual competitions and one in a relay event.

★ Hoopmen seek winning ways

"After talking to all the coaches," Eldridge continued, "I now know that I have to be a full-time leader on this team. Before, I wasn't aware that I was looked to as the leader of the team because I thought somebody else could do it."

Eldridge confidently pointed out that the team will get back on the winning track, beginning against Vermont.

"Now we have worked things out," Eldridge said, "and I'm going to work hard and do my best to lead the team. I'm sick of losing and it's time for us to concentrate on our next game."

Vermont should be a good starting point for the Minutemen to begin a winning streak. The Catamounts are presently in the middle of a disastrous season with a 4-11 record despite all the pre-season hopes of continuing as one of the stronger New England teams.

The Catamounts are led by senior guard Warren Prehmus, who is tops on the team in scoring, averaging 16.3 points per game. Prehmus, who is Vermont's premier outside shooter, is battling back from a bout with mononucleosus which sidelined him in mid-December. However, Prehmus has been coming on strong of late, showing little ill-effects of his mono attack.

In the frontcourt, Vermont is led by 6-foot-8 forward Kevin Kelly, who is the second leading scorer on the team with an average of 11.5, while 6-foot-7 forward Ron Gottshalk is the team's leading rebounder, averaging nearly seven a game.

Even though Vermont is only 4-11 on the season you can't take the Catamounts for granted. It isn't that Vermont has been a pushover team. The Catamounts play one of the toughest schedules in New England against the likes of Notre Dame, Minnesota, Florida State and Hofstra along with the top New England powers.

UMass crowns Queens

By JUDY VAN HANDLE
Collegian Staff

"All I can use is one word — super!" — UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski.

It's time to whip out the old thesaurus.

Or, on second thought, maybe even that book full of superlatives wouldn't even suffice to explain what just did happen yesterday afternoon at Curry Hicks Cage.

For it was there, before a somewhat emotionally drained crowd of 200 that the UMass women's basketball pulled out, quite simply, the biggest win in its still-brief history.

The final score, 82-81, tells you that UMass won, but it leaves out so much of what happened on that court.

Every one who knows anything at all about women's collegiate basketball has heard of Queens. The New York school played Immaculate in Madison Square Garden a couple of years back, has taken on the other big powers like Delta State, has finished among the top two in the Easterns for what seems to be eons, and has gone to the nationals as many times as anyone.

So all that serves to emphasize just what UMass accomplished with its victory.

But just how did the Minutewomen do it?

They did it with a galloping fast break, an exhausting performance from the rebounders, some clutch shooting, outstanding team play, and, perhaps most importantly, a whole lotta all-out hustle.

"I told them at the beginning," Ozdarski said, "that to win it would take a complete team effort. I told them at the beginning of the game to work 100 per cent. It kept going up so much that at the end it was a 150 per cent effort."

And what an effort it was. UMass held a 46-38 lead at halftime, before increasing it to 15 with 15 minutes left on one of Sue Peters (23 points, 13 rebounds) flashy driving layups.

But from there, the Minutewomen frittered away the advantage to just nine until hard-working forward Maura Supinski put in an offensive rebound three minutes later.

Queens played catchup after that until it was finally able to tie the score at 77 with 2:14 left on a Donna Geils free throw. Geils led Queens in scoring with 23 points.

With 1:30 left, center Lu-Ann Fletcher, who played perhaps the most intense game of her UMass career, put the Minutewomen up by two after laying in an offensive rebound. Queens tied it four seconds later on two Althea Gwyn free throws.

After two Peters charity tosses and a Gwyn basket, the score was deadlocked for the last time, at 81, with 43 seconds left.

Now for the wild last few seconds, Fletcher missed a shot, but Queens made the last of its 20 turnovers as it threw away a pass with 19 seconds left.

UMass regained possession, and guard Sue Henry was fouled with 10 seconds left. She sank one of her two attempts. Gwyn grabbed the rebound and called time with eight seconds showing on the clock.

Queens set up one last play. It was designed to get the ball to Gwyn near the free throw line, where she would hopefully be able to use her 6'2" height to muscle in for her 21st and 22nd points.

But it was not to be. A long downcourt pass was swatted away by two UMass defenders, where the ever-present Peters slid to cover it. She was fouled, missed the front end of her one-and-one, but Fletcher grabbed the carom and wasted the last few ticks of the clock.

This win was a real treat, a real delicacy. Helping to make it that way were nine UMass players, all of whom gave their heart to the game at hand.

"A super, super effort by everyone," a beaming Ozdarski said. "Everybody contributed what they could. Everybody was hungry, it was a tribute to what these women do in playing the game of basketball."

Chief architects of the triumph were freshman guard Peters, who'll remember this one for awhile, Fletcher, forward Nancy O'Neil, and Supinski.

Peters wowed everyone with super moves to the hoop and with a brilliant display of rebounding. Her 5'7" height was enhanced by a retrorocket launch as she soared to grab the caroms.

Fletcher was given the tough task of guarding Gwyn, one of the most dominant pivots around. Although her foe scored 20 points, Fletcher pulled down 14 rebounds and contributed 14 points.

O'Neil, who played with a sprained ankle, hit for 12 points but led UMass rebounders with 15 boards. Her presence was needed, as Queens frontcourt was gigantic and dwarfed UMass'.

And Supinski. The powerful freshman scored nine points, but most were key, down-the-stretch tallies. She also plowed her way in for seven rebounds.

So what new worlds are left for the Minutewomen to conquer? Well, Worcester State will play the 5-2 UMass quintet Tuesday night in the Cage.

But the Queens win, well, that's something to savor and keep in the memory bin a long, long time.

Minutemen get 'Eph'; Redmond gets an A

WILLIAMSTOWN — A superb goaltending effort by Dana Redmond was wasted last night as Williams College posted a 4-2 hockey victory over UMass in a game played on the Williams campus.

Redmond stopped 50 of the 54 shots which were fired on goal, and continually made the big save which enabled the Minutemen to remain within striking distance of the Ephmen.

"He played a helluva game," praised UMass coach Jack Canniff. "Many of his saves fell just short of fantastic."

The game had the makings of a rout as the Ephmen came out flying in the first period and skated away with a commanding 3-0 lead. The first shift of the game had yet to leave the ice before Williams' Seth Johnson put the Ephmen on top as he fired one by an unsuspecting Redmond at 1:22.

Midway through the opening stanza Geoffrey Daley increased Williams' lead as he slid one by a busy Redmond.

Under the circumstances the Minutemen would have been happy to escape their sluggish first period performance only trailing by two goals. However, Chris Egizi posted a backbreaking tally at 19:19 and sent a dejected UMass squad to the locker room in desperate straits.

With Redmond continuing his outstanding play UMass began to exert itself in the offensive zone during the second period. After numerous opportunities center Frank Snow finally put the Minutemen on the board as he raised one by Williams' Charles Kremens.

Kremens, a product of the Arlington school system which continually produces top talent for New England colleges, stopped 30 Minutemen shots and frustrated any comeback hopes the Minutemen held.

Snow's unassisted goal proved to be the only tally of the second period and left the Minutemen two goals down entering the final 20 minutes of play.

Williams' Jim Hield put the game out of reach at 10:26 of the third period as he poked one by a beleagured Redmond. UMass' Carl Burns ended the scoring for the game as he tallied a power play conversion at 14:59.

"We gave them three goals early, said Canniff," and were forced to play catchup. We just didn't make the most of our opportunities."

The fences have been mended, the wounds have been healed and hands have been shaken between UMass basketball coach Jack Leaman and Alex Eldridge, putting to rest any speculation that the talented junior guard had been kicked off the basketball team.

Now it is time for the Minuteman hoopsters to pick up the pieces of their shaky season and get back on the winning trail when they travel to Burlington, Vt., tonight to battle the University of Vermont at Patrick Gymnasium.

The Minutemen, 7-6 on the season, will be attempting to snap a two-game midseason slump that has seen them lose badly to Villanova and be upset by Niagara University. Poor overall play and internal dissension on the team has hurt the Minutemen and made them look just like another average basketball team.

But apparently things are going to change.

Prior to yesterday's practice, Leaman held an impromptu news conference explaining what the current status was with Eldridge, who was also present at the conference along with assistant coaches Fan Gaudette and Ray Ricketts.

"We've had one or two problems between us," Leaman said, "and after meeting with Alex this afternoon, I think we have worked out whatever misunderstandings we had.

"The coaching staff is convinced that Alex Eldridge wants to play basketball for us," Leaman continued, "and we have convinced him how we want him to play."

After Leaman opened with some brief remarks explaining the situation, the focus of attention was turned over to Eldridge, the man in the center of the controversy.

"We have been judging each other wrongly," Eldridge said. "The coach hasn't been understanding me and I haven't been understanding him.

State financial woes abound

State budget makes for negotiations among agencies

BOSTON [UPI] — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis Wednesday unveiled a bare bones $4.116 billion proposed fiscal 1978 state budget which would force state agencies to absorb $60 million-$100 million in negotiated pay hikes for state employes.

The record package would boost state spending by $160 million, or 4.04 per cent or about eight-tenths of a per cent below the estimated rise in inflation.

The proposal brought immediate protests from several state administrators, particularly those in higher education, where budgets have been frozen for more than two years.

Republican legislators were immediately critical of the package and the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation said it was concerned about the administration's ability to hold spending at requested levels.

The package would provide a slight 2.6 per cent increase in local aid, but Dukakis and Administration Secretary John R. Buckley said they will be filing legislation to reduce state reimbursements to communities in at least one key school aid account.

Buckley said the proposal would trim state reimbursement for school transportation costs by about one-third. The $58.5 million request of Commissioner Gregory Anrig was chopped to $33 million or $15 million below this year.

Minority Leader Francis W. Hatch, R-Beverly, said claims of a local aid increase were "a specious smokescreen."

In announcing the package, Dukakis warned state agencies will have to continue "controlled attrition" of state employes. And, he said, service cutbacks may be needed in the state's $620 million Medicaid program.

More than half of the overall 4 per cent increase is allocated to the Medicaid program which is currently running at a $70 million deficit. Even with the increase, Buckley said the budget calls for continuation of a cap on increases in rates for nursing homes and hospitals.

With the package, Dukakis said the state would end the year with a modest surplus of $8.2 million. More than half of that surplus, however, will be eaten up by a $4.2 supplementary budget for new correctional facilities.

Noting that the state will continue to operate under "several fiscal restraints," Dukakis said he was convinced the state is beginning to bring its expenditures under control.

The governor's proposal would even chop requested spending by the legislature from $19.5 to $17.7 million.

The record package would provide a total of $1.027 billion in local aid and total aid account would jump by $46 million.

In his message to the legislature the chief executive said state agencies will be required to absorb the costs of recently negotiated pay hikes for state employes.

Buckley estimated those costs at $60 million to $70 million. In addition, the package provides no funding for new contracts which are about to be negotiated and are scheduled to go into effect July 1.

The new contracts could boost the amount to be absorbed to $100 million.

For Human Services agencies alone, salary increases totaling $34 million will have to be absorbed out of existing funding levels.

"Decriminalize armed robbery," quipped Corrections Commissioner Frank A. Hall when asked how he would absorb the raises.

"If we have to absorb all of it, it's going to create major problems," said Mental Health Commissioner Robert Okin.

Other highlights of the record package include:

—Two capital outlay or building budgets with a combined price tag of $737 million.

—A $123 million overall hike in Human Services expenditures.

—No funding for cost-of-living hikes for welfare recipients.

—A $10 million hike to $243.7 million for mental health programs.

—Partial funding of $12 million for the liability of the state employes retirement system.

—A $1.42 billion welfare budget including $620 million for Medicaid.

Employe layoff foreseen here

Between 600 and 700 employes at UMass-Amherst may be laid off if a budget proposal, filed yesterday by Gov. Michael s. Dukakis, is approved by the state legislature, according to Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery.

UMass employs about 3,300.

Dukakis, who has stressed a "level funding" program when considering budget requests, submitted his $4.116-billion budget to the state legislature.

Bromery said "level-funding", as being mentioned by the governor, would mean that UMass would get the same budget allocation for fiscal year 1978 as this year.

"If we stay exactly as we are now, with our 400 vacancies, having to meet the cost of living increases for the faculty and unavoidable step increases for other employes, it would mean a net reduction of $6-million with inflation. This could mean that we'd have to reduce our number of employees by 600 to 700," said Bromery.

Bromery said that if cuts of this size had to be made some would have to come in major programs and he'd have to consider breaking contracts with employes.

He estimated that "between 50 to 60 per cent of the professors are tenured...much less than most universities of this size."

UMass President Robert C. Wood said yesterday that the proposed budget would cripple the university and have "a devastating effect on its faculty, staff and students.

He said if the budget is not increased faculty layoffs, curtailment of teaching hospital operations and cuts in enrollment will have to be considered.

Wood and Bromery led what is expected to be a crescendo of objections to Dukakis' proposed allowances for the state's institutions of higher learning.

Larry S. Roberts, president of the Amherst chapter of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, said, "I don't see how the governor can expect us to survive on a budget of this size. Even without faculty pay raises, it would be impossible to do it."

He added that the students would be the "ultimate losers" if the budget remained the same.

Dukakis' budget is 4 per cent larger than this year's.

Jay A. Martus, co-president of the Undergraduate Student Senate, said, "This may well prove disasterous. It's aggravating an already bad situation. This may be the straw that breaks the camel's back."

A spokesperson in the offices of Massachusetts State Senate President Kevin B. Harrington said Harrington would not comment until he had time to review the entire budget.

The maintenance budget for the Amherst campus was set at $68,088,000 by Dukakis. Wood had requested an allocation of $76,376,000 for the Amherst campus.

The governor also reduced Wood's budget from the $1,068,000 allocated in this fiscal year, to $848,000 for 1978. Wood had requested $1,388,000.

AAUP vote split

By MARY BROWN

Faculty who voted for the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) in an election last December to decide a collective bargaining agent for University faculty, will probably split their votes in the upcoming run-off election between "no agent" and the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), according to members of both organizations.

Members of both the AAUP and MSP say that about half of the AAUP's votes should switch to the MSP, thus giving them the simple majority they need in the February 8 and 9 election to become the collective bargaining agent for UMass faculty.

Anthony M. Gawienowski, member of the AAUP executive board and past president of the organization, yesterday said the AAUP is not endorsing either the MSP or "no agent" in the election, although members are giving individual endorsements.

In the December election, the MSP, Amherst representative of the Massachusetts Teacher's Association, received 45 per cent of the vote while "no agent" received 30 per cent. Over 90 per cent of those eligible to vote cast ballots.

Gawienowski, a professor of Biochemistry, said in a telephone interview yesterday that he will vote for the MSP because he believes collective bargaining is preferable to the current faculty governance processes at the University.

AAUP President Joseph S. Larson, professor of Wildlife Biology, said in a letter printed in Tuesday's Collegian, that he is endorsing "no agent" in the upcoming election. Larson is currently out of town and could not be contacted by telephone yesterday.

MSP President Larry S. Roberts, a professor of Zoology, yesterday said the MSP is continuing to meet with faculty on an individual basis in an attempt to convince them to change their vote for the MSP.

Roberts said the morale of the faculty is probably worse than at the time of the December 1 and 2 election. The faculty has received no salary increases in three years, although they are scheduled to receive a small cost of living increase sometime this spring.

A third group, the Committee for Informed Faculty, has been working to oppose unionization since last October. None of the members of this committee could be reached by telephone yesterday.

Members of the Committee have stated previously that the election will be very close. Committee members oppose collective bargaining because they say it gives the faculty no greater voice in decisions which affect them, and in some cases just adds to administration red tape. In addition, the committee advocates a University governance system rather than collective bargaining.

Dicarlo promises to damage former state lieutenant gov.

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts Senate Majority Leader Joseph J.C. DiCarlo promised to do anything he could to damage a former state lieutenant governor he saw as a possible future political opponent, a U.S. District Court jury was told Wednesday.

"Anything I can do to damage former Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight I am going to do. If it damages your firm, it's too bad," a witness at the Revere Democrat's political corruption trial quoted DiCarlo as saying.

"Those are the facts of life in Boston," the witness testified DiCarlo said.

DiCarlo and Asst. Minority Leader Ronald C. MacKenzie were accused of extorting $40,000 from a New York consulting firm in 1971 and 1972 in exchange for a favorable legislative committee report.

Gerald McKee, president of the New York firm, McKee-Berger-Mansueto, testified he and former Gov. Endicott Peabody met with DiCarlo at his home in February 1971, seeking to head off an investigation into the firm's controversial contract with the state. Peabody was the firm's lawyer.

> "Anything I can do to damage former Lt. Gov. Donald R. Dwight I am going to do."
> —Dicarlo

DiCarlo rebuffed them, McKee testified.

"I don't care what the merits of the matter are. The investigation is going to go forward ... because the contract was signed by Donald R. Dwight," McKee testified the senator said.

Dwight, while state administration commissioner in 1969, awarded the contract to the firm. He was elected lieutenant governor in 1970 and defeated in 1974. Dwight currently is a newspaper publisher in Minneapolis.

DiCarlo has never run for statewide office

Sen. DiCarlo said, "I should not even be meeting with you. I have done it as a courtesy to Peabody,'" McKee testified.

DiCarlo was one of three legislators who signed a request for the investigation into the firm's multi-million dollar contract to supervise construction of the University of Massachusetts Boston campus.

McKee told the jury of seven men and five women he was greatly upset by press reports that the contract gave the firm too much of a profit and boosted the construction costs.

Although the firm received about $6 million for the project, McKee said less than half was profit. He did not give an exact figure.

DiCarlo headed the special legislative committee that eventually investigated the contract. That committee concluded there was no wrongdoing.

Asst. U.S. Atty. Edward J. Lee, chief prosecutor in the state's first major political corruption trial in more than a decade, has alleged the firm actually wrote part of the committee report.

MacKenzie was accused of using his influence in the Senate to intercede on the firm's behalf and obtain the favorable report for the $40,000 price tag.

State Sen. James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford, holder of the purse strings in the Senate as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, has been revealed by prosecutors to be the mysterious unindicted co-conspirator who made the first overture toward extortion. He has denied the accusation.

Che Lumumba
New school for truth

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

A poster on population, land ownership and average wage for blacks, whites and others in South Africa adorns the wall at the Che Lumumba School for Truth.

The poster is reflective not only of the high level of world consciousness possessed by the people involved with the school, but of the commitment they feel to liberation struggles of all people.

The school occupies four rooms in the New Africa House, but, "the University doesn't want us there," said Jamila Blanco, teacher at the school. Blanco cited a lack of University affiliation and funding as reasons for the University's attitude.

There are currently nine students at the school, ranging in age from six to eleven, in grade from one to six.

Upon completion of the program at Che Lumumba, children usually go on to public junior high school in Amherst, said Mary Lea, the main teacher this year at the Lumumba school.

An information pamphlet on the school reads: "The school was founded in 1972 as an alternative elementary school... It was created out of a growing concern felt by Third World parents at the University...that their children were and are a minority in the public schools in Amherst. Such questions ad identity and the lack of a history that portrayed the achievements of Third World people were not adequately dealt with, if at all. Further it was felt that the needs of Third World children were different from those of non-Third World children, i.e., who am I? why am I different? These were just some of the questions that had to be dealt with."

Mary Lea leads a discussion in a cultural geography class with the children of the Che Lumumba School in the New Africa House. (Staff photo by Dale Griswold)

Also, in 1972, the school applied for and received accreditation from the Amherst Public School system.

Most of the teachers at the school are volunteers, a lot of them parents. Parents in fact run the school, along with some input from the other teachers and the children, said Blanco.

Subjects taught include Spanish, Martial Arts; which they pick up at Amherst College, Cultural and Physical Geography, and Dance, as well as traditional subjects like Science, Math, Language Arts, and Music.

The main difference between Che Lumumba and public elementary schools is that the parents and teachers are extremely politically conscious. The children are actively involved in liberation struggles by attending political events, hearing multi-cultural representatives and liberation leaders speak, both at school and elsewhere.

"The skills are the same, the content is different," said Blanco. "An effort is made to point out contradictions that exists in currently published texts."

Grades are de-emphasized, as well as general pressure and feelings of competition. What is emphasized is the feeling of cooperation, said Lea.

The school welcomes students from all nationalities; Blacks, Puerto Ricans, Asians, Africans, Chicanos, and other Third World members, as well as people of European descent.

Currently the school is in need of more students, especially older students, said Lea. They also need a math teacher.

The people involved with the school see a need to move out of their present location, and into a facility where there is a playground and the children can do more physical activities.

Explore Amherst's nature

The favorite excuse for moping around on a Saturday afternoon, "there's nothing to do around here," is forevermore obsolete.

There are things to do and places to go in Amherst, and there's even a directory to tell you about them." In the Public Trust: A Guide to Amherst Conservation and Recreation Areas."

This booklet has been made available by the Hitchcock Center for the Environment, the Amherst Conservation Commission and the Amherst Recreation Commision. It provides maps, directions and descriptions of the 700 acres of conservation and recreation land in Amherst.

For instance, do you know the best places for hiking, swimming, cross-country skiing, picnicing, mushroom picking, fishing and studying? Unless you can name eight sites for cross-country skiing, nine for fishing and eight for outdoor studying, you can no longer say there's nothing to do around here. you obviously need to explore Amherst's "natural heritage."

This 52 page paperback, which came out yesterday, can be purchased for $1.50 at Eastern Mountain Sports, the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop, the Paperclip, the Hitchcock Center and in the conservation office at Town Hall.

Ticket office to open

By ROBERT DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

A Student Activities Ticket Office which will handle ticket sales for all Recognized Student Organization (RSO) will probably open next week according to Brian Harvey, acting Communications Co-ordinator of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The ticket office will be organized in accordance to a controversial bill passed by the senate last night. Michael Lorigan, who moved to accept the bill, said that many RSO groups handling their own ticket sales are vulnerable to embezzlement. In order to prevent embezzling, Thomas Kerrins, treasurer of the senate, introduced a bill calling for the incorporation of a ticket office for all RSO groups.

According to Brian Delima, speaker of the senate, the bill enables the Student Senate to tax each RSO group five per cent of the gross income of its activity if the profit yields more than five per cent of the gross income.

Many senators opposed the bill because they felt it was unfair to RSO groups. Senator Jon Hite said that he opposed the bill because it is wrong for the senate to tax the groups that it is supposed to support.

In other business the senate received a report from Kwaku Leon Saunders, a member of the Classic Black American Music Organizing Committee, on its proposed concert this spring.

The concert, entitled "Commemorating an Indigenous American Art Form: Classic Black American Music," was conceived by a coalition of black student organizations. After a presentation last semester, the senate indicated a high level of interest and the Classic Black American Music Organizing Committee began its efforts to organize the concert.

The committee has received verbal agreements for the concert from Stevie Wonder, Natalie Cole, Archie Shepp, Max Roach, and Mercer Ellington and is waiting to receive agreements from Ella Fitzgerald and Eubie Blake. However, according to Saunders, Stevie Wonder's contractual committments may not allow him to perform.

"Reggie Wiggins (Stevie Wonder's agent) informed us that Stevie wants to do the concert on May 7. We requested that the performance be a benefit and Reggie informed us that Stevie's contractual arrangements prohibited this but that he would seek to get around this. As to his success, we will be informed on Friday by telephone," Saunders said last night.

The senate also voted to support International Women's Week. It will be on the week of March 8 and will feature women speakers, musicians, and artists.

In related business, the senate voted to organize an RSO account in order to sponsor a concert featuring a performance by Betty Carter, a jazz musician, and to allow the organizers of the concert a deficit budget of $2775.

Members of Gamma Sigma Sigma, a National Service Sorority will be conducting a non-profit book exchange in the Commonwealth Lounge. They will take in books through Friday, and the books will be sold all of next week. (Staff photo by Marilyn Mankowsky)

Spring concert
Aiming for professionals

By ANN MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The student senate is currently working on selecting a band for the spring concert to be held May 7.

Brian DeLima, speaker of the senate, said that they are negotiating with major bands.

"All we can hope is that negotiations go on as planned", DeLima said. He added that the senate is only considering first rate bands to give a professional show in contract with previous concerts which featured two or three second rate bands.

"Students are involved in all phases of the spring concert. It will be educational as well as entertaining," DeLima said.

The concert is being planned and produced by a special spring concert committee. This committee is the creation of the senate and its decisions are subject to senate approval.

David Kantor, current chairperson of the concert, said that there probably will be an admission charge of under five dollars. He said this fee is minimal enough for the students and will insure the concert's breaking even.

The final program will consist of one major band and two smaller back up groups Kantor said.

"We want the three bands to be diverse and appeal to as many UMass students as possible. If the budget allows we will have an emcee such as a comedian," Kantor said.

"The spring concert last year was run by Eastern Mountain Concerts, an independent RSO group which didn't have the backing or the funding as we will have this year. The senate has sponsored concert committees in the past. Since then there haven't been any major concerts," he added.

"The groups who are considered were chosen mostly because of their prices, availability, and past working experiences with colleges," Kantor said.

"Whereas its starting so early all major problems can be hopefully looked at and tackled before they arrive. The Student Senate is looking very forward to having the largest and most successful concert in UMass history, and hope for it to be a precedent for major events in the future."

In a report compiled by the senate, it said that there is no facility on this campus other than the stadium where a major artist could perform. The stadium can hold about 20,000 people. A show at the stadium could allow every student to attend. Also several acts could be brought in. The concert is for all students, not just a few.

The report also said that beer is going to be sold because no bottles or cans are allowed inside the stadium. Proof of age will be required to purchase beer.

Tickets will go on sale the day after spring break, March 28 which is six weeks before the concert. For the first three weeks students can buy two tickets each at a reduced price. After this the tickets will be sold at a higher price and will be available to anyone.

Bus service on the day of the concert will be increased. Buses will be running every few minutes around campus to the stadium.

Sunday May 8 is the rain date. The concert will start at noon and end at 6 p.m.

Free beers lure phonothon workers

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

Free beer is one of the lures that the Alumni Office will be using to entice 500 volunteers to work on the fourth Student Phone-a-thon in March.

This is an effort by alumni staff members to raise money by pledges over the phone from UMass graduates.

Joseph Carter, a UMass senior and coordinator of this year's phone-a-thon, said, "Volunteers will have a free meal before they go on the phone and free beer throughout the evening."

Assistant coordinator Mary Ellen Blazon added that it will be a change from the dining commons meals for the students who work.

Carter emphasized that the activity needs more than 500 volunteers to operate 30 phones for the five weeks that the fund-raising effort runs.

This money is applied to university programs that are often hurt by budget cuts or freezes. Funds go towards scholarships, the marching band, the debate group and other campus organizations that add to student enrichment.

Carter said, "We will call as many as we can in five weeks on 30 phones." No one is called more than once, but nearly everyone who has graduated from UMass will be called, he added.

The Alumni Office will even arrange "easy payment plans" for those who pledge large amounts, stated Blazon. "You can pay your pledge in four installments over six months," she said.

Last year's receipts topped $50,000.

There is a briefing for everyone who volunteers to work during the phone-a-thon. "How to use the different WATS lines, what information to give, how to fill forms, and what information to ask for from the pledges is covered before anyone starts to call," said Carter.

The Student Phone-a-thon will run March 7-10, 14-17, 28-31 and April 4-7 and 11-14. People or groups who wish to volunteer for an evening should contact the Alumni Office in Memorial Hall.

Ignorance contributes to crime also

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

Saul Chafin, assistant director of the UMass Department of Public Safety, says that administrators within the department feel that public ignorance is contributing to crime almost as much as the criminal himself.

"The department", says Chafin, "feels that by leaving valuable property, such as a C.B. radio or tape deck in a conspicuous location in a vehicle, only invites crime."

"It isn't limited to vehicles, as rooms and offices should be protected as well. Do not leave accessible objects in plain view, take the time to protect your property," added Chafin.

Chafin cited four intersession crimes that might have been prevented:

On Jan. 13, a C.B. radio was stolen after forced entry into a truck parked in Lot 25.

On Jan. 19, a radio tape deck was pried from its bolts and stolen from a car in Lot 71. Chafin estimated the tape deck's worth at $139.

At approximately 10:45 a.m., Jan. 19, a cash box that contained $249.52 was reported missing from the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's safe. A Collegian staff member apparently thought the safe had been secured the night before. However, the staff member remembers that a male subject had asked for a cigarette that night and minutes later, the male subject was seen by the staff member fleeing from the scene. An investigation is still in progress.

Also, sometime between Dec. 24 and Jan. 12, a stereo system was stolen from the JFK Tower in Southwest. Chafin estimated the value at $350.

"We are re-emphasizing to the public to take precautions to prevent crimes. They can do this by joining Operation Identification, which engraves anything from bicycles to typewriters, or by just keeping property in safe places. Either option will assist the Public Safety Department," concluded Chafin.

DiCarlo has never run for statewide office.

Sen. DiCarlo said, "I should not even be meeting with you. I have done it as a courtesy to Peabody,' " McKee testified.

DiCarlo was one of three legislators who signed a request for the investigation into the firm's multi-million dollar contract to supervise construction of the University of Massachusetts Boston campus.

McKee told the jury of seven men and five women he was greatly upset by press reports that the contract gave the firm too much of a profit and boosted the construction costs.

Although the firm received about $6 million for the project, McKee said less than half was profit. He did not give an exact figure.

DiCarlo headed the special legislative committee that eventually investigated the contract. That committee concluded there was no wrongdoing.

Asst. U.S. Atty. Edward J. Lee, chief prosecutor in the state's first major political corruption trial in more than a decade, has alleged the firm actually wrote part of the committee report.

MacKenzie was accused of using his influence in the Senate to intercede on the firm's behalf and obtain the favorable report for the $40,000 price tag.

State Sen. James A. Kelly Jr., D-Oxford, holder of the purse strings in the Senate as chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, has been revealed by prosecutors to be the mysterious unindicted co-conspirator who made the first overture toward extortion. He has denied the accusation.

Che Lumumba

New school for truth

By FIFI BALL
Collegian Staff

A poster on population, land ownership and average wage for blacks, whites and others in South Africa adorns the wall at the Che Lumumba School for Truth.

The poster is reflective not only of the high level of world consciousness possessed by the people involved with the school, but of the commitment they feel to liberation struggles of all people.

The school occupies four rooms in the New Africa House, but, "the University doesn't want us there," said Jamila Blanco, teacher at the school. Blanco cited a lack of University affiliation and funding as reasons for the University's attitude.

There are currently nine students at the school, ranging in age from six to eleven, in grade from one to six.

Upon completion of the program at Che Lumumba, children usually go on to public junior high school in Amherst, said Mary Lea, the main teacher this year at the Lumumba school.

An information pamphlet on the school reads: "The school was founded in 1972 as an alternative elementary school... It was created out of a growing concern felt by Third World parents at the University...that their children were and are a minority in the public schools in Amherst. Such questions ad identity and the lack of a history that portrayed the achievements of Third World people were not adequately dealt with, if at all. Further it was felt that the needs of Third World children were different from those of non-Third World children, i.e., who am I? why am I different? These were just some of the questions that had to be dealt with."

Also, in 1972, the school applied for and received accreditation from the Amherst Public School system.

Most of the teachers at the school are volunteers, a lot of them parents. Parents in fact run the school, along with some input from the other teachers and the children, said Blanco.

Subjects taught include Spanish, Martial Arts; which they pick up at Amherst College, Cultural and Physical Geography, and Dance, as well as traditional subjects like Science, Math, Language Arts, and Music.

The main difference between Che Lumumba and public elementary schools is that the parents and teachers are extremely politically conscious. The children are actively involved in liberation struggles by attending political events, hearing multi-cultural representatives and liberation leaders speak, both at school and elsewhere.

"The skills are the same, the content is different," said Blanco. "An effort is made to point out contradictions that exists in currently published texts."

Grades are de-emphasized, as well as general pressure and feelings of competition. What is emphasized is the feeling of cooperation, said Lea.

The school welcomes students from all nationalities; Blacks, Puerto Ricans, Asians, Africans, Chicanos, and other Third World members, as well as people of European descent.

Currently the school is in need of more students, especially older students, said Lea. They also need a math teacher.

The people involved with the school see a need to move out of their present location, and into a facility where there is a playground and the children can do more physical activities.

Explore Amherst's nature

By MARY ANN MAYNARD
Collegian Staff

The favorite excuse for moping around on a Saturday afternoon, "there's nothing to do around here," is forevermore obsolete.

There are things to do and places to go in Amherst, and there's even a directory to tell you about them." In the Public Trust: A Guide to Amherst Conservation and Recreation Areas."

This booklet has been made available by the Hitchcock Center for the Environment, the Amherst Conservation Commission and the Amherst Recreation Commision. It provides maps, directions and descriptions of the 700 acres of conservation and recreation land in Amherst.

For instance, do you know the best places for hiking, swimming, cross-country skiing, picnicing, mushroom picking, fishing and studying? Unless you can name eight sites for cross-country skiing, nine for fishing and eight for outdoor studying, you can no longer say there's nothing to do around here. you obviously need to explore Amherst's "natural heritage."

This 52 page paperback, which came out yesterday, can be purchased for $1.50 at Eastern Mountain Sports, the Jeffery Amherst Bookshop, the Paperclip, the Hitchcock Center and in the conservation office at Town Hall.

Ticket office to open

By ROBERT DAVIDSON
Collegian Staff

A Student Activities Ticket Office which will handle ticket sales for all Recognized Student Organization (RSO) will probably open next week according to Brian Harvey, acting Communications Co-ordinator of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

The ticket office will be organized in accordance to a controversial bill passed by the senate last night. Michael Lorigan, who moved to accept the bill, said that many RSO groups handling their own ticket sales are vulnerable to embezzlement. In order to prevent embezzling, Thomas Kerrins, treasurer of the senate, introduced a bill calling for the incorporation of a ticket office for all RSO groups.

According to Brian Delima, speaker of the senate, the bill enables the Student Senate to tax each RSO group five per cent of the gross income of its activity if the profit yields more than five per cent of the gross income.

Many senators opposed the bill because they felt it was unfair to RSO groups. Senator Jon Hite said that he opposed the bill because it is wrong for the senate to tax the groups that it is supposed to support.

In other business the senate received a report from Kwaku Leon Saunders, a member of the Classic Black American Music Organizing Committee, on its proposed concert this spring.

The concert, entitled "Commemorating an Indigenous American Art Form: Classic Black American Music," was conceived by a coalition of black student organizations. After a presentation last semester, the senate indicated a high level of interest and the Classic Black American Music Organizing Committee began its efforts to organize the concert.

The committee has received verbal agreements for the concert from Stevie Wonder, Natalie Cole, Archie Shepp, Max Roach, and Mercer Ellington and is waiting to receive agreements from Ella Fitzgerald and Eubie Blake. However, according to Saunders, Stevie Wonder's contractual committments may not allow him to perform.

"Reggie Wiggins (Stevie Wonder's agent) informed us that Stevie wants to do the concert on May 7. We requested that the performance be a benefit and Reggie informed us that Stevie's contractual arrangements prohibited this but that he would seek to get around this. As to his success, we will be informed on Friday by telephone," Saunders said last night.

The senate also voted to support International Women's Week. It will be on the week of March 8 and will feature women speakers, musicians, and artists.

In related business, the senate voted to organize an RSO account in order to sponsor a concert featuring a performance by Betty Carter, a jazz musician, and to allow the organizers of the concert a deficit budget of $2775.

Members of Gamma Sigma Sigma, a National Service Sorority will be conducting a non-profit book exchange in the Commonwealth Lounge. They will take in books through Friday, and the books will be sold all of next week. (Staff photo by Marilyn Mankowsky)

Spring concert

Aiming for professionals

By ANN MURPHY
Collegian Staff

The student senate is currently working on selecting a band for the spring concert to be held May 7.

Brian DeLima, speaker of the senate, said that they are negotiating with major bands.

"All we can hope is that negotiations go on as planned", DeLima said. He added that the senate is only considering first rate bands to give a professional show in contract with previous concerts which featured two or three second rate bands.

"Students are involved in all phases of the spring concert. It will be educational as well as entertaining," DeLima said.

The concert is being planned and produced by a special spring concert committee. This committee is the creation of the senate and its decisions are subject to senate approval.

David Kantor, current chairperson of the concert, said that there probably will be an admission charge of under five dollars. He said this fee is minimal enough for the students and will insure the concert's breaking even.

The final program will consist of one major band and two smaller back up groups Kantor said.

"We want the three bands to be diverse and appeal to as many UMass students as possible. If the budget allows we will have an emcee such as a comedian," Kantor said.

"The spring concert last year was run by Eastern Mountain Concerts, an independent RSO group which didn't have the backing or the funding as we will have this year. The senate has sponsored concert committees in the past. Since then there haven't been any major concerts," he added.

"The groups who are considered were chosen mostly because of their prices, availability, and past working experiences with colleges," Kantor said.

"Whereas its starting so early all major problems can be hopefully looked at and tackled before they arrive. The Student Senate is looking very forward to having the largest and most successful concert in UMass history, and hope for it to be a precedent for major events in the future."

In a report compiled by the senate, it said that there is no facility on this campus other than the stadium where a major artist could perform. The stadium can hold about 20,000 people. A show at the stadium could allow every student to attend. Also several acts could be brought in. The concert is for all students, not just a few.

The report also said that beer is going to be sold because no bottles or cans are allowed inside the stadium. Proof of age will be required to purchase beer.

Tickets will go on sale the day after spring break, March 28 which is six weeks before the concert. For the first three weeks students can buy two tickets each at a reduced price. After this the tickets will be sold at a higher price and will be available to anyone.

Bus service on the day of the concert will be increased. Buses will be running every few minutes around campus to the stadium.

Sunday May 8 is the rain date. The concert will start at noon and end at 6 p.m.

Free beers lure phonothon workers

By D. PETERSON
Collegian Staff

Free beer is one of the lures that the Alumni Office will be using to entice 500 volunteers to work on the fourth Student Phone-a-thon in March.

This is an effort by alumni staff members to raise money by pledges over the phone from UMass graduates.

Joseph Carter, a UMass senior and coordinator of this year's phone-a-thon, said, "Volunteers will have a free meal before they go on the phone and free beer throughout the evening."

Assistant coordinator Mary Ellen Blazon added that it will be a change from the dining commons meals for the students who work.

Carter emphasized that the activity needs more than 500 volunteers to operate 30 phones for the five weeks that the fund-raising effort runs.

This money is applied to university programs that are often hurt by budget cuts or freezes. Funds go towards scholarships, the marching band, the debate group and other campus organizations that add to student enrichment.

Carter said, "We will call as many as we can in five weeks on 30 phones." No one is called more than once, but nearly everyone who has graduated from UMass will be called, he added.

The Alumni Office will even arrange "easy payment plans" for those who pledge large amounts, stated Blazon. "You can pay your pledge in four installments over six months," she said.

Last year's receipts topped $50,000.

There is a briefing for everyone who volunteers to work during the phone-a-thon. "How to use the different WATS lines, what information to give, how to fill forms, and what information to ask for from the pledges is covered before anyone starts to call," said Carter.

The Student Phone-a-thon will run March 7-10, 14-17, 28-31 and April 4-7 and 11-14. People or groups who wish to volunteer for an evening should contact the Alumni Office in Memorial Hall.

Ignorance contributes to crime also

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

Saul Chafin, assistant director of the UMass Department of Public Safety, says that administrators within the department feel that public ignorance is contributing to crime almost as much as the criminal himself.

"The department", says Chafin, "feels that by leaving valuable property, such as a C.B. radio or tape deck in a conspicuous location in a vehicle, only invites crime."

"It isn't limited to vehicles, as rooms and offices should be protected as well. Do not leave accessible objects in plain view, take the time to protect your property," added Chafin.

Chafin cited four intersession crimes that might have been prevented:

On Jan. 13, a C.B. radio was stolen after forced entry into a truck parked in Lot 25.

On Jan. 19, a radio tape deck was pried from its bolts and stolen from a car in Lot 71. Chafin estimated the tape deck's worth at $139.

At approximately 10:45 a.m., Jan. 19, a cash box that contained $249.52 was reported missing from the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's safe. A Collegian staff member apparently thought the safe had been secured the night before. However, the staff member remembers that a male subject had asked for a cigarette that night and minutes later, the male subject was seen by the staff member fleeing from the scene. An investigation is still in progress.

Also, sometime between Dec. 24 and Jan. 12, a stereo system was stolen from the JFK Tower in Southwest. Chafin estimated the value at $350.

"We are re-emphasizing to the public to take precautions to prevent crimes. They can do this by joining Operation Identification, which engraves anything from bicycles to typewriters, or by just keeping property in safe places. Either option will assist the Public Safety Department," concluded Chafin.

WASHINGTON — Pres. Carter slips on the ice and gets an assist from his Naval aide, Lt. Comrd. J. Ball Reason. The President was leaving the White House 1-26 to drive to the Justice Department to watch Griffin Bell take his oath as attorney general. (UPI)

Georgians applaud as Bell is sworn attorney general

WASHINGTON [UPI] — With a smiling President Carter looking on and scores of government officials and visiting fellow Georgians applauding, Griffin Bell was sworn in yesterday as the nation's 72nd attorney general.

The 58-year-old Atlanta attorney and former federal appeals judge was approved by the Senate Tuesday despite opposition from blacks and civil rights groups.

Shortly before the brief and informal Justice Department ceremony, Carter, Bell and Chief Justice Warren Burger strode together through the building's massive metal doors on Pennsylvania Avenue. They were opened today for the first time since 1970 when they were closed due to bombings of government buildings.

The President said the doors will remain open in his administration. And he repeated a prediction he made frequently as controversy swirled around Bell:

"He's going to be a great attorney general, perhaps the greatest this country has ever seen."

"These doors will be kept open from now on," Carter said. "I believe the people will see the importance of having a Department of Justice whose primary commitment is to those who are cut off from needed expression of support for their rights."

"That's the way we're going to operate the Justice Department — with an open door policy," Bell said. "We're coming out from behind the barricades. We don't need to be behind locked doors."

Carter said the Pennsylvania Avenue entrance to the building was "symbolic of a separation of the disaffected and disadvantaged from the core of justice."

Carter recalled that in announcing his choice of Bell in Plains, Ga., two months ago he predicted his longtime friend will "not just be an adequate attorney general, but a great attorney general."

"I have no doubt that prediction will come true," the President said today.

After Carter's brief speech, interrupted repeatedly by clapping and noisy shouts, Burger administered the oath to Bell as Bell's wife, Mary, held the ceremonial bible.

Allies look to Carter for 'super' leadership

WASHINGTON [UPI] — On all these matters America's allies, at least, look to Carter for the kind of leadership only a superpower can provide.

Speak to any European or Asian government minister or ambassador to be told that positive U.S. leadership, coupled with consultations with allies, has been the rare exception in recent years.

The Japanese, for instance, were shocked not to have been told about ex-President Nixon's contacts with China. The British, French and other Europeans were scornful of the U.S. decision to alert its global forces during the Mideast war of 1973.

The trauma of Watergate cut short Washington's capacity to initiate, to innovate, to respond effectively to Moscow's ever-mounting challenge. Transcending all these things U.S. preoccupations with Vietnam affected Washington's ability to set the pace in East-West and North-South exchange until fighting there ended.

Now America's friends anticipate an era of renewed consultation, greater cooperation — things Carter has promised.

On a variety of long-term problems they are looking to Carter to act with the precision and integrity he has promised. Some of those problems:

—A system that will help check the spread of nuclear weapons technology.

—Arrangements on a world-wide scale to limit arms sales.

—More decisive U.S. action to defuse the Southern African power keg; even if this involves leaning heavily on the white settler government of Rhodesia led by Premier Ian D. Smith.

The alternative, which Europeans and white Southern Africans fear, could be an Angola-type intervention by Cuba and the Soviets in the torn rebel British colony of Rhodesia. In such a situation it would be hard if not impossible for white-ruled South Africa to keep out of the conflict.

—If and how he can redeem his electoral proposal to pull U.S. ground troops — about 25,000 of them — out of South Korea leaving that exposed allied land under the cover of American air protection only.

—Once and for all whether to lay the spectre of Vietnam by normalizing relations with the Communist government of Hanoi and then seek, in direct contacts, to pursue the fate of 700 American servicemen missing in action and as yet still unaccounted for.

—A decision whether or not to honor America's contractual obligation, bequeathed to his administration by Ford, to deliver an overdue shipment of lowgrade uranium ore for India's civil nuclear power station near Bombay.

Ford's men feared India might divert part of the spent uranium fuel for explosive purposes despite Indian undertakings and despite international safeguards against misuse. Failure to deliver would leave millions in and around Bombay without light and power.

—A judgment on a Pakistan request to buy 110 A7 bombers from this country which the Pentagon has recommended.

Senate confirms Young as new UN ambassador

WASHINGTON [UPI] — Rep. Andrew Young appears headed for easy Senate confirmation as U.N. ambassador and will take to his post a new American stand on Vietnam's membership in the world body.

Young easily cleared — 14 to 0 — the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Tuesday and told the prestigious panel holding a hearing on his confirmation that President Carter "has no objection to moving towards some kind of recognition of Vietnam and admission to the United Nations."

The disclosure came four days after Carter pardoned Vietnam era draft evaders and ordered a study of Vietnam era military desserters.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance plans within 60 to 90 days to open talks with Vietnam on a variety of issues hampering diplomatic recognition, Young said, including a final accounting for Americans missing in action.

"If there is evidence that we have received all the information on those missing in action and if the President can be satisfied that Vietnam is accommodating on those issues, he's then willing to explore the possibility of establishing relations," Young said yesterday on the NBC Today program.

The Ford administration twice, including once during the fall election campaign, vetoed U.N. membership for Vietnam.

Conflicting views arise over proposed legalized gambling in New England

BOSTON [AP] — Backers of legalized gambling urged Massachusetts lawmakers yesterday to reap new tax dollars ahead of other New England states by authorizing casinos.

Opponents warned that casinos would bring crime to the Bay State without solving any fiscal problems.

The two sides presented arguments before the legislature's Committee on Government Operations, which is considering a measure sponsored by representatives Anthony P. McBride, D-Adams, Royal L. Bolling Jr., D-Boston, and David J. Swartz, D-Haverhill. Their bill would allow cities and towns to license one casino apiece, provided that voters in the community give their approval. The casino would have to be located in a hotel of at least 350 rooms.

Bolling, leading off testimony favoring casinos, said revenue generated by the gambling clubs would help the state's financially troubled cities keep property taxes in check. Under his bill, 80 per cent of a casino's tax revenue would stay in the locality and the rest would go to the state.

Swartz warned that casinos were being considered by Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Vermont and one of these states might start gambling — and earning tax revenue — before Massachusetts. He called special attention to New Hampshire, where he said Gov. Meldrim Thomson was searching for ways to meet a $20 million deficit.

"Marvelous Meldrim, the magnificent magician, has finally run out of tricks," Swartz said, predicting Thomson would look to casinos to solve his fiscal problem.

Much of the testimony supporting casinos came from officials of the Adams area, where a casino has been proposed for the financially troubled Greylock Glen resort.

Earl F. Kelly, chairman of the Adams selectmen, said a casino was the only hope for the half-built resort to attract enough capital to finish construction. He said lawmakers could not oppose casinos on moral grounds since the state already runs a lottery.

"What could be worse than an old lady spending her last dollar on a lottery ticket instead of on food?" Kelly asked.

But State Sen. John H. Fitzpatrick, R-Stockbridge, predicted casinos would tarnish the state's image and lead to an upsurge in crime. He said Las Vegas has one of the nation's highest crime rates for cities of its size.

Sidney H. Radner of Holyoke, who said he had done undercover gambling investigations for the Justice Department, said Massachusetts communities lack the expertise to guard against crooked wagering. He said the casino industry would cause more problems than it was worth and added "The New England states as a group should fight it."

Hunt paroled in thirty days

FORT WALTON BEACH, Fla. [UPI] — Watergate burglar E. Howard Hunt told a state court yesterday he will be paroled in 30 days.

Hunt said he received a telephone call from Washington, D.C., at 8:15 a.m. EST telling him his parole had been approved by the U.S. Parole Commission and would take effect "30 days from now."

Hunt has been serving a 30-month to 8-year sentence at the nearby Eglin Air Base prison facility.

Hunt had been called as a rebuttal witness in the trial of accused terrorist bomber Rolando Otero after Otero testified that "E. Howard Hunt, for one" trained him in the use of explosives.

The parole commission said Tuesday it would announce late today its decision on whether to grant parole to Hunt and 29 other persons who were under review.

Hunt, one of the organizers of the 1972 Watergate burglary, has been eligible for parole since Jan. 10.

Along with G. Gordon Liddy, Hunt was sentenced to 2 ½ to eight-year term in the minimum security federal prison at Eglin Air Force Base.

Firefighters battle blaze injuring six

HOLYOKE, Mass. [UPI] — A Holyoke man remained in critical condition at a Connecticut burn center yesterday after he was rescued from his burning apartment during a three-alarm blaze in a downtown apartment building late Tuesday.

Donald Ehrgood Jr., 42, was one of six people injured when the fire roared through the four-story, brick and wood building. The state fire marshal's office was investigating the cause of the fire, which destroyed the 28-unit Elmwood Apartments at 433 Elm St.

Four firefighters dramatically crawled into Ehrgood's burning first-floor apartment with a one and one-half inch hose and pulled him to safety.

Fire officials said the blaze apparently started in Ehrgood's apartment.

Ehrgood was initially taken to Holyoke Hospital and then transferred to Yale-New Haven Hospital, where a spokesman said he had second and third degree burns over 50 per cent of his body.

Three other residents and two firemen were also injured in the blaze. One resident remained in fair-to-good condition yesterday at Holyoke Hospital while another was in good condition at Providence Hospital.

The other injured persons were treated and released, hospital spokespersons said.

At least 60 persons were left homeless by the blaze, which was the fifth multiple alarm fire in Holyoke within a week, authorities said. The Red Cross was assisting the building's residents in finding emergency shelter.

Wife of former Nixon aide commits suicide

BOSTON [AP] — Grace Garment, wife of the former counsel to President Richard M. Nixon, apparently committed suicide in a Boston hotel room shortly after disappearing from her New York home Dec. 3, a family spokesman said yesterday.

The body of 49-year-old Mrs. Leonard Garment lay unclaimed in a Boston city mortuary for more than a month before she was identified by her husband Wednesday, police said.

"At this point it looks like she took her life almost immediately after entering the hotel room but she was not discovered until the next day," said the family spokesman, who asked not to be identified.

Mrs. Garment, a writer for the daytime soap opera, "Edge of Night," was last seen Dec. 3, 1976, at Pennsylvania station in midtown Manhattan, shortly before she had a psychiatric appointment for treatment of depression.

The next day her husband, now a U.S. Representative to the United Nation's Human Rights Commission, reported her missing to New York authorities.

Police issued a 13-state alarm for Mrs. Garment, describing her as a 5-foot-4, 115-pound brunette wearing a pink turtleneck sweater, brown fur coat and slacks.

A family spokesman said she apparently took an Amtrak train to Boston and registered under an assumed name at the Hotel Essex, located across the street from South Station in a deteriorating commercial section of Boston.

Rooms in the 11-story brick hotel, built in the 1900's, cost between $18 and $35.

James Gorman, assistant manager of the Hotel Essex, who said he found the dead woman's body, said he did not know who she was since she had registered under an assumed name.

"I've been asked by the family not to give out any information," Gorman said. "There was nothing bad. I'm not trying to hide anything."

A family spokesman said Garment, who lives in Brooklyn Heights, N.Y., was summoned to Boston by police to make a positive identification of the body at the city's Southern Mortuary.

Garment was Nixon's counsel during the Watergate investigation. He had been a partner in Nixon's former law firm in Manhattan until 1969.

Heat rises in Spain between left and right extremists as government works to protect democracy

MADRID, Spain [AP] — Tens of thousands of workers went on strike across Spain yesterday to protest violence by diehard Francoists as the government worked to ease political tension threatening to undermine its plans for democracy.

Reinforced police in Jeeps and buses guarded key spots in Madrid to head off possible fighting between left and right extremists. Police reported only scattered clashes with leftist students.

In a chapel at Madrid's government Justice Palace, more than 10,000 persons filed silently past the coffins of three of five Communists shot down in a massacre Monday night. An extreme right group has claimed responsibility for the killings and threatened new bloody attacks.

The crowd of mourners, including Communist party leaders and hundreds of ordinary citizens, was led by Madrid Bar Association officials. Four of the massacre victims were Communist lawyers specializing in labor cases.

Premier Adolfo Suarez, already under fire because of two unsolved political kidnapings, called off a scheduled visit to the Middle East and met with his cabinet to wrestle with the worst political crisis since dictator Gen. Francisco Franco died 14 months ago.

Labor sources reported an estimated 300,000 workers stopped work nationwide in protest against what newspapers have called a campaign by diehard France supporters to discredit the government with violence.

The extreme right-wing fears that the reform program of Suarez and King Juan Carlos will open the door to leftist participation in the government. The key reform will be Spain's first free parliamentary elections in four decades, scheduled for sometime this spring.

The Socialists, the illegal Spanish Communist party and other leftists urged their followers to stay off the streets yesterday and disowned the call for a national protest strike.

Authorities closed Madrid and Barcelona universities for the second day in an attempt to avert a repetition of demonstrations earlier in the week in which two students were killed — one by ultrarightists and the other by a police gas grenade.

Police were questioning known right-wing militants in the hunt for the two gunmen who killed the five Communists and woulded four others in the Monday night attack on a Communist lawyer's office.

But investigators have reported no break in the two kidnapings — of royal adviser Antonio Maria de Oriol in December and Lt. Gen. Emilio Villaescusa, a military judge, last Monday.

Prospects dim for peace in Cuba

LUSAKA, Zambia [AP] — Cuban advisers are training guerrillas for the war against Rhodesia's white minority regime, black nationalist sources here said Tuesday as prospects dimmed for a negotiated peace in the racially torn country.

In Rhodesia, the mood of whites ranged from jubilant to fearful on Tuesday, a day after Prime Minister Ian Smith rejected a new British peace plan for transition to black majority rule.

White Rhodesian officials have expressed concern in recent months that Cuban troops based in Angola might enter the four-year-old Rhodesian war in some way. An estimated 12,000 to 15,000 Cuban troops remained in Angola after helping a Marxist-oriented group win a civil war and take power last year in the former Portuguese colony.

The nationalist sources here said Cubans are training members of the Zimbabwe People's Army, the military arm of the Patriotic Front of black nationalists Joshua Nkomo and Robert Mugabe. Zimbabwe is the black nationalists' name for Rhodesia.

In rejecting the latest British peace proposals on Monday, Smith said they would have led to an immediate surrender of power to a "Marxist-in-doctrinated minority" of black nationalists.

The proposals called for a black-dominated cabinet headed by a British commissioner during a 14-month transition to permanent black rule in the breakaway British colony.

In related developments Tuesday:

—Foreign Secretary Anthony Crosland of Britain said in London that Smith's decision eliminated any chance for an early resumption of the Geneva peace conference between the Salisbury regime and black nationalists.

Natural gas shortage causes energy emergency

Rhodes noted new natural gas curtailments, effective Tuesday for industries, stores and schools in Ohio, and said that unless something is done, "our gas will be gone by Feb. 10."

So far, the state's natural gas suppliers have been able to maintain service for residential customers, but Rhodes said he didn't know how long they can continue.

He had declared an energy emergency in Ohio last Sunday, asking the state's 11 million resident to turn thermostats back to 65 degrees in daytime and 55 at night.

A cold front swept down across the Dakotas and the upper Mississippi Valley on Wednesday with snow, winds gusting to more than 40 miles per hour, and plummeting temperatures. Travelers advisories were issued for most of the upper Midwest.

Across the Ohio River from Rhodes' state, the bitter cold has paralyzed Kentucky's coal industry, largest in the nation.

"Those who can mine coal can't ship it, and some can mine it and not process it," said Tom Duncan of the Kentucky Coal Association.

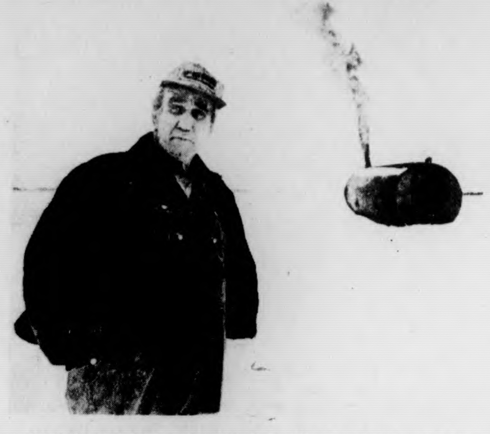
However, he said, most companies that use coal had built up stockpiles before the cold hit and haven't been adversely affected yet by the slowdown in mining.

Surface equipment at the mines has been frozen by the cold. In addition, coal trucks can't move because of icy highways, and coal barges can't move on the Ohio River because it has frozen over.

Many mines in adjoining West Virginia have been similarly paralyzed.

The Federal Energy Agency said emergency supplies of heating oil had begun moving by pipeline, train and truck into Minnesota, North Dakota, Wisconsin and Michigan from refineries in Ohio and Illinois.

On Monday the FEA ordered several refineries to increase their output of home heating oil to supply areas in the upper Midwest, critically short of oil because of high demand and ice on the Mississippi that has blocked barge shipments.



WADSWORTH — Joseph J. Smith, 75, stands next to a tank spewing forth oil, on an unused corner of his 150 acre farm. Smith says the East Ohio Gas Co. will not distribute his product unless he signs a contract. (UPI)

The U.S. Coast Guard at St. Louis said a 70-mile-long ice jam on the Mississippi River still blocked barge traffic.

"This is the most severe conditions anyone can recall in the modern river era, at least since World War II," said Thomas L. Gladders, president of G.W. Gladders Towing Co. He said about 100 tow boats and 1,000 barges were stranded on the Illinois and Mississippi rivers between Chicago and Cairo, Ill.

A grain merchandiser in St. Louis said exporters downriver at New Orleans were being charged a premium of 10 to 15 cents for corn, soy beans and wheat because of shortages created by the river ice. He said that means an extra $5,000 to $7,500 for an average barge load.

Unlike Gilmore convicted killer wants life

CRANSTON, R.I. [UPI] — Like Utah killer Gary Gilmore, Robert Cline was sentenced to die for murdering a man. That's were the similarity ends.

"I'm not going to kill myself for nobody," soft-spoken Cline said Wednesday.

After he was sentenced to death in the gas chamber for the 1974 slaying of fish peddler Frank Pirri, Cline said he used to dream about his body being carried away on a stretcher after execution. At that time, he said he "was ready to die."

But ever since Gilmore got his wish to die by firing squad this month, Cline 24, isn't so sure. His voice cracked and he took a long sip of water. "It disturbs me," he said.

"I relate to Gary Gilmore only because he was on death row. We all face the same penalty. They are all my brothers," said Cline.

He is one of two men facing death in a gas chamber Rhode Island never built. He was sentenced to death in May 1975 for committing murder while an escapee from the state Adult Correctional Institution.

"I shot at him. I killed him. I'm sorry," Cline said in a confession he signed after the middle-aged Bristol fish peddler died in a Providence low-income housing project.

He was sentenced under a 1973 law that makes death by gas mandatory for any prisoner or escapee convicted of murder. It passed the legislature after a prison guard was killed. Sidney A. Clark, the other man on Rhode Island's death row, was sentenced for killing a fellow inmate in 1974.

Nobody has been executed in Rhode Island since John Gardner was hanged in 1845 for the murder of a socially prominent woman. An antigallows movement then wiped out capital punishment for 20 years. It was restored by never used.

"It shouldn't be a life for a life," Cline said. "Capital punishment won't stop crime. There will always be murder."

He refused to talk about the man he killed, middle-aged fish peddler Frank Pirri, the father of five children. He talked of being back on the street.

"I'd get me a wife and try to help kids in the community. If I had to give them a beating I'd tell them to stay out of here."

Public Defender John MacFadyen said Cline's murder conviction is being appealed in state Supreme Court.

"We're contending that the death penalty discriminates on the basis of wealth," he said.

"It was the poverty," said Cline, his face muscles twitching. "I worked. It was boring. I thought I deserved something better. There was no way out."

Prominent businessperson convicted of murder

WATERBURY, Conn. [AP] — Former New York stockbroker Murray R. Gold was sentenced Wednesday to 25 years to life in prison for the murder of his former wife's parents.

"I'm an innocent man," Gold said after the sentencing, and his lawyers indicated an appeal was likely.

Superior Court Judge George A. Saden, calling the crimes "extremely vicious ones," sentenced the 43-year-old Gold to 25 years to life for each of two murders but said the sentences would run concurrently. He could be eligible for parole in about seven years.

Gold was convicted Nov. 18 of stabbing to death prominent Waterbury attorney Irving Pasternak and his wife Rhoda shortly after they returned from Yom Kippur services in Sept. 26, 1974. Gold was divorced from their daughter, Barbara Pasternak.

Meyer Gold, the defendant's father, said at a meeting with reporters in New Haven yesterday: "Murray Gold is not a murderer. "It's unbelievable. I cannot believe my ears today."

Dukakis' plan for new prisons opposed by legislatures

BOSTON [UPI] — A $19.1 million plan to ease critical overcrowding in state prisons has run into instant and heated opposition, but legislative leaders say they are confident some version of the plan will be approved.

The plan to build four new state prisons to house 605 inmates was announced Tuesday by Gov. Michael S. Dukakis. Even as he held his news conference, legislators were blasting the plan.

Vehement opposition was expressed to three of the four sites, Grafton, Lenox and Foxboro.

House and Senate leaders, who were briefed on the plan prior to the news conference, indicated they may have objections to certain parts of the plan. "But we recognize there is a crisis," said House Whip George Keverian, D-Everett.

"Yes," answered Senate Ways and Means Chairman James A. Kelly, D-Oxford, when asked if he thought some version of the plan would be approved by the legislature.

The existence of the "crisis," was affirmed later in the day in an order issued by Superior Court Chief Justice Walter McLaughlin.

Responding to a request from Corrections Commissioner Frank A. Hall, McLaughlin ordered a statewide 30 day freeze on new transfers to the Walpole and Concord state prisons.

The state will send inmates back to county correctional facilities for a 30 day period to temporarily ease severe overcrowding at Walpole and Concord.

"It is a crisis which has become an emergency," Hall said noting commitments to the state prison system have jumped by 33 per cent in the past nine months.

The governor's plan would create new medium security prisons in Bridgewater, Foxboro, Lenox-Stockbridge and Grafton.

Three of the properties already are owned by the state while the former Shadowbrook seminary in Lenox and Stockbridge is owned by the Jesuits, a Catholic order of priests.

Dukakis and Hall said total cost of the project includes $12.5 million for purchase, renovation and construction. Annual operating costs would be $11,000 per inmate or $6.6 million a year. About 450 new state employes would be hired to man the facilities.

The plan, along with expansions already in progress, would boost the Corrections Department's overall capacity from 2,781 to 3,600 beds by July 1, 1978.

'Feelin' Good' show

The National Theatre Company will present "Feelin' Good," a musical tribute to the black entertainer in America, on Friday, Feb. 4, in the Student Union Ballroom. This production premiered last season and went on to receive consistent raves and standing ovations wherever it played.

From the minstrel tunes of the nineteenth century to the rock and roll explosion of today, American music owes a debt to that indefinable musical quality that came to America from Africa — that quality we call "soul". Black music was some three hundred years in the making. It is a music that was once a matter of life and death representing the struggles, heroism, and history of a people.

Through song, dance and humor, "Feelin' Good" traces the history of the American black man's massive contribution to the world of American musical entertainment.

Admission is free and open to the public. "Feelin' Good" is sponsored by the Campus Center Program Council. For further information, contact Sarah Williamson, Student Activities Office, room 416, Student Union, 545-3600.

OHI 390 A: IMAGES OF GAYS & LESBIANS IN MODERN LITERATURE

Three credits, Instructor: Jim LaMacchia. Tuesday, 4-6:30 p.m. in Dickinson Lounge, Orchard Hill.

In recent years, the conspiracy of silence which has surrounded the discussion of homosexual themes in modern literature is slowly ending. Gay people have become increasingly aware of the rich heritage of writers who have addressed themselves to the special problems and dynamic of a Gay sexual identity in a predominantly heterosexual culture. This awareness has provided Gay people with an opportunity to reflect upon the image in which they have been cast by modern writers, and has caused critics to acknowledge the special role of a homosexual identity in these works. Those embarrassing details of autobiography obliquely alluded to in discussions of these writers' works in the past, may now be acknowledged as constituting an important, if not central, perspective to the literature.

This course will consist of lecture and discussion. Students will be asked to write a paper on an individually chosen topic; or keep a journal; or some other free-form project negotiated with the instructor. Students can pre-register at McIntyre House or at the next class meeting.

The seminar-style class meets on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 11:15 to 12:30 in Herter 201. For further information contact Professor Roberto White, 545-0904, 367-2695.

Behind the death penalty

By CHARLES BAGLI and JOEL WEISSMAN

Gary Gilmore is dead. Gary Gilmore, the convicted murderer who fought in court for the "right" to be executed and even tried to take his own life twice by overdosing on sleeping pills when the court postponed his execution, has focused great attention on the death penalty issue. After spending the last 18 years of his life in jail Gary Gilmore found some kind of distorted meaning in his own exhibitionist destruction.

But why was there all of this publicity? Gary Gilmore fitted very nicely into the bourgeouse's plan to revive the death penalty. He wanted to die. The death penalty was abolished in 1967 in the midst of the general movement against social injustice, especially the Black liberation struggle.

But ever since 1967 the capitalists have attempted to bring the death penalty back. In 1972 the Supreme Court ruled that various states' capital punishment laws as constituted were "capricious and arbitrary", but in doing so left the door open for the states to rewrite these laws to make them "fairer" and "more rational". Then in July of 1976 the Supreme Court voted overwhelmingly that the rewritten capital punishment laws of three states were constitutional, opening the possibility of execution for over 400 prisoners on death row.

Gary Gilmore gives the capitalists a wedge to restore the death penalty, a chance to create the public opinion needed in order to carry out the first execution in 10 years. The capitalists want and need the death penalty for two reasons.

First, with a growing distrust in government and its inability to solve the pressing problems facing people, the capitalists want to be able to put forward that they are dealing with the problems, including the rising crime rate and social decay. At the same time they want to take peoples' hatred for the way things are and turn it into support for reaction and repression. Of course their solution to crime, like their solution to everything else, is to put more power in their own hands.

Second, in this light the bourgeoisie want one more powerful reminder to the masses of people that they hold the power in this country, even the power of life and death.

For these reasons the capitalists try to justify the restoration of the death penalty saying it will serve as a "deterrent to crime". But this just isn't so. The United Nations reported a few years back that "Neither the number of death sentences nor the frequency of executions appear to have any direct effect on the crime rate. This has been established in nearly all areas (of the world) where total or partial abolitions has been introduced."

If the capitalists want to point the finger of blame around the problem of crime they had better point it at themselves. Their whole system is based on the legalized robbery of the working class and enslavement for profit of people around the world. It is surrounded by an ideology which teaches people to look out for "number one" and to step on the other guy to get ahead. This combined with an economic crisis that ruins the middle class and creates a whole section of people to resort to criminal means to survive. Their prisons, their so called "rehabilitation centers", are themselves breeding grounds for still more crime, producing twisted killers like Gary Gilmore, himself in jail almost continuously from age 14.

Just to name a few of the real mass murderers there is R. Nixon, responsible for millions of deaths in Indochina; N. Rockefeller, responsible for the lives of 43 men at Attica; and the owners of the Scotia mine in W. Virginia for the miners that died there.

In the past the capitalists have been especially vicious in their use of the death penalty as a tool in their subjugation of Black people. Legal murder together with lynch laws were part and parcel of the sharecropping system, and legalized terror and repression continue today as weapons for maintaining national oppression. Of the 3859 persons executed in the U.S. since 1930, 53.1 percent were Black. The figures for rape are even more revealing: of 455 men executed for rape, 89 percent (380 were convicted in the South) were Black men convicted of raping white women.

By politicizing murder and rape trials in which Blacks are accused against whites, such as the famous trial of the Scottsboro Boys, the bourgeoisie has attempted to spread divisions among Blacks and Whites, and through executions of the accused Black person, attempted to terrorize Black people into not rising up against their oppression.

If someone had been killed at the McDonalds robbery on Route 9 in August 1974, Earl Brown and Craeman Gethers might have been executed now for a crime they didn't commit.

Of course the capitalists don't need a law to kill those fighting against them. In 1969 they shot Fred Hampton, leader of the Black Panther Party. While he was asleep in bed. They shot college students in 1970 at Kent State in Ohio and Jackson State in Mississippi during a wave of demonstrations against the war in Vietnam. Still, having the death penalty on the books would make it easier for them to hold up their executions as an example to terrorize people and keep them from rising up.

The bizarre case of Gary Gilmore has unleashed forces clamoring for the death penalty. In Massachusetts two legislators that have had their death penalty bills defeated in the past are now planning on reintroducing death penalty bill because the Gilmore case has raised 'new questions". In Texas, another inmate is scheduled to be executed, although the case is temporarily being delayed.

We urge all students and faculty to oppose the death penalty and the execution of the Texas inmate. The student government and the area governments should be urged by students to send letters of condemnation to the Texas Correctional System.

The capitalists may be able to grind one guy, already a psychotic, down to the point where they can tamely lead him out into the courtyard and execute him at sunrise. But in doing so they are only lifting a rock to drop it on their own feet. If they begin executing people right and left they will surely find themselves confronted again with a growing outrage and movement against the death penalty. Nor are the masses of people going to follow Gary Gilmore's example and accept things the way they are. We're going to keep on fighting all their attacks, including the murderous death penalty.

Charles Bagli and Joel Weissman are Collegian Commentators and members of the Revolutionary Student Brigade.

Livening up a dull month

January is for the most part a dull month. Even the news is usually dull But while it isn't really possible to make snow and cold more amusing, a bit of imagination can liven up the news. So the following could be considered perhaps as "Figments of Our Imagination" or alternatively, as "Stories that 'Saturday Night' Missed".

"As one of the last acts of his Administration, President Gerald Ford last week returned to his field of expertise and pardoned the former "Tokyo Rose", a Japanese-American woman convicted of treason for broadcasting Japanese propaganda during World War II. He said that he hoped his action would help heal the wounds caused by that incident. Former President Nixon condemned the pardon, saying that "Those who would hurt this country should not expect mercy from it."

President Jimmy "I shall never tell a lie" Carter partially fulfilled one of his campaign pledges when he pardoned Vietnam war draft evaders. Sweden was reportedly delighted that American boys could now return home. However, in a gesture of solidarity, some of the exiles said that they would not come back until deserters too were pardoned. Saying that all those who abandoned their units did so out of moral conviction, this group said that they would wait until all disgraced servicemen had received what was acknowledged to be "their just deserts'."

"The spirit of forgiveness appeared to be contagious as well. As a gesture towards international conciliation, France released Palestinean Abu Daoud, alleged mastermind of the 1972 Munich Olympics terrorist raid, whom French counter-intelligence agents had "accidentally" arrested. After a 20 minute court hearing, the judge ordered Daoud freed, and expressed the wish that "the friendly relations between France and the PLO had not been disturbed. Despite a Munich judge's request to detain him, Daoud was immediately driven to Orly Airport where an Air France plane was readied to fly him to Entebbe."

"In an unrelated development, France announced three hours later that it had signed a $1.6 billion agreement to supply 200 Mirage fighters to Egypt. Denying Israeli accusations that France is the prostitute of Europe, French officials said they were confident that the new arms sales in the Mideast would result in "peace in our time". Some observers, recalling previous connections between France, Munich, and terror, said they had 'heard that line before'."

"On a less grim note, the nation paused last week to hold another of its perennial presidential inaugurations. As a rather unpedestrian gesture to the masses, President Carter made the traditional trip from the Capitol to the White House on foot. In commenting on the surprising change, Carter said he had managed to keep his plan secret by not telling anyone about it, not even trusted confidante and wife Rosalynn. Rosalynn, already perturbed by this evident lack of trust, was even more upset by the 2 mile walk itself. In an AP photograph, Rosalynn is shown greeting people at a White House reception after the Inauguration Parade standing in her stocking feet. Husband Jimmy, when asked why he had not warned her about the possibility of getting sore feet, responded, "I TOLD her not to wear high heels."

"Amy Carter became a free agent last week, having played out her option with the Plains, Georgia elementary school system. After a fierce bidding war, the three-year school veteran announced that she was signing on with the Thaddeus Stevens school in Washington D.C. The terms of the agreement reportedly included no homework, guaranteed straight A's, and a mixed-breed puppy to be named "Grits". When asked whether Amy would be treated any differently than other children, the Stevens School principal said, "Of course not'."

"Celebrated convict Gary Gilmore also went through a transition period last week when he was shot to death by a five man firing squad. In an appropriate end to this publicity-saturated event, 150 newsmen entered the execution chamber shortly afterwards and surveyed the blood-stained, bullet-ridden chair Gilmore had sat on. When asked whether he had any regrets concerning the affair, one Utah official commented, "It were a dang shame to messup a nice chair like that'un."

"Puerto Ricans are not entirely happy about the prospect of becoming the 51st state. The fears are primarily economically based. The major fear is that if Puerto Rico were to become a state, San Juan would be subject to a massive influx of New York City residents seeking welfare relief. Officials also believe that this would cause a language problem since most Puerto Ricans believe that if a person moves to another country, he should learn that country's language. It is considered doubtful that the New Yorkers would consent to learn Spanish."

"Locally, a Whitmore staff member mentioned that some 8-900 students were suspended or administratively withdrawn last semester. For most, the bleak prospect of a semester-long exile seems inevitable, and even the optimists among them are losing hope for a reprieve. It seems that the last hope may be that Chancellor Bromery will issue a general amnesty before he leaves for his new job in Washington."

And that's it for the news...

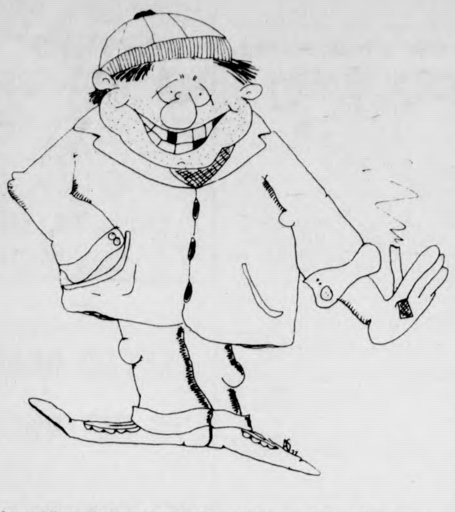
Eight hours



As happenstance would have it, (happenstance rather than fate; it's much less forbidding) I'm back for yet another semester. New interesting faces, challenging courses and no ill winds so far.

Intersession was filled with work, but I took a break for a few days and went from here to near Boston. Of course, the day I chose to flee this area on the bus was the day of the biggest snowstorm. The trip turned out to be a sojourn of eight hours, leaving me with a more vivid imagination of what the tundra must be like.

Everyone on the bus thought their death was imminent; so conversation was much more open and personal between strangers. One fellow had a cassette tape player that blasted 1957 cocktail music, but it added to the surrealness of the situation. I met some interesting people but there's mainly one that I wanted to tell you about. His name was Donald Chestnut.

I met Donald in the Riverside station while waiting a couple of hours for a ride. I fed Donald gobs of cigarettes and he fed me gobs of wisdom and lies. Donald was a genuine innercity bum.

He was dirty and smelly, but he had the bluest eyes that were full of life. That's how our conversation began; he asked me to look at his eyes and tell him what I noticed. Donald told me that I was looking at one of the miracles of modern science. He said that he just got out of the hospital from an operation that was performed on him as the first one in the world.

Donald said that the doctors had taken off his right leg and put it where his eye used to be. He had both his eyes and both his legs where they were supposed to be, but I asked him what the doctor had done with his eye when he put the leg in there. "I guess they threw it away, I haven't been able to find it."

Every so often he'd snap into "normal" reality and wouldn't remember telling me such crazy things. For a while he thought it was World War II and that we were in Leningrad and I was a British nurse. He kept commending me for being so kind and brave for soldiers like himself.

I've always liked to talk to strangers, but I have this crummy habit of changing my name. I told Donald that my name was Susan and when I discovered that I really liked him I felt like a big phoney.

He said that he'd been hit by three trucks; so I told him that he should take that leg out of his eye and look before he crossed streets. He didn't know what I was talking about so we sat a while and smoked more cigarettes. I was wondering what he was going to say next.

Donald talked about his "millionnaire" sister and his good pal Bobby Orr. He asked me how old I was. I lied. He asked me how come I wasn't married. I said I don't know why about anything.

"I bet you 'want' things" he said calmly. I answered, "sure don't you?" "No, nothing." "Oh, come on." "I need things," said Donald Chestnut, "but I don't want anything."

I guess I'd make a lousy bum; but maybe it just takes practice.

Funeral for the Dead

By AL SILBERBERG

It was a sad, teary, day in San Francisco. Thousands of people flooded the cold, rainy, streets, lining up for that one possible chance, to catch one final glimpse.

It was the funeral for The Grateful Dead. There were young freaks, and old freaks, hippies, bikies, and junkies. Straight people were there, and businessmen were accompanied by their wives. They all were teary-eyed and bewildered.

The Dead shall play no more.

"Where's Gerry?", one detatched voice yelled out, only to receive a lot of sobs and whimpers for an answer.

The T.V. stations were there, and Bob Ellsworth was on hand for on the spot interviews.

"Well, can you tell me sir, what it was all about?"

"Ya, well, man the Dead were just great, man, like a real heavy group, like, you know, a feeling, a rose. Wow, I still can't believe it!"

The funeral procession weaved its way up San Francisco's streets, like a snake dance that was continually growing. There were the usual bunch of acid heads, tripped out, dancing to the imaginary sounds that would no longer be heard.

The Deadheads showed up with their Dead shirts worn and tattered. But the skull and roses shone through, like beacons in the night.

I don't quite know for sure how it happened. The Dead seemed so eternal.

The rain fell in a cold, cloudy, mist, and yet, no one seemed to mind.

"Grateful Dead always excellent."

"Barefoot Gerry in Berkeley?

"Play'n in the Band."

I've got friends who must have been there; I, instead was watching it on T.V. My friends, who are so into the scene must have cried.

I'm sorry.

Oh Dead, poor Dead, Grateful Dead. Dead Dead. I got up to fix myself a sandwich, and when I returned to the T.V. they were advertising one last chance to own every Dead album ever recorded.

"Wow," I exclaimed, beneath my peanut butter and jelly sandwich.

"And an actual autograph from Gerry!"

I got up to switch stations, but found the same rainy scene on every channel.

I suppose that I, too, felt a little empty, already missing their "Live Dead" appearance. I dug them, perhaps not so enthusiastically as some of the others, but still, I liked them.

Harry Reasoner was delivering a final tribute, and all the local radio stations were playing Dead marathons.

"Oh, the thousands of people homeless now, without, sob, The Dead."

"Enough already!!" I was fed up with it all and decided to turn the tube off.

The silence was haunting, and I could've sworn that I heard Grateful Dead coming thru the air vent of my apartment. I shook it off as an audio hallucination, due to an overdose of the funeral march.

It was late, and I had to get up early for work the next day, so I went to bed. Before actually falling asleep, I half remembered a phrase that one of my Deadhead friends once said.

It went something like, "The Dead will go on forever, they're like a state of mind, a religion."

With that in mind I'll say in prayer, forever and ever Dead. Amen.

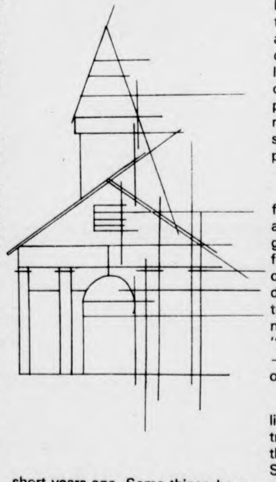
Elusive fantasy

The white church steeple rises above the rest of the town, as one by one the street lights and store displays are lit. The narrow two-lane road dubbed the main drag groans with the overload of cars and people hurrying home.

I barely remember living in this town, although I left it only three short years ago. Some things have changed; there are a few more stores, a new apartment complex, an empty supermarket. New housing developments flourish, and several contractors have devised means to bypass zoning laws so as to build homes much closer together. The streets and stores are noisier; the river is more polluted (it's hard to imagine it any worse than it already was); strange faces greet me where I once knew people by name.



The high school I attended daily for two years seems barely recognizable. The lockers all look the same now, although formerly each section of the hall had its own personality and style. Kids stand huddled outside the cafeteria, waiting for the buses which will take them away from another day of boredom, banal announcements and pressure to be one of the "85 per cent of the high school students who go on to college after graduation." It's too bad they never told how many actually finished college.

The "serious drug problem" at the high school is the hottest issue in town these days; parents receive letters from the principal which give the parents advice for detecting and dealing with drug abuse in their children. However, the six-page letter does not offer reasons for drug abuse, or education programming; neither does it mention alcohol abuse in the high school, which is even more rampant than conventional drugs.

The friends I spoke with at home felt the high school, their churches, and even their parents had not given them adequate preparation for dealing with college and work outside the town. Some had dropped in and out of college, some travelled, some found new lives in new cities. All have fled the "paradise" created by their parents — but where have they fled? From one fantasy to another?

Meanwhile, this town and others like it, will continue to survive, trying to ignore the world around them. The cocktail parties and Saturday morning golf foursomes will continue; few families will move in who are not white Protestants; zoning laws will try to curb the amount of undesirable housing (i.e., low-income) and businesses. The young people drift away, turned off by the stilted atmosphere and the status games. The retired will move away because they can no longer afford to live there.

A new set of people will replace them; they too have come to escape the "rat race" and bring with them their golf carts, leisure suits, Lincoln Continentals, swimming pools and barbeque sets. The white church steeple, like the ivory towers the townspeople have constructed for themselves, sits atop the hill as a signal to the rest of the world to keep away. It's funny though, how it keeps sticking its foot in the back door.

Solar heating funds available

There is now available at least $1 million in Federal funding for the installation of solar heating equipment for housing construction.

Collins said he was hopeful that home builders and members of housing authorities will actively investigate the Solar Energy Demonstration Grants. Applicants for Solar Energy Demonstration Grants may include builders erecting homes as model homes or for speculation, redevelopers who wish to place solar equipment in existing homes, and public housing authorities. Under this program, however, individuals may not receive grants for their own homes.

Requests for Grant Application will be mailed from the Department of Housing and Urban Development and are now available. Project awards will be announed in mid-May.

Grant applications may be requested from: RFGA-Integrated Projects Solar Demonstration Program, HUD, Room 8158, 451 Seventh Street, S.W., Washington, D.C. 21410.

Those interested should contact HUD for further information at the above address or at their toll-free number 1-800-523-2929. HUD will evaluate proposals based on the quality of the proposed solar heating system and the completeness of the plans submitted.

The Massachusetts Energy Policy Office, under Consumer Affair Secretary Christine B. Sullivan, serves as a liaison with HUD in Washington and can assist builders with questions about the program.

For assistance with procedures, prospective applicants may contact: Jacquie Mariano or Harvey Michaels, Mass. Energy Policy Office, Room 1413, One Ashburton Place, Boston, MA 02108, (617) 727-4732.

Westfield State's teacher strike

Effects expected later

WESTFIELD, Mass. [AP] — Effects of a work slowdown by Westfield State College teachers likely would be seen by the end of the week, although they were not visible Wednesday on the first day of the protest, a college official said.

"So far, I've had no student complaints. In two or three days, it might be different," said Dean of Students James W. McKenna.

The teachers voted Tuesday to refuse to perform most usual duties other than classroom teaching and to start informational picketing on the campus next Monday.

"We will work to rule, which means we will teach classes, conduct office hours and go home," said Amico Barone, a professor and president of the Academic Federation.

The slowdown would eliminate most counseling of students, all academic committee work, informal tutoring and much of the paperwork required to operate the college, Barone said.

College President Robert L. Randolph called the work slowdown illegal, but said he sympathized with the teachers.

"I understand their frustration and I share it myself and I'm hoping that negotiations will be resumed very soon, hopefully in a very few days," he said.

Teachers told their union leaders on Tuesday to call a strike at any time, and several teachers said they expected the walkout to start Feb. 7 if a settlement were not reached.

Faculties at the 15 state-run community college have voted to strike that day in a related dispute over salary negotiations with the state.

Teachers at state universities, the four-year state colleges and the two-year community colleges all have worked without any pay raise for more than three years.

Teachers at the Westfield campus charged last week that state college trustees were stalling. The teachers walked out of contract talks.

Community college faculties were angered last fall when the legislature failed to appropriate money for a contract signed by the community college trustees.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis has said the teachers cannot expect a settlement providing more than the average six per cent salary increases negotiated last year with most other state workers.

Westfield State has a faculty of 155, of whom about two-thirds are union members.

Convicted murderer to hear sentence

WATERBURY, Conn. [AP] — Murray R. Gold, a 43-year-old New Yorker who was tried twice before he was convicted of murder in the slayings of his former in-laws, faced sentencing in Superior Court yesterday.

Judge George A. Saden, who presided over the second trial, will issue the sentence. Maximum punishment is life in prison.

Saden, describing the killings as a horrible event, had set bond at $250,000 after a jury of 10 men and two women found Gold guilty last Nov. 18 in the stabbing deaths of prominent Waterbury attorney Irving Pasternak and his wife Rhoda.

Chief defense attorney William Kunstler, who several times during the trial accused Saden of bias against Gold and his lawyers, said the bond was at an "obscene level."

Gold, a former stockbroker from Queens, N.Y., has maintained his innocence throughout the case. Following the verdict he declared in court: "There is no evidence."

Gold is divorced from one of the Pasternak daughters, Barbara. The Pasternaks were slain the night of Sept. 26, 1974 at their home shortly after returning from Yom Kippur services.

Gold was tried previously on the same two murder counts but the trial ended March 31, 1976 when a mistrial was declared because the jury could not reach a verdict. He was freed soon after that on $100,000 bond and remained free on bond through his second trial.

Boston's answer to Times Square...

...First Night '77

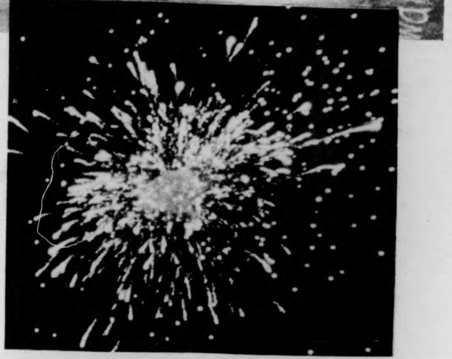
Let it never be said that the UMass population would ever miss a free party let alone one on New Year's Eve.

The biggest outdoor New Year's Eve party held in Boston's history hosted a crowd of 65,000 people during the day and the eventual midnight crowd of 25,000. But despite the bitter cold, the UMies were still well represented and celebrated just as hard as everyone else at midnight, maybe more so from the practice they get during the academic year.



Boston's answer to New York City's Time Square annual New Year's Eve celebration was First Night 77.

First Night consisted of events and performances that reflected Boston's love of the city arts. It was a conglomeration of people participation and observing many different dimension of a unique New Year's celebration.

The actual celebration itself began at nine Friday morning with open ice skating on the Frog Pond, puppet shows throughout the area and Mass. College of Art students painting people's faces.

But when 6 p.m. approached, the real party began to form. There were numerous bands playing, an attempted hot air balloon launch, and a huge parade.

And the people, oh the people, flocking to the Public Garden's, and the Commons in every conceivable manner of dress.

Some people came in evening gowns, suits, costumes, and anything else they happened to think was a propos for the evening affair.

Due to the cold temperatures hovering around the 15-16 degree range, most people either came bundled up to keep out the cold or came equipped with a can or a bottle of some intoxicating liquid to keep in the warm.

One UMie who prefers to remain anonymous said, "I was dressed warmly but my beer kept freezing." He added "I was surprised at the large turnout because it was just as cold as they had predicted, but it didn't stop the people from coming."

Most people agreed on the cold weather not bothering them as there were so many diversions to keep their minds off of the minus six degree wind chill factor.

Another UMie, Jane White Commented, "I was there all day and had the greatest time. I went skating, had my face painted, participated in the treasure hunt, and was interviewed by two media personalities."

Senior UMass student, Paul Bradley put his experiences this way, "Everyone was really friendly, especially at midnight when people were just going up to anyone and everyone and shaking hands and kissing each other wishing everyone in sight a Happy New Year."

People of all ages were there from teenagers to senior citizens.

At the outset of midnight, a fantastic fireworks display was emitted into the sky and brightened up the entire area. It lasted approximately 10 minutes.

Bradley commented, "It was the best display of fireworks I have ever seen. They were even better than the fourth of July fireworks at the banks of the Charles River."

The spokesperson for the First Night 77 committee, Lynn Jeffery, said, "First Night was not city run. The city did donate office space, and the police dept. donated police protection, and things like that."

Jeffery explained in regard to the institutionalization of the celebration, "Boston needed and desired a celebration that was lacking; that would serve as a useful function in the celebration of the event."

According to Jeffery, the event will now become an annual one with preparation on next year's beginning the day after First Night.

Jeffery explained that the origin of the idea of first night stemmed from a small nucleus of people with a big dream of a New Year's Eve celebration that could be experienced by all.

This First Night 77 committee, as they prefer to be called began dealing with people involved with different aspects of helping to shape First Night, fewer and fewer people began taking them seriously thinking it would never get off the ground, (like the unfortunate hot air balloon), but in fact it obviously did, and with unanimous success.

An evaluation of First Night has helped to contribute to an even greater success of First Night '78.

Jeffery explained, "We have many plans and will therefore need a much large volunteer staff."

A few openings are available for possible internships on the committee for the summer and next fall.

"It was as I predicted before the meet," said UMass mentor Melamed. "They have the swimmers and there is no way that we could have swam the meet and beat them, all we could do was to make it close."

The same was expected by senior co-captain Ben Crooker who before the meet, said, "it's going to be damn close".

The next meet for the UMass mermen will be against the Jumbos of Tufts University in Boston Wednesday.

Ex-jock Olsen tries life behind a mike

LOS ANGELES [UPI] — Merlin Olsen, who retired from pro football this season after 15 years with the Los Angeles Rams, signed a long-term contract with the National Broadcasting Company yesterday as an actor and sports analyst.

Olsen, 36, also will participate in other NBC projects, according to an announcement by two NBC executives.

A 1962 graduate of Utah State, Olsen was named to the pro bowl a record 14 times and started 199 games with the Rams, a team record.

Olsen was a member of the Rams' famed 'Fearsome Foursome' of the mid-1960's. His retirement leaves a gaping hole to be filled in the current Los Angeles front line of Larry Brooks, Fred Dryer, and Jack Youngblood.

"I'm delighted," Olsen said. "I look forward to expanding my acting career and am equally enthusiastic about participating in news and sports broadcasting."

Olsen has appeared on television and in several films.

Miller talking up ethics

NEW YORK [UPI] — In an effort to curb the "ripping off" and "gouging" of major league baseball players by their agents, Marvin Miller, executive director of the Players Association, yesterday said steps were being taken to establish a uniform code of ethics for player representatives.

Miller said that a recent study conducted by the select house committee on professional sports, citing testimony from agents themselves, concluded that there are "problems with fee gouging, breach of fiduciary relations, conflict of interest and outright fraud."

According to Miller, the committee feels the only alternative is legislation but Miller is hopeful that the players association can solve the problem without government intervention. He recently sent a letter to "about 35 or 40 agents" asking them to give their views on how a uniform code of professional standards can be initiated. Miller added he had received the complete support of the owners.

"We have no evidence that any agent acted improperly in negotiating for his client," said Miller. "My prime concern is for the potential dangers that exist. A player has the right to choose any representative they want. We consider that an important part of the basic agreement. A player can give an agent his whole salary if he wants to. But I feel I have the right to speak out when I think that members are being ripped off."

Miller's main complaint involves the huge sums of money being paid agents for what he termed "no more than clerical work". He insists these large agents' fees result in the players getting less money.

"We know of one agent who got $115,000 out of the $150,000 bonus paid to the players by the club," said Miller. "This wasn't reported to the commissioner's office or the players association. This same man got $1 million over a two or three-week period.

"In most cases a player isn't even present when negotiations are taking place. It is possible that payments to agents can force clubs to pay less to players. And, if a club is paying money directly to the agent, isn't this a conflict of interest? How do we know the agent is getting the best possible deal for his client? How do we know that he hasn't made some bonus deal with the club to deliver that player?"

Miller said most agents were guilty of misrepresentation. He said the agents' claim that they get only five or six per cent of the players contract is grossly inaccurate.

"If an agent says he gets five or six per cent, why doesn't anyone ask how it is paid?" questions Miller. "If he received money up front in advance, he's really getting much more than five or six per cent. Say a player signs a 10-year contract for $2 million and the agent receives $100,000 up front. It's a gross misrepresentation to say that his fee is five per cent.

"His fee is more like 76.6 per cent of that players' first year salary. It wouldn't be until after the 10th year that the agent has gotten only five per cent of the total package. If the agent was getting a true five per cent, he should be getting it spread out over that 10-year period. That way, the player would be getting more money in the beginning.

"If an agent is working on a percentage deal, a longer contract would be better for the agent regardless of the player's interest. A five-year contract would produce a larger fee for the agent than a three-year contract, even though after only three years the player would be in a bargaining situation all over again."

Miller was especially critical of superagent Jerry Kapstein, who represented 10 free agents in this year's first re-entry draft.

Peace in Baltimore

BALTIMORE [UPI] — Dick Szymanski, officially introduced yesterday as the Baltimore Colts' new general manager, said coach Ted Marchibroda will have authority over on-the-field operations — authority that former GM Joe Thomas apparently refused to yield.

"The Colts are only one type of business — the football business," said Szymanski, who has been with the club 22 years as a player, coach and executive. "Ted will have the areas of responsibility of coaching, trades, draft choices and final cuts."

Thomas, who claimed last Friday he was fired, held most of the authority over player selection during his time with the club. But his sweeping powers brought him more into conflict with Marchibroda last season.

Owner Robert Irsay said that he refused to grant Thomas a new contract as long as there was a conflict between Thomas and Marchibroda.

"I didn't let Joe go. Until he got along with Ted there was no way he was going to get a contract," said Irsay.

"That man (Thomas) did many things I didn't even know about and I'm not going to be crucified for them. But I hate to try a case in front of the press. Six times I sat down and talked to Joe about a contract. I tried everybody, even the commissioner (Pete Rozelle)."

Roberts— soaring up

TULSA (UPI). — Anthony Roberts, then a student at Riverside High School at Chattanooga, Tenn., was delighted when Richard Fuqua, a home-town boy who had played at Riverside, became the nation's second-leading scorer in college basketball.

"Every time he did something it was all over the papers," Roberts said of Fuqua, who still holds scoring records at Oral Roberts University.

But those Fuqua records are threatened now — by Roberts himself.

Roberts, like Fuqua, has become the second leading scorer in the nation. The 6-5 senior forward averaged 31 points per game through the first 18 games of the season. The leading scorer in the nation at that point was Portland State's Freeman Williams, who averaged 37.1 points through 18 games.

Roberts said Fuqua, who now works for the city recreation department, and other former Riverside graduates who attend ORU, played a part in his decision to come to the Tulsa School.

"Every time they came home they made it their business to come by the house," he said.

Roberts said he is glad he made the decision because he likes his teammates.

"I love playing with the team," he said. "There is no animosity on the team. You don't have to worry about teammates talking behind your back. There isn't any jealousy."

Unlike Fuqua, who had problems with his knees which kept him out of professional basketball, Roberts is looking forward to the draft.

"I wouldn't mind playing for any team that has warm weather all year," he said. "I just like warm weather. If I get a chance to play, I'm going to play as long as I can."

Roberts said he tries to keep his mind off his record scoring.

"I try not to think about that," he said. "When you're in college you just try to get better. Otherwise, your head gets fat."

"I don't even think about how many baskets I'm scoring," he said.

Mini-Minutemen overpower AIC; second straight

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

Despite a shortness of breath owing to a four week layoff, the UMass sub-varsity basketball team parlayed its fine pressure defenses and some tough board work into an 85-65 win over America International College last night at Curry Hicks Cage.

"They played well after the four weeks off, and considering the fact that we had only played one game this year," said coach Ray Ricketts.

Ricketts praised the board work of Irv McKnight and Andre Fruneaux, and added that Bob Berman had done a good job of directing the offense.

"Irv and Andre both did a great job on both the offensive and defensive boards, said Ricketts. "I'd say they both grabbed at least 10 rebounds, while McKnight was high scorer — he really shot the ball well."

The Minutemen applied the press only in spots due to an understandable lack of conditioning after the intersession break. The team also used zone defenses almost exclusively with the same end in mind.

"We stuck with our active, aggressive zone defenses which worked fine since we made them work for their hoops," said Ricketts. "If they were left alone, they could stick the ball, so we made sure we kept the pressure on them."

The first half was nip and tuck, with the teams trading baskets for the most part, until an AIC dry spell allowed UMass to take a 39-32 lead into the locker room at the half.

As the second half began, UMass came out pressing and quickly jumped the lead up to 11 points. In trying to close that gap, AIC began to hurry its offense and throw the ball away. The Minutemen turned several of these turnovers into easy hoops, and with seven minutes left held a comfortable 14 point advantage.

"Despite the fact that their tallest player was only 6'4", they were a tough team, and a better squad than that score would indicate," said Ricketts. "They didn't stop hustling, and could give us a better game when we play them later this season. They were good, but tonight we were better."

Along with McKnight; Fruneaux, Berman, and Ernest Coleman hit double figures for UMass in the friendly confines of the cage. This was a story in itself, as the game was originally scheduled to be placed in Springfield. At the last minute, however, the game was switched to Amherst.

"It was poor communication on their part," said Ricketts. "They never called me to verify the game, and when I called them Wednesday morning, I found out they didn't even have a gym to play in. We wanted to play, though, after having our last two games called off, so we arranged to have them come up here."

The Minutemen will now have a week to rectify their conditioning problems before they face Westover AFB Wednesday.

Merwomen travel to big tri-meet today

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's swimming team will travel to UConn today for a tri-meet with Central Connecticut and the host Huskies.

The Merwomen take a 3-3 record into the meet, following their 86-46 setback against Yale earlier this week. UConn sports a 2-2 record entering the contest and Conn. comes in with a mid-season mark of 1-2.

UMass coach Eve Atkinson is looking forward to the meet."

"I'm very optimistic that we can beat both teams," she said. "In the loss to Yale the kids all had really good times — a lot of them being their own personal best times." And, with an even record, UMass' battle with the two Connecticuts could be pivotal."

Looking beyond the tri-meet are swimmers Deb. Schwartz, Theresa Totin, Lisa Hembrough, Roxanne Balducci, Mary Ellen Butler and Mary Ann Totin, who all qualified for the Eastern Regionals and the New England's at URI by swimming under the Eastern Times Standard.

Mermen just nipped

By MARK MARCLARD
Collegian Staff

Swimming in their first meet since before intersession, the UMass mermen saw their season record drop to 2-2 as they were beaten by the Lord Jeffs at Amherst College, 61-52. The win boosted Amherst College's mark to 2-2 as the Lord Jeffs try to improve on last year's 4-6 record.

"Bei (Melamed) is very short of swimmers this year, but he used his men well and almost made it work," said Amherst coach Hank Dunbar of the Minutemen. He went on to say that he had expected it to be very close and that he was glad to get this win after UMass had beaten them last year.

The bright spot in the meet for UMass was the record-breaking performance of junior Russ Yarworth, who set a new record in the 200-yard freestyle with a time of 1:50.0 sec. Yarworth also notched a win in the 200-yard butterfly event with a time of 2:09.6 sec.

Another double winner for UMass was senior Ben Crooker, who garnered first place in the 1000 and 500-yard freestyle events. His win in the 1000-yard freestyle was particularly exciting as he barely edged his opponent, Kip Gibson of Amherst College by .5 seconds.

Other winners for UMass included diver Jim Antonino, who won both diving events with an overall excellent performance; Dave Boucher, who took the 200-yard

Celtics drop another

INDIANAPOLIS [UPI] — Billy Knight tossed in 35 points and Danny Roundfield 20 to carry the Indiana Pacers to a 121-101 victory over Boston Wednesday night and snap a five-game losing streak.

The Pacers built a 27-19 lead after the opening minutes and led the rest of the way to win the "rubber" match of their three-game series.

The closest the Celtics came was within two points at 53-51, in a rally sparked by Sidney Wicks and Curtis Rowe, but the Pacers then ran off seven straight points to lead 60-51 at the half.

John Havlicek with 28 points, Wicks with 20 and Rowe with 19 led the Celtics, who were without ailing center Dave Cowens and Charlie Scott, who is out for the season.

Rimmen — devastating performance

BURLINGTON, Vt. — In Playground slang, you could say that "UMass took Vermont to the cleaners last night."

You could say that, but in more precise terms, the University of Massachusetts basketball team thoroughly whipped the University of Vermont, 98-77 last night before 2,003 fans in morgue-like Patrick Gymnasium.

The Minutemen dominated the game right from the early going as their full-court zone press created several Catamount turnovers, giving UMass several unmolested layups during the first five minutes of play.

The Catamounts just could not handle the pressure the Minutemen were applying on all parts of the floor.

"Yeah, our press worked fine tonight," UMass coach Jack Leaman said, "but last week against Niagara and Villanova our press did nothing for us."

Guard Brad Johnson and forward Mike Pyatt had the hot shooting hands in the first half for the Minutemen. Johnson was deadly from around the top of the key, while Pyatt was bulling his way under the offensive board, scoring on a lot of twisting one-handed layups.

At times it seemed that the Minutemen were going to blow the Catamounts right off the court in the early going, but the accurate outside shooting of Vermont's Warren Prehmus kept the Catamounts within striking distance.

Then with 11:10 to go in the first half, Leaman inserted Alex Eldridge into the lineup and the flashy junior guard inserted a spark into the Minutemen's offensive attack as he made three steals and passed off beautifully to his front court men under the loop.

With Eldridge in the lineup, the Minutemen began to roll and built a solid 52-39 lead at the half.

In the first half alone, Pyatt had 12 points and six rebounds while Eldridge handed out five assists in only 10 minutes of play.

In the second half, the Minutemen could do little wrong as they continued their domination of the offensive and defensive boards and also continued to shoot at a very high percentage.

"We shot as well tonight as we have all season," a somewhat pleased UMass coach Jack Leaman said after the game. "When we shoot like we did tonight, there is no doubt in my mind that we should be considered one of the top teams in New England."

Overshadowed by the fine performances turned in by Pyatt and Eldridge were the solid performances of forwards Jim Town and center Mark Donoghue.

Town finished as the high scorer for the Minutemen with 17 points, while Donoghue connected on 14, six of which came from the foul line. More important, though, was the domination of Pyatt, Town and Donoghue off both the offensive and defensive boards.

"More than anything I was pleased with our rebounding," Leaman said. "I wasn't pleased that much with our defense," he added, but I guess when you shoot over 50 per cent from the field like we did tonight, it offsets the defense."

More than anything else tonight, the one thing that was the most noticeable characteristic of the UMass basketball team was its togetherness on the floor.

"We came in here tonight knowing we had to win this game in order to get back on the winning track," Pyatt said after the game. "We were just determined to go out there tonight and win this one."

So the Minutemen have gotten off on the right foot by winning in convincing style. UMass now has an 8-6 record and faces UConn in a big rematch Saturday night at the Springfield Civic Center.

Hoopwomen want another as Worcester State visits

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's basketball team will attempt to repeat its outstanding performance against Queens as it hosts Worcester State at the Cage tonight at 7:30. The Minutewomen are looking for their fourth consecutive victory.

Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski was obviously very pleased with her team's strong effort against the bigger Queens team.

"It was just a complete team effort," she said. "We beat them with balanced scoring and rebounding. We outplayed them in every department."

Tuesday's win showed the giant strides the UMass women's basketball program has taken, as Queens has been perhaps the biggest name in Eastern women's college basketball over the past few years.

Ozdarski mentioned that this season's Queen squad was not one of its most powerful in recent years.

"They don't have the same quality players that they've had the last couple of years," she said, "but it's still one of the strongest programs in the country."

The coach did not comment on the ease in which the Minutewomen put away Queens. Although the 82-81 final score was dangerously close, UMass had leads of up to 15 points, forcing Queens to play catchup throughout the game.

After such an emotional victory as Tuesday's, the Minutewomen must be careful not to suffer a letdown against Worcester State. The Lancers are not a basketball powerhouse and could be seen as an easy win for UMass, but any signs of overconfidence could prove disastrous to the Minutewomen or any winning team.

Ozdarski commented, "We can't afford to sit on any win. Imagine if we lost to Worcester after beating Queens."

She added that UMass still must work hard on some areas of its game.

"We did some things very well against Queens and some things not so well," she said. "We have to transfer from offense to defense faster and we also need more work on our trap press."

The Minutewomen will be healthy for Worcester State. Both Nancy O'Neil and Jo Balletta played with sore ankles against Queens, but it was hardly reflected in their performances. The game was quite physical, leaving numerous bruises but no serious injuries.

As long as the Minutewomen do not suffer a letdown, tonight's game should prove to be a good opportunity for everyone to play. Ozdarski mentioned one especially good reason for having everyone see action.

"I'd like to play everyone," she said, "because we have another tough one Saturday."

Yes, the Minutewomen do have a big encounter with Providence College at the Springfield Civic Center this weekend, but they certainly cannot overlook tonight's game against Worcester State.

Grapplers face Springfield

By HEIDI BERENSON
Collegian Staff

The UMass Minutemen will take on the Springfield College Chiefs in a wrestling match at Boyden Auxiliary Gym at 7:30 tonight.

UMass coach Dave Amato views the match like this: "I see it as being a very close and exciting match. The outcome will be even with each team winning five, but the eventual outcome will depend on the pins."

Springfield coach Parker said, "This match between the two schools is a traditional rivalry."

Parker also noted, "the Springfield UMass wrestling match is always a good match".

The Springfield grapplers arrive at the match with a 6-2-1 record. The UM grapplers have a 1-7 mark.

UMass will be wrestling at full strength with this lineup:

at 118 lbs. — Dave Daley
at 126 lbs. — Harry Conforti
at 134 lbs. — Larry Otsuka
at 142 lbs. — Keith Dixon
at 150 lbs. — Steve Jabaut
at 158 lbs. — Kevin Griffin
at 167 lbs. — Dana Cormier
at 177 lbs. — Mike Riley
at 190 lbs. — Bob Spaulding
Heavyweight — Dennis Fenton

Both the Chiefs and the Minutemen are in the process of rebuilding their teams.

"Each team is favored in three matches throughout the year, and in this match I see each team as equal", Parker said.

He added, "Otsuka, Griffin, and Fenton are all very good, and are favored."

Amato promises, "The match will definitely be very close and very exciting."

The junior varisty team, under coach Ron Peligra, will begin its match at 6:30, and both the varsity and JV matches are free to all UMass students.

This Saturday the UM grapplers will travel to Albany, N.Y. to participate in a quadrangular match. The other teams slated to wrestle are: Albany, Coast Guard, and C.W. Post.

★ INAUGURAL-77 ★

By RICK GUREGHIAN

WASHINGTON, D.C. — For Jimmy Carter, citizen of Plains, Georgia, it was the beginning of his dream come true. He had walked more miles, shaken more hands, given more speeches, and suffered the most criticism of any Presidential hopeful in the Republic's 201 year history. And on this cold, wintry day in January, the Capitol's temperature hovering at a warmer-than-usual 32 degrees, the man from Plains experienced the culmination of a quest many dare, but few accomplish.

His family looking on, and some 100,000 citizens watching from the Capitol grounds, Carter took the Constitutional Oath of Office from Supreme Court Chief Justice Warren Burger. Seconds earlier, he had listened in pensive silence as his Vice-President Walter Mondale had been sworn in by Speaker of the House Thomas P. O'Neill, III.

But now it was his turn. For the 39th time in American history, an American President would be sworn into office. And with his left hand on a Bible, his right hand raised in solemn manner, he listened, then repeated, after Justice Burger intoned the Constitutional Oath.

"I, Jimmy Carter, do solemnly swear ... that I will faithfully execute ... the office of President of the United States ... and will, to the best of my ability ... preserve, protect, and defend ... the Constitution of the United States ... So help me God."

The crowd roared, a new era had begun. And just as quickly, the new President made reference to the past, and his predecessor, citizen Gerald R. Ford.

In his Inaugural speech, he began with heartfelt praise, saluting the former President "for all he has done to heal our land." The 38th President of the United States stood, biting back tears, listened as the crowd paid him thanks in a two-minute standing ovation. He then sat down, and wistfully listened as the 39th President of the United States continued his homily.

His speech was unexciting though solid with hope, but his strength came from the promise of renewing lost ideals, gone astray in eight years of Republican rule. Almost as quickly he bade farewell, and shunning the protocol of past Inaugurals, walked with his daughter Amy, and wife Rosalynn, to the White House.

It was a symbol of Carter's future that the man would shed tradition, and seek bolder, more imaginative areas to explore. He had already made good his promise to pardon Vietnam era draft resisters, that coming one short day after his ascension to power.

The beginning of a new era always signals good fortune. And this will be no different. History shall record the present in stark, bold terms. Let our future as a nation be resplendent in comparison.

Inaugural scene and heard

By SPENCER VIBBERT

We came to Washington expecting either a snake-pit or a land of milk and honey. Nothing in-between. For aspiring journalists, (and expiring was more the word for our state after those mad 72 hours) in search of only truth and purity, Carter's Inauguration was going to be a chance to wring significance out of the very ice on the sidewalks.

We would set this one straight. Armed with swords and flash-bulbs we would slice our way through the thorny brush of politicans' rhetoric. We would hack our way through the swamp of waiting-lines, tasteless hoeurs d'eouvres, campaign blather, and interminable peanut jokes. In order...in order to bring back golden nuggets of unadorned truth. Yes! Golden nuggets of unadorned truth!

Who's on the take? Which Senator whips his secretary? What's Jimmy Carter really like? (intoned three days straight with many new refrains) Does Tip O'Neil hire college kids who interview him? Is Bardyl Tirana a committeeman or a species?

We'll whip this thing in line, we told ourselves. We'll get to the bottom of this ungodly mess they call the nation's capitol. Of course it didn't work out anything like that.

After a painful Wednesday morning, fighting professionals for press credentials (a scene that reminded one of nothing so much as animals lining up at a trough) I sleazed my way into one of two "Vice-Presidential Receptions" held at a monstrous red-brick building known as the Pension Building.

This consisted of hundreds of elegantly dressed men and women, some from Georgetown, more from Georgia, sipping two-dollar drinks to the strains of an Air Force orchestra. Vice-President elect Mondale and his wife and family, were shaking hands in an endless waiting line that passed before an elevated press platform where cameras buzzed and lights kept flashing.

It was a cheerful affair but not a riotous one. The well-dressed and well-placed donors and VIP's moved gracefully around the ornately Victorian interior as confident of themselves as brahmins at a Boston dining club. Yet there were many blacks, Jews, and unreconstructed Southerners in the crowd, some dressed in Brooks Brothers suits, others in double-knit polyesters, and this probably said as much as anything about the kind of heterogenous ruling class Washington would see for the next four years at least.

One could make out Leonard Woodcock, the United Auto Workers President, among the guests, as well as Don King, the fight promoter, holding court in a corner of the room. There was a handsomely tailored Henry Aaron signing autographs at one end of the room, and an entirely forgotten Milton Schapp, talking to only his wife, at the other.

Soon Mondale took the microphone announcing that his former running-mate would be "one of the greatest Presidents in our history." Hearty applause.

As people left, Maynard Jackson, the paunchy but slick black mayor of Atlanta was having photographs taken of himself with a group of white Southern industrialists, arm and arm beside a marble column. If there was historical irony in this, few noticed.

> They are a very honor-conscious people and it's a kind of perverted honor, and if somebody wrongs somebody else or you think they have, the clan will go and kill him and they will have no compunction about doing it.
> James Dickey, in an interview with the Washington Star, speaking about certain backwoods Southerners

Dickey might as well have been speaking of the "Massachusetts Ball" held Wednesday night in the Presidential room of the Mayflower Hotel. There mean-spirited hacks and partisan organizers gathered at a cash bar to do what Boston politicos love so much to do: hurl invective at the other guy's troops.

Joe Timilty was at the door, basking in the glow of having delivered Carter Philadelphia, and generally playing the "hale-fellow-well-met." Out in the lobby Kevin White's boys were spreading rumors that the 5 dollar entrance fees were going into the State Senator from Mattapan's pocket.

Kevin himself was conspicously absent as were Messers. O'Neill Kennedy, and Brooke not to mention the slew of Massachusetts Congressmen. As it was, it was a generally uninspiring evening with tomorrow's. President and his future hardly even a topic of conversation. The air was stale and hot, the drinks expensive, the women few. It was like a smoke-filled back-room without the politicians. Only the spear-carriers were there. The celebrities were the newmen and they no doubt felt it was the worst story they would have to file all week.

When an excited journalist went up to Dick Flavin and said the whole thing was a Joe Timilty circle jerk, Flavin replied, "They're not all Timilty people," with more than a trace of double-entendre in his voice.

Father Drinan made a quick entrance and even quicker exit proving, one supposed, that a Roman Catholic priest knew a bad party when he saw one.

Carter upsets Mass. politicos

By RICK GUREGHIAN

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Hardly any of them were there, those Massachusetts politicians who, for the last eight years, had been the embodiment of a Democratic government in hiding. Jimmy Carter's victory had brought forth the seeding of the New South and, in another sense, the death knell of the Northeast Democratic stronghold.

Of all the events that set such speculation forth, the most conspicuous are the Inaugural parties, for these are the gala's that usually bring forth all sides to booze, and talk, and gloat. But there would be no gloating by the Northeastern States Democrats, only indignant approval of their new Democratic President and his not-so-acceptable roots.

On Wednesday evening, January 19th, one day prior to the Inauguration, there was an impromptu party held for and by the Massachusetts delegation. Even though it was one of the latter announcements of party festivities, almost 1,000 people, through the evening, managed to pack themselves into a small ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel in downtown Washington.

Of the thousand or so jammed into the ballroom, only one happened to be a Massachusetts Congressman. Edward J. Markey, the new Representative from the 7th District, made an appearance late in the evening, and that alone is a tip-off as to how unimportant this party was.

After all, Thomas P. O'Neill, III, otherwise known as 'Tip,' even better known as 'Mr. Speaker,' (in Bostonese, 'Mistuh Speakuh) didn't show. He was sick, and when seen earlier in the day, definitely resembled a man recovering from an illness. But it was awful hard, awful hard for the Massachusetts' puls, and the Speaker himself, to deny feeling just a bit of annymosity toward upstart Carter. Other than showing up at the Inauguration, and swearing in Walter Mondale, O'Neill was nowhere to be found the rest of the week. He didn't show up at any of the pre-Inaugural parties, including the Massachusetts one, and it was a surething that he wouldn't be in attendance at the Inaugural Ball at the D.C. Armory. Heck, no Massachusetts Irishman would be caught dead in a pack of rebels. The South indeed!

But as ridiculous as it seems, the freeze toward Carter was real. Few Massachusetts heavies showed up, oh, maybe one or two slid in past the boys charging $5.00 to sample the Stop & Shop cheese, and the bottom-shelf drinks at Georgetown prices. But the celebrity gazing was weak at best.

Joe Timilty, sometime state senator, but more often political opportunist, showed up to partake. But he put the damn thing on, he and three or four of his boys who worked with him in Pennsylvania for Carter. Talk to a different person and you'll get a different answer. "He saved Pennsylvania," said one party-goer; "He had shit to do with it," countered another, gleefully adding, "and he damn near blew it." Whichever, you could tell the Massachusetts was on its way out.

The Massachusetts politicians want nothing to do with Jimmy Carter, and outside of formal government workings, none will. O'Neill professes no ill-feeling, neither does Senator Edward Kennedy, or for that matter, any of the Massachusetts politicians. But they're Democrats, and publicly they won't voice any opposition. And all of the House delegation are veterans, that is, except for Markey. As a novice in Congressional ins and outs, Markey holds no ill-feelings toward the Georgian President. In fact, he's been at odds more with O'Neill, his Speaker, his fellow Massachusetts chum, than with the man-with-the-drawl from Plains.

Thomas P. O'Neill Jay Saret

You would think that the Massachusetts pols would appreciate Carter's feat, starting from the outside post and whuppin' every comer. You would think they would — but they don't!

Jimmy, as he likes to be called, stepped on a few toes on his way to the Presidency. He created an image of sluggards in Congress, which Congress does not like; talked about bigshot crooks, which the American people think Congress is; and did away with a lot of Senators and Congressmans Presidential aspirations in the primaries, which still smarts. Do they like Jimmy Carter? Hell, no! But then, he's not so fond of them.

Few of the heavy pols' received tickets to the Inaugural parties. More citizens, those who put up the Carters, Jimmy and Rosalynn, when he was a no-name running for President, received invitations. They were the one's who showed up at the parties, people from all

Washingtonian observers speculate, sound off

By SPENCER VIBBERT
Collegian Staff

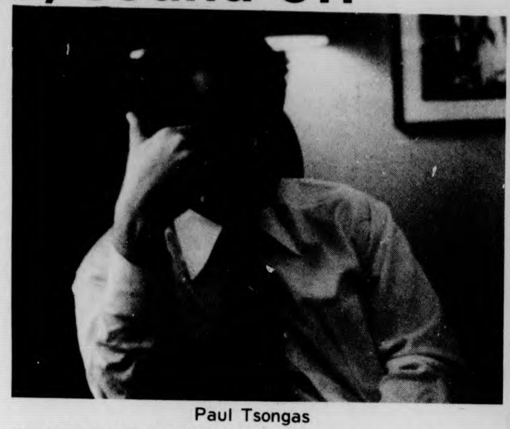
The day after, Martin Nolan, chief of the Boston Globe's Washington Bureau was saying of Carter, "nobody's got a fix on him ... he didn't reveal his personality."

Asked if Carter would get results from Congress on his much discussed executive branch reorganization plan Nolan replied, "He'll get very, very good cooperation on the bureaucracy plan ... Jack Brooks says they'll have a bill in 45 days, Carter will probably amend it on the floor, and then he'll sign it."

Rep. Paul Tsongas, (D-Mass.) as frank and unassuming as any congressman one was likely to meet, spoke highly of Carter's character, though he said he favored public jobs spending rather than a tax-cut to stimulate the economy.

"I'm very hopeful," Tsongas said, "He's a very bright individual ... he may well be one of the brightest people ever to serve in the White House ... he seems to have an amazing capacity to absorb large amounts of information."

Tsongas also said the Korean investigation was full speed ahead, and wouldn't be shut off because now "the Justice Department is in on it." He was also confident the country would get a strong strip-mining bill under President Carter. The biggest problem in Congress, was in Tsongas' judgement, the "good-old boy syndrome" which was, he felt, as least being partially changed as a result of the 1974 and freshmen classes in the House of Representatives.



Paul Tsongas

Rev. Robert Drinan (D-Mass.) was likewise hopeful about the Carter presidency, seeing it as differing from Ford's in that there wasn't a "fixation against jobs programs ... He (Pres. Ford) vetoed, I think, everyone we put through." On the nomination of Griffin Bell as Attorney General, Drinan was diplomatic: "He (Bell) wasn't my first choice for the job ... given the new directions implicit in the Congress."

Likewise, columnist Robert Novak was overheard in conversation criticizing Carter for having said a year ago in Sioux City, Iowa he favored an Attorney General whose term was six years and who wasn't nominated by the president. When a friend asked Novak why he hadn't printed this bit of information, Novak chuckled, "Because I like Griffin Bell."

One writer said of Boston Mayor Kevin White's conspicuous absence during Inaugural week, "He's so insecure, he lets Joe Timilty's presence here bother him. If he had any self-confidence he'd just show up anyway."

over the country. The Big Shots? The Leaders of Congress? Well, they were somewhere, but either by force or circumstance, were conspicuous in their absence.

Most of the Congressmen talked to denied any knowledge of ill-feeling toward the new President. But they all had unkind words about his manner, his strategy of seeking office, his succession of public gaffes. Maybe, it was simply the realization that for all the power these men of Congress perceive themselves to hold, had they themselves run for the Presidency, they would've lasted six minutes. But Carter, outsider of Washington's bloated bureaucracy, could cast stones and win. This thing called envy is colored green.

Probably, the coup de' grace had been delivered on Inauguration Day by Jimmy Breslin in his syndicated column.

Read a portion of the column; "I don't like Southern Baptists...I'll admit it: I'm the Diocese of Brooklyn's answer to those rednecks down in Sumter County, Ga., which is where Jimmy Carter was raised. I don't like anybody who comes from south of Newark, N.J. The other problem is religion. When Carter started campaigning this year, he quoted from more bibles than Elmer Gantry. He always talked about religion. The trouble was, he was talking about his religion, not my religion. Once he put religion into politics, I wrote him off."

Maybe so, Jimmy. But he's in the role to write us off now. He holds all the cards, including a goodly number of the leadership positions in Congress. Robert Byrd, the majority leader in the Senate, is a Southerner. So is James Wright, his opposite in the House. O'Neill may be Speaker, but the power overall is shifting dramatically to the South and the West. And with it, the right to speak out.

Massachusetts must now play the muted role, the "Tip" must play his cards close to his vest, and like the Georgian said, "Yankee...have a drink" Who could refuse?

> beginning, a new dedication within our government, and a new spirit among us all. A president may sense and proclaim
> Jimmy Carter's Inaugural Speech Jan 20, 1977

Beside the syntactical impossibility contained in the first clause of the first sentence quoted above, (When is a beginning not new?) Carter said little he hadn't already annunciated on the stump. It is time to bring government back to the people. Government must be moral if it wants the respect of the people. Etc.

The 25 degree weather was actually a relief from the colder temperatures earlier in the week. Few who wanted to were disuaded from coming out to see the new President take the oath of office because of the weather. The noisy crowd who gathered outside the Capitol grounds had a blue sky above them and a moderate wind at their backs so the atmosphere was a little like that of a very important fall football game.

Once inside the grounds you presented a ticket (if you were fortunate enough to have one) to a cop and you were allowed to sit or stand depending on the color of your ticket. The more important you were the closer you got to the platform. Being harrassed by a cop because you weren't select enough to sit in the seat you were seating in, was one way of estimating just what a "People's Bicentennial" consisted of.

The Inaugural platform looked like marble but was actually painted wood. The television networds wanted a fake, raised platform rather than the Capitol steps themselves for better camera visibility.

> He probably feels like the Wizard leaving Oz.
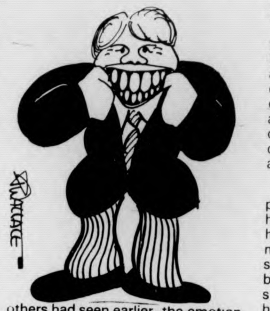
> -a Virginia accountant in conversation after Citizen Ford's helicopter lift-off from the White House South lawn

Carter's finest moment all day was surely his one and a half mile walk from the Capitol to the White House reviewing stand. Here were all these limousines carrying paunchy Cabinet members and long-standing politicians while behind them came a handsome, vigorous, next-President of the United States arm and arm with a wife who obviously loved him very much. He in a black great coat motioning with his free hand to a cheering crowd, she in kelley-green, not a step behind him but looking for all the world like she might burst out in tears of unaffected joy.

I was too far away to see, as others had seen earlier, the emotion Gerald Ford had shown when Carter opened his remarks by thanking his predecessor "for all he has done to heal our land." For his part Ford left gracefully, something of a beaten but not defeated football player, waving to the crowd with his wife, and an oddly out of place Nelson Rockefeller and wife at his side.



Whether or not Ford had been a wizard, as a Virginia accountant suggested, Richard Nixon's counterfeit presidency was probably too early to tell. That Washington would prove to be as unreal as Oz however would be demonstrated that night at the Inaugural Ball for Georgians in the D.C. armory.

Slipping past the guards into a D.C. Armory filled with 5,000 partying Georgians was a little like viewing the 20th century remnants of an entirely different culture.

Red, white and blue bunting covered the gymnasium walls. Silver streamers hung all across the ceiling. Guy Lombardo and his orchestra were playing on the stage, while camera lights from the press platform made as spot-lights on the dance floor.

The Georgians took it all in stride, as did the certified Plains residents who had t.v. cameras following them everywhere except into the bathrooms.

While there was some grumbling from Georgetown hosts and hostesses who found the whole atmosphere slightly hokey, most enjoyed themselves, and many danced. The real grumbling came at about 230 a.m. when it was discovered waiting lines for the coat-rooms were taking upwards of an hour and fifteen minutes.

Evans and Novaks' Doomesday prophecy for the Inaugural Week had of course been wrong. It was a happy, bright couple of days marked by relative informality and small-scale of design. The friction between the Carter camp and the state party leaders that the press had harped on all week seemed not really very evident.

If it was "only an Inaugural" as Jack Germond cautioned in Thursday's Washington Star, it was not without its moments of poignancy; this being the first elevation of a Southerner to the Presidency since that of Woodrow Wilson.

Of course the ones who knew Washington were scouting out the titans like Tip O'Neil and Robert Byrd. The veterans knew you didn't make policy at a reception or on a dance floor. But for many who came up from the Deep South to see with their own eyes the Inauguration of one of their own this was pure vindication. They weren't yelling about it but you could see it in their faces.

And it was something of an object lesson for a pointy-headed liberal from the North, such as myself, to see Southern blacks and whites, laughing together, arm and arm in the victory of one of their own. The rest of the country had never understood the South. Now we would be getting our chance.

O'Neill, better known as 'Tip,' to Collegian writer Rick Gureghian during an interview. "Well, I got the legislative program for the VFW today. They want B-1 bombers. They want the Trident. Rimmen — devastating performance

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

BURLINGTON, Vt. — In Playground slang, you could say that "UMass took Vermont to the cleaners last night."

You could say that, but in more precise terms, the University of Massachusetts basketball team thoroughly whipped the University of Vermont, 98-77 last night before 2,003 fans in morgue-like Patrick Gymnasium.

The Minutemen dominated the game right from the early going as their full-court zone press created several Catamount turnovers, giving UMass several unmolested layups during the first five minutes of play.

The Catamounts just could not handle the pressure the Minutemen were applying on all parts of the floor.

"Yeah, our press worked fine tonight," UMass coach Jack Leaman said, "but last week against Niagara and Villanova our press did nothing for us."

Guard Brad Johnson and forward Mike Pyatt had the hot shooting hands in the first half for the Minutemen. Johnson was deadly from around the top of the key, while Pyatt was bulling his way under the offensive board, scoring on a lot of twisting one-handed layups.

At times it seemed that the Minutemen were going to blow the Catamounts right off the court in the early going, but the accurate outside shooting of Vermont's Warren Prehmus kept the Catamounts within striking distance.

Then with 11:10 to go in the first half, Leaman inserted Alex Eldridge into the lineup and the flashy junior guard inserted a spark into the Minutemen's offensive attack as he made three steals and passed off beautifully to his front court men under the loop.

With Eldridge in the lineup, the Minutemen began to roll and built a solid 52-39 lead at the half.

In the first half alone, Pyatt had 12 points and six rebounds while Eldridge handed out five assists in only 10 minutes of play.

In the second half, the Minutemen could do little wrong as they continued their domination of the offensive and defensive boards and also continued to shoot at a very high percentage.

"We shot as well tonight as we have all season," a somewhat pleased UMass coach Jack Leaman said after the game. "When we shoot like we did tonight, there is no doubt in my mind that we should be considered one of the top teams in New England."

Overshadowed by the fine performances turned in by Pyatt and Eldridge were the solid performances of forwards Jim Town and center Mark Donoghue.

Town finished as the high scorer for the Minutemen with 17 points, while Donoghue connected on 14, six of which came from the foul line. More important, though, was the domination of Pyatt, Town and Donoghue off both the offensive and defensive boards.

"More than anything I was pleased with our rebounding," Leaman said. "I wasn't pleased that much with our defense," he added, but I guess when you shoot over 50 per cent from the field like we did tonight, it offsets the defense."

More than anything else tonight, the one thing that was the most noticeable characteristic of the UMass basketball team was its togetherness on the floor.

"We came in here tonight knowing we had to win this game in order to get back on the winning track," Pyatt said after the game. "We were just determined to go out there tonight and win this one."

So the Minutemen have gotten off on the right foot by winning in convincing style. UMass now has an 8-6 record and faces UConn in a big rematch Saturday night at the Springfield Civic Center.

Hoopwomen want another as Worcester State visits

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's basketball team will attempt to repeat its outstanding performance against Queens as it hosts Worcester State at the Cage tonight at 7:30. The Minutewomen are looking for their fourth consecutive victory.

Coach Mary Ann Ozdarski was obviously very pleased with her team's strong effort against the bigger Queens team.

"It was just a complete team effort," she said. "We beat them with balanced scoring and rebounding. We outplayed them in every department."

Tuesday's win showed the giant strides the UMass women's basketball program has taken, as Queens has been perhaps the biggest name in Eastern women's college basketball over the past few years.

Ozdarski mentioned that this season's Queen squad was not one of its most powerful in recent years.

"They don't have the same quality players that they've had the last couple of years," she said, "but it's still one of the strongest programs in the country."

The coach did not comment on the ease in which the Minutewomen put away Queens. Although the 82-81 final score was dangerously close, UMass had leads of up to 15 points, forcing Queens to play catchup throughout the game.

After such an emotional victory as Tuesday's, the Minutewomen must be careful not to suffer a letdown against Worcester State. The Lancers are not a basketball powerhouse and could be seen as an easy win for UMass, but any signs of overconfidence could prove disastrous to the Minutewomen or any winning team.

Ozdarski commented, "We can't afford to sit on any win. Imagine if we lost to Worcester after beating Queens."

She added that UMass still must work hard on some areas of its game.

"We did some things very well against Queens and some things not so well," she said. "We have to transfer from offense to defense faster and we also need more work on our trap press."

The Minutewomen will be healthy for Worcester State. Both Nancy O'Neil and Jo Balletta played with sore ankles against Queens, but it was hardly reflected in their performances. The game was quite physical, leaving numerous bruises but no serious injuries.

As long as the Minutewomen do not suffer a letdown, tonight's game should prove to be a good opportunity for everyone to play. Ozdarski mentioned one especially good reason for having everyone see action.

"I'd like to play everyone," she said, "because we have another tough one Saturday."

Yes, the Minutewomen do have a big encounter with Providence College at the Springfield Civic Center this weekend, but they certainly cannot overlook tonight's game against Worcester State.

Grapplers face Springfield

By HEIDI BERENSON
Collegian Staff

The UMass Minutemen will take on the Springfield College Chiefs in a wrestling match at Boyden Auxiliary Gym at 7:30 tonight.

UMass coach Dave Amato views the match like this: "I see it as being a very close and exciting match. The outcome will be even with each team winning five, but the eventual outcome will depend on the pins."

Springfield coach Parker said, "This match between the two schools is a traditional rivalry."

Parker also noted, "the Springfield UMass wrestling match is always a good match".

The Springfield grapplers arrive at the match with a 6-2-1 record. The UM grapplers have a 1-7 mark.

UMass will be wrestling at full strength with this lineup:

at 118 lbs. — Dave Daley
at 126 lbs. — Harry Conforti
at 134 lbs. — Larry Otsuka
at 142 lbs. — Keith Dixon
at 150 lbs. — Steve Jabaut
at 158 lbs. — Kevin Griffin
at 167 lbs. — Dana Cormier
at 177 lbs. — Mike Riley
at 190 lbs. — Bob Spaulding
Heavyweight — Dennis Fenton

Both the Chiefs and the Minutemen are in the process of rebuilding their teams.

"Each team is favored in three matches throughout the year, and in this match I see each team as equal", Parker said.

He added, "Otsuka, Griffin, and Fenton are all very good, and are favored."

Amato promises, "The match will definitely be very close and very exciting."

The junior varisty team, under coach Ron Peligra, will begin its match at 6:30, and both the varsity and JV matches are free to all UMass students.

This Saturday the UM grapplers will travel to Albany, N.Y. to participate in a quadrangular match. The other teams slated to wrestle are: Albany, Coast Guard, and C.W. Post.

Fun 'n games at Playfair

By A. TRENEMAN
Collegian Staff

Imagine 300-400 people chanting "All in Good Time, Togetherness, and Howdy Doody" at the top of their lungs... alternately jumping up and down depending on what part of the phrase they were chanting. What particular syllables you yelled was determined by your preference for apples or bananas, whether or not you had worn a pullover sweater during the day, and whether you would prefer sleeping with 600 eggplants or a live elephant.

Crazy and too bizarre to happen? Well... if anyone walked by the Student Union Ballroom last night that's exactly what they saw, and for the people who participated in the Playfair last night, that is exactly what they were doing!

Pamela Kekich and Matt Weinstein created the games in Playfair with the idea that playing is for adults as well as children. They design games that will put the participants in what the designers believe to be people's natural space; cooperating, loving and active.

The games played last night differ significantly from the conventional tag and stickball in that they do not plot one team against another or one person against another. Game paraphernalia such as boards, dice, cards, flags, etc. are not used. No watchers or cheerleaders are present in these games — only participants.

As kids, many of us eventually got turned off to games because somehow we felt like "losers". Playing games, as adults, we can play cooperatively, which, if anyone remembers childhood fights over who got to be the teacher and the student in the make-believe game called school (is it still going on at UMass?) is not easy.

Both Matt and Pamela believe that at the base of all people is a cooperative spirit and that negative, competitive instincts are learned. In the games they designed and we carried out, only the positive is emphasized.

All who attended the Playfair will probably agree that it was fun. It's been a long time since I thought I was an asparagus and hopped around holding my stomach... much less in the presence of hundreds of people.

The evening began with "meeting games," to more or less loosen up the group. Group games, games played with one other person and games played by all were interspersed throughout the two and one half hour play period.

Games involved clapping, singing, yelling, running in slow motion, babbling, trusting and literally supporting other people. The games invariably included smiling, laughing and giggling.

Interspersed between action games were two sharing sessions. One person listened attentively to another talk about play experiences during childhood and what positive expectations you had for the coming semester.

Pamela and Matt believe that people tend to emphasize the negative in their life. The above noted sharings involved only positive things, which, by the nature of their topics, everyone could relate on. Both consider this portion of the Playfair important as it involves a different kind of interaction than active games and encompasses a new way of bringing people together.

The Playfair ended with a giant circle-game in a rather offbeat "Mother, May I..." take-off. Various people volunteered their thoughts on their Playfair experience, and after each thought was voiced the entire circle took "baby-steps" until another volunteered.

"Games are for adults," ..."but let's thank children for teaching us how,". "Let's get together next week," "Touching," "fun", etc. were some thoughts spoken. As in most of the Playfair games, we, the participants, got to end the game.

Pamela and Matt, who both have their Masters Degrees in Education, created these games with the intention that through this natural and different way of interacting, people's light and fun-loving sides would be released.

Blindly groping for other people who were hooting like owls I ran into someone mooing in a cow-like manner and burst out laughing at the pure absurdity of what I was doing... yet I think everyone will agree that ridiculous or not the Playfair was a smashing success and a supportive, positive experience for all.

Perhaps the mood is best explained by a thought expressed during the workshop which took place earlier in the day, "Just remember we're all friends who haven't met yet."

Mass. budget hearings scheduled promptly

BOSTON [UPI] — Hearings on Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' $4.116 billion fiscal 1978 budget proposal will begin in less than a month, House Ways and Means Chairman John J. Finnegan, D-Boston, said yesterday.

Finnegan, who said his staff is already reviewing the package, said he has tentatively set Feb. 16 as the opening date for hearings on the record-high package.

The budget was unveiled Wednesday by Dukakis, who warned that few if any increases would be possible due to revised revenue estimates.

Finnegan said he is hopeful the hearings will be completed quickly. A total of 12 hearing days are expected.

The House Ways and Means chairman said he had not had time to form an opinion on the governor's plan.

Dukakis recommended a budget of $68,088,000 for UMass-Amherst, a figure Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery said wouldforce the University to lay off between 600 and 700 employes.

Bromery said Wednesday that in order to maintain the same quality of service the Amherst campus offered last year, an increase of $6 million over last year's budget would be necessary because of inflation.

The amount proposed by Dukakis was the same amount allocated to the Amherst campus for fiscal year 1977. All three UMass campuses (Amherst, Boston and Worcester) combined would be allocated $104 million under the Dukakis plan. This also is the same amount they were allocated last year.

UMass President Robert C. Wood requested an allocation of $76.376 million for the Amherst campus and $128 million for all three campuses.

Wood said the proposed budget would cripple the University and have "a devasting effect on its faculty, staff and students."

He said if the budget is not increased, faculty layoffs, curtailment of teaching hospital operations and cuts in enrollment will have to be considered.

Meanwhile, criticism of the spending package continued yesterday as William H. Hebert of the Massachusetts Teachers Association (MTA) said one provision in the package is illegal.

The MTA president said state law would bar the state from treating pension programs differently.

The budget would provide a little over $12 million to offset the unfunded liability in the state employes pension system, but no funds for the unfunded liability in the teachers retirement system.

Hebert labeled the governor's plan "clearly illegal and poorly researched."

Courage defeats her disabilities

By MIRIAM B. LEADER
Special Correspondent

Marie Desmond didn't walk till she was five-and-a-half. A doctor in Longmeadow had predicted that she would never walk, but Desmond recalls, "I had a kid sister who was walking, so I decided that I would too."

Desmond, who works in the English department library, was born with cerebral palsy. She faced other serious difficulties. She was born with a cataract which left her without sight in her right eye. However it gives the appearance of functioning because of a skillful operation, she explained.

Overcoming difficulties has been a central theme in Desmond's life. But at 48 she has two post-graduate college degrees, and is librarian of the English department library.

Her first degree was a Bachelor of Arts in English awarded in 1959. In 1967 she received a Master of Arts in English, Creative Writing Fiction, and in 1976 a Master of Fine Arts in English upon completion of a project in technical writing.

The brown-haired Desmond is five feet tall and weighs 125 pounds. She is on a high protein diet to control her weight and because "a spastic burns extra energy." She can't afford to gain weight because it will affect her balance, she said. She is very disciplined about her diet and doesn't eat desserts.

"That's not a problem. I just don't have a sweet tooth," she said.

Desmond enjoys swimming at the N.O.P.E. (Northeast Physical Education) pool for a half-hour every day. She says that swimming is important and enjoyable to her because she can relax and discharge some of the tension that builds up in a spastic person and because she doesn't need to worry about keeping her balance. The exercise also strengthens her back muscles and helps to overcome her lack of balance, known as ataxia.

"I also give lectures on the teaching of swimming to the handicapped," she said.

Another of her activities is going to the physical therapy clinic for exercises several times a week.

Desmond, who used to travel about campus in a special electric cart, said she was involved in an accident in early September. She fell off her small electric cart because she had to dodge two mopeds.

"I was coming out of a parking lot across from Whitmore," she said, "and I had to take a sharp right turn to dodge two mopeds that came off the sidewalk illegally."

MARIE DESMOND

She said she suffered multiple bruises and a lacerated toe. But she was incapacitated for four weeks because it doesn't take much to upset her coordination.

Although Desmond has been driving for 20 years and used to do a minimum of six miles a day, she now faces a new problem because UMass wants her to apply for a learner's permit and take a driving test.

In the meantime her electric cart is impounded at the Physical Plant and she is dependent upon the handicapped students' van. This entails at least six pickups a day.

Desmond feels very keenly that it's most important for her morale to maintain her independence. One way of doing that is having an independent mode of transportation such as her electric cart.

"I used to manage very well with the use of my 'doodlebug'," she said.

She was asked what else keeps her going.

"I believe in God for one thing," she said, "and secondly I believe in putting one foot in front of the available, Desmond depends on the van for handicapped students. This is a service provided on campus by the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs. The van is a long blue vehicle with a very high white roof to accommodate people on crutches. It has a hydraulic lift for wheel chairs.

The van takes Desmond around campus or delivers her at home on Sunset Avenue, but she says that both she and her dog Nikko, who used to trot after her, miss the doodlebug very much.

Desmond has performed a number of services on behalf of handicapped students.

Her Campus Guide for the Physically Disabled is distributed on campus, and requests continue to come in for it from all over the country — Pennsylvania, Oklahoma, Louisiana, California, Colorado.

The booklet describes in detail the buildings on campus that can or cannot be negotiated successfully by the handicapped, and also recommends building improvements.

"The physically handicapped," according to Desmond, "suffer sociologically and psychologically other, one step at a time on a daily basis. I've had plenty of help from many understanding people."

"I'm also a Town Meeting member and have been a member of the Amherst Redevelopment Committee," she continued. "I'm on the Community Facility Building Committee for the Boltwood project, and work with architects for the project who have asked me to lecture at Hampshire College in the Spring semester."

Every day she has to contend with the public attitude toward her condition.

"They act as if it's contagious," she said, "I like to laugh and make other people laugh. It reduces tensions."

Speaking is complex but she says it is not difficult or tiring for her. She used to speak by the inhalation method but in the 50s she learned a new method of manipulating her breath which has produced a more natural voice for her.

Dr. Alice Mills of United Cerebral Palsy in Springfield discovered the method, and Desmond studied it at the Communication Disorders department at the University.

Her electric cart, she said, was designed as a prototype project for the handicapped by the University as a whole, with many people from different departments volunteering free work hours.

With her cart currently not from the ordinarily small barriers of steps, swinging doors, curbs and fast-closing elevator doors. Such obstacles offer difficult, if not insurmountable, obstructions to what otherwise could be an independent life."

Desmond explained that elevators, doors with counterweights, ramps, wide stairs with strong railings, large-sized lavatories with hand rails, make a building usable for a handicapped person.

The booklet points out that: "Other groups of people not usually considered to have mobility problems are the blind, and those with heart conditions, emphysema and cystic fibrosis, etc., who must take into account the fatigue factor in their daily lives; their needs have also been kept in mind."

Desmond also produced and frequently presents a slide show entitled "Architectural Barriers", which illustrates how ordinary buildings not properly equipped present difficulties for the mobility disadvantaged.

"Solutions to these problems are shown as well," she added. "And I was able to take 90 per cent of the pictures myself."

Stereo Co-op offers course in stereo maintenance, repair

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

The Stereo Co-op is now offering a beginners course for anyone interested in learning about the general dynamics of audio equipment, maintenance and repair.

The course will be taught this semester by Peter McLaughlin, a long time stereo fanatic who now runs his own audio business. Debbie E. Herrick, coordinator of the co-op said the course will help emphasize the informative aspect of the co-op.

"We've a co-operative. We're not here to make money, we're here to provide students with audio information. And we'd like to arrange these courses every semester as long as we have the people to teach them," Herrick said.

The co-op has experienced difficulty in the past recruiting volunteers to assist in operating their shop (located in Campus Center Room 161). The shop is presently operated by 12 volunteers who handle over 1000 members and sales of up to $9000 a week.

Because of recruitment problems in past years the technical staff, which provided maintenance and repairs, and the record sales service were discontinued.

However, work by Herrick, co-op President Richard A. Dimambro, and other dedicated volunteers is presently moving to turn the co-op into a more cohesive co-operative.

"We are currently in the process of filing our membership on computer. This will facilitate record keeping and also provide us a quick and easy means for communicating with our entire membership through the mail," said Ms. Herrick.

In other new business, Dimambro has written up plans for rearranging the co-op's shop. The plans provide space to be used as a sound room with a separating wall to enhance the acoustical ambience of the room.

Under construction and soon to be completed is a new sound board capable of handling eight pairs of speakers and seven receivers. According to Dimambro the sound board is hand made and the only one like it in the world.

The sound board acts like a switchboard making it capable for several different types of speakers to be tied into different receivers with the flick of a switch.

Dimambro said that he would like to see the record sales and technical services reinstituted but more volunteers would be needed for said venture.

"The more people, the more work we can do," said Dimambro.

Last semester the imposition of a work requirement on the co-op's members was avoided but it is still a possibility for future consideration Dimambro hopes that such a move wcgg not be necessary.

The next meeting of members and staff is Feb. 6. Anyone interested in signing up for the audio course should contact someone in the co-op's shop. The co-op is open M-W-F, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. The phone number there is 5-1594.

Book exchange eases book buying woes

By DUKE SIMONEAU
Collegian Staff

Tired of paying top dollar for books? Do you want to get a fair price of last semester's texts? The sisters of GSS have the answer for you.

Gamma Sigma Sigma, the national public service sorority, is collecting books today from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the SUB for their semesterly book exchange.

Students bring in their used texts and fill out cards with a desired selling price.

Next Monday through Friday, they will sell these books for those prices plus a 25 cents service charge for each book. GSS President Patti Clark explained that the token fee is to cover the expense of printing the information cards.

"Any incidental profit goes into next semester's book exchange fund," she said.

Clark added that unsold books and cash can be collected February 7, 8, and 9. Unsold and unclaimed books are donated to "Books for Asia".

"The best thing about this is that the students get their price," said Miss Clark, "The Textbook Annex sets an exchange price for books and there's no arguing. If you don't like their price, you can't do anything."

Many times a seller will check back with GSS to see if their books have been sold. If not, they often lower the asking price.

"We never take less than a student asks for a book," declared Clark.

Books cover almost every subject taught at UMass, from hard cover Economic texts to assigned English paperbacks. Last year GSS sold over 2,000 books to and for students.

"A lot of times someone will see all the activity here as they're walking by and stop in. Often they'll ask if we have a certain text that they just bought and how much. If we do, it's always less than they paid at the Textbook Annex. Usually they buy our book and run over to the Annex with their original receipt and return the first book."

Does GSS have any plans for expanding their book exchange?

"With more members we could automatically expand our hours. Also, we're trying to get the University to furnish us with storage space so we can collect books at the end of the semester, store them over the summer or intersession, then sell them right at the beginning of the semester," said Clark.

The National Service Sorority of Gamma Sigma Sigma anxiously awaits the start of this semester's book exchange. (Staff photo by Marilyn Mankowsky)

Classes develop confidence and goals

Adolescent problems met at alternative high school

By JUNE CORRIVEAU
Collegian Staff

Insurmountable problems of adolescence are now being met through an alternative high school located in Hills South.

Three years ago at Hampshire College the alternative education program for adolescents was initiated by the Hampshire County Collaborative, a coalition of Hampshire County school districts.

The Hampshire Collaborative provides young students in Hampshire County with special needs under defined in Mass. General Laws Chapter 766 for special education.

Students ranging from the ages of 14 to 18 enrolled in these special classes are taught by one full time teacher and two teaching assistants.

Volunteer teaching provided by students at UMass facilitates a closer working relationship with students in the alternative school. "The most important aspect of an adolescents development is to let the students feel good about themselves" said full time teacher Marc Simon.

He said, "The alternative school system is small enough to get to know each student on an individual basis."

It also provides structure, develops confidence and helps in setting goals for the students future life experiences.

The importance is stressed of coping with the problems and obstacles adolescents usually face in a traditional school system is stressed.

Students at different age levels were referred to the school because they couldn't keep up with their peers, or were bored. Students on different levels balance and reinforce each other, rather than reinforce stigma attached to special education students.

Mature, more productive persons, applying themselves to an educational committment is the result of the alternative learning experience.

The success of the program has generated other programs in others school systems, in attempts to duplicate the alternative school.

Each course requires a written contract between the student and the teacher. Problems concerning grades or a pass-fail approach to the marking system is met through mutual agreement.

Courses range from psychology and Algebra to silk screening and automobile mechanics.

Facing a life and a working existence, the students are provided the necessary lifes skills needed to cope with the environment.

Selectmen discuss NW road connection

By ROSEMARY CONWAY
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen Committee on the Northwest Road discussed the plans for a connection between Rte. 116 and the proposed extension of Commonwealth Avenue at a meeting last night and decided that they were opposed to the construction of a grand cloverleaf at this intersection.

Options for the connection were introduced by Selectman Michael Cann and UMass Coordinator of Community Relations Gerald Grady.

Selectman Cann said he felt the plans for road construction were unnecessarily extensive for their purpose, which is to make North Pleasant Street safer and less congested. Cann said that an entrance west of the University should be closer to the peripheral and 25 lots. Cann objected to a proposal that would utilize the end section of the previously rejected Northeast Bypass Road.

Grady disliked the change of location in the connecting road, and said the University may need the land there for building at some future date.

"People must keep options as open as possible and consider what could happen with the University in 50 years," he said.

He said he could understand people objecting to building roads ahead of their need, but that eventually these plans would be necessary.

Grady said he would be willing to see the grand cloverleaf construction wait.

Grady also told the committee that the UMass Planning Office has requested that Curran Associates, a Northampton engineering firm, research three aspects of the road situation once more.

Curran Associates will provide an origin-destination study for N. Pleasant Street, an opinion on what the University can do independently of the town (with the Department of Public Works) to make N. Pleasant Street safer, and what changes the town could make on N. Pleasant Street.

The committee decided to move ahead with their own study of the Northwest Road Proposal rather than wait for the Curran Report.

It was also decided that more study must by conducted on the fate of Governor's Drive, which is considered a key to diverting traffic from Pleasant Street. Currently the road is being considered for a partially closing, leaving it open only to UMass buses and Physical Plant vehicles.

The committee agreed that the road leading from Commonwealth Avenue to North Village Apartments under the plan should run as far west of the complex as possible if it is to be constructed farther to meet Puffton Village Apartments.

CC Director announces end of check cashing service

By JEAN CONLEY
Collegian Staff

Students will not be able to pay lab fees nor cash checks at the Student Union cash checks at the Student Union cashier's windows in the near future, according to acting Campus Center Director William F. Field.

Field said at last night's Board of Governors' (BOG) meeting that all involved parties in the cash handling issue agree that there is no alternative but to close the cashiers' windows now in operation in the Student Union. The Department of Public Safety decided last year that the location is not safe, and has to be moved or the services discontinued.

Shortly after the department's decision the idea of a commercial bank was proposed and eventually defeated, and alternate sites for the windows were found to be either undesirable in location or too expensive to equip.

Students will have to cash checks either at the Bursar's office in the Whitmore Administration Building or at one of the several commercial banks in the area.

Lab fees will have to be payed at the Bursar's office.

The Campus Center fee will probably increase $15 for next fall semester, Field said, bringing the fee up to $79 a year. A large part of the increase is the result of a cost of living pay raise for Campus Center employes.

The increase is one of several which students will be required to pay if the Umass Board of Trustees vote to adopt fee increases at their regular April meeting. The overall increase for tuition and fees is projected at $271.50.

In other action, the BOG voted to adopt a new bake sale policy for the Campus Center requiring RSO groups to apply for a bake sale permit at the BOG office. The policy states that:

There will be only one bake sale per week. All applications will be considered on the Monday preceding the designated week.

Only RSO groups not receiving funds from the Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF) are eligible for the bake sales.

The applicant must secure permission to hold the sale from the University Environmental Health Specialist, and must obtain his signature and approval.

A group found in violation of health standards will be required to shut down its bake sale and answer charges before the BOG. If the group is found guilty, they shall relinquish their privilege of holding bake sales for a period of not more than 12 months after the infraction.

The board also adopted a proposal for a University Program Council (UPC) which will program concerts, coffeehouses and major events which reflect all students' needs and concerns.

The group presently programming concerts is the Board of Governors Program Council, but that council can only program events in the Campus Center-Student Union complex.

The proposed UPC would provide for events to be held anywhere on campus. The board agrees that the new council would be more sensitive to the needs of women and Third World students, and will eliminate duplication of effort by ad hoc groups who wished to sponsor concerts.

The new program council would allow for larger concerts and events all over campus now restricted by the size of halls in the complex.

The Board recommended that membership be open on the UPC. In order to be a voting member of the UPC a student must:

Attend three consecutive meetings of the council and not miss more than two consecutive meetings.

Any member who loses his or her voting privilege must attend three consecutive meetings in order to regain it.

Any fee-paying student can become a voting member.

1977—Another Scottsboro?

By NASSER EGA
Black Affairs Editor

Back in 1931, racial prejudice and hatred brought death sentences for nine Black teenagers in Scottsboro, Alabama, after they were falsely accused of raping two white women.

Commentary

This disgraceful, detestable and infamous case is supposed to be past history, and many saw the recent pardon of the last known living "Scottsboro Boy" as proof that the time for such gross injustices in the South is at last over. But, I'm sorry to say, it seems to be that those so called Law Enforcers of the '30s and the ones of the '70s are the same kind of people. Blatant Racists.

In just a few weeks five Black youths in Dawson, Georgia, face trials which could place them in the electric chair for a crime they did not commit — the killing of a white man during a store hold-up. The five youths are James Edward Jackson (18) Roosevelt Watson (17, Johnny B. Jackson (18), J.D. Davenport (18) and Henderson Watson (21).

Early last year, the murder victim went into a small country store on the outskirts of Dawson, a little town not far from Plains, Georgia. The store owner says that four Black males walked in a few minutes later. The owner states that while he was bending over to get something behind the counter, he heard a shot. When he looked up, the four Black men were wearing ski masks and the white customer had been shot in the head.

The Black men, according to the owner, then stole $100 from the cash register and took the owner's .25 caliber pistol — the same caliber of pistol which killed the man. Neither the store owner's gun nor the weapon allegedly used by the robbers has been found to date. The store owner said he hadn't recognized any of the murderers until a full five days after the crime, when he told the police that he thought one of the killers was Roosevelt Watson, a 17 year old. The police, who love to put a Black 'in his place', lost no time in arresting Roosevelt, his brother, cousin, and two friends and charged them with murder.

Why did the owner take so long to identify Roosevelt, who was a regular customer in the store and had a charge account there? How could he recognize ANYONE wearing a ski mask? The shot victim who was able to get into the ambulance without any assistance and lived for six hours wasn't questioned. Why not? Do you know why not? Because any Black will do if they can't find the real killers, after all they all look alike. And it seems that in the South the numbers 4 and 5 can be substituted for each other. Four Blacks robbed the store and five were arrested and charged for it. A simple case of arithmetics.

Threatened by the police with castration and execution after his arrest, Roosevelt was forced to wade for several hours in a chilly pond in a "search" for the murder weapon. His signature was forged to a waiver of his rights. That's typical of the police down South. Black peoples' constitutional rights have always been violated in the South throughout the history of

Wampanoag Indian suit may be ignored by courts

BOSTON [AP] — U.S. District Court Judge Walter J. Skinner has recently taken under advisement a request to dismiss a suit by Wampanoag Indians seeking most of the land in Mashpee.

Attorney James D. St. Clair contended the suit should be dismissed because Congress has not recognized the Wampanoags as an Indian tribe.

Barry Margolin, attorney for the Mashpee Wampanoag Indian Tribal Council, contended the questions raised by St. Clair were settled in lawsuits filed by Maine and Rhode Island Indians — in the Indians' favor.

The tribal council is seeking 16,000 acres of land in the Cape Cod community, and in some parts of adjoining Sandwich.

The suit claims a long-standing federal law requires congressional approval of all sales of Indian land.

The suit has caused problems for Mashpee builders and property owners who say they cannot sell land and put buildings until the court dispute is settled.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., told a group of Mashpee residents Monday the courts, not Congress, should resolve the question.

Henry O. Ehrisman, a retired executive and spokesman for the group, disagreed with Kennedy saying, "We are here for survival. It's time for Congress to bail us out.

"The Indians want to create a sovereign nation within the town of Mashpee."

Carter messin' up!

KANSAS CITY [AP] — The executive director of the National Urban League says President Carter's plans to cut taxes and reduce unemployment are not bold or imaginative enough to satisfy the needs of blacks and the poor.

Unless Carter acts swiftly and decisively, Vernon E. Jordan Jr. said Monday night, "come 1980, we will remind him that the black vote giveth and the black vote taketh away.

"I think he understands that blacks — as any group which helped to get him elected — in fact have a claim on him," said Jordan, who served on Carter's transition team. "Were it not for the black vote, he would still be a resident of Plains, Ga., instead of Washington.

Jordan said the Carter program to fill 600,000 jobs in two years is "too little, too late" because it would put to work only 10 per cent of the unemployed. And the President's tax rebate plan "will not benefit the people who primarily need it," Jordan said.

Black Affairs

The stork is coming

By ANGELA THOMAS
Asst. Black Affairs Editor

A new year has begun along with a new semester of school. One never knows exactly what a new year or a new semester brings, except that it has been known to bring surprises and the unexpected.

Lately a change may have been noticed in the staff members of Black Affairs. A sudden smile on a face for no apparent reason, a giggle that escaped despite attempted suppression, or a face so aglow that one would think the sun was shining directly on it. Along with these peculiarities in the staff members an air of acceptance and quiet pride is present. What acceptance am I referring to? Well it is the acceptance of a responsibility that is about to befall upon Black Affairs.

The staff proudly announces the unexpected. Black Affairs is expecting! Yes, this semester has brought to Black Affairs a much desired and sought after goal, the arrival of a new edition to the family here at Black Affairs.

This new edition is not a new staff member or anything closely related. All that can be said now is that the stork is scheduled to deliver our new added edition sometime next week. Black Affairs prints every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday. Look for it!!!

Attorneys for Joanne Cheismard asked a federal appeals court 1-25 to have her New Jersey murder trial moved to a federal court. The alleged Black Liberation Army leader said she can't receive a fair trial in state court on charges of murdering a state trooper. (UPI photo) this country where 'equal rights' is foremost.

All of the youths are from poor families and none has ever been in trouble with the Law before. They assert that while the robbery and murder was taking place, they were doing a chore for Roosevelt's mother. The hand water pump at her home had broken, and she had sent them walking down the road with gallon jugs which they filled with water from a neighbor's well, several miles away and in the opposite directio from the store.

Although the state of Georgia will attempt to portray them as cold-blooded killers, an attorney hired by The Southern Poverty Law Center who interviewed them at the Terrell County Jail in Dawson, tells a story which shows their true character.

When he asked if they'd like anything to read, they said no because they had two Bibles in their cells. Asked if they would like some playing cards, all five laughed and smiled in embarrassment. Card playing is against their religion.

The state of Georgia states that it will give them a fair trial and jury. Although Blacks make up 60 per cent of Terrell County's population they make up only 26 per cent of the jury pool.

Because each of the youths will get a separate trial, the cost of defending them will be enormous. Investigators must be hired, witnesses tracked down, and experts consulted before their trials. The Southern Poverty Law Center, headed by Julian Bond needs contributions from all of you in order to save these five innocent youths from the chair. This is the most difficult and most costly case in the Center's history. Some of the cases the Center handled and emerged victorious are the Joan Little case, Joan was found innocent of murdering the jail guard who tried to rape her. Fourteen-year-old Minnie Lee Relf and her 12 year old sister is another case in which both were illegally sterilized. They won a federal suit with the Center's help. In one of the Center's first class-action lawsuits, it won a federal court order which forced Montgomery, Alabama's YMCA to open its activities to children of all races.

They said that tragic episodes like the Scottsboro case are truly finished. Who are they kidding?

SPEED READING COURSE TO BE TAUGHT IN AMHERST

The New England Reading Lab is offering their famous speed reading course to a limited number of qualified people here in Amherst. The average person who complete's this course can read 5-8 times faster, and with substantially improved comprehension and better concentration.

This famous course has taught many thousands of people to read over 1000 words per minute with the ability to understand and retain what they have read much more effectively. Average graduates can read most novels in less than one hour. In rare instances speeds of up to 20 times faster have been documented.

For complete details about this famous speed reading course be sure to attend one of the free one hour orientation lectures that have been scheduled. These lectures are open to the public above age 13 (persons under 18 should be accompanied by a parent, if possible,) and the course will be explained in complete detail including class schedules, instruction procedures, and a tuition that is much less than similar courses.

These meetings will be held in the Campus Center Room 903, UMASS-Amherst on Thursday, Jan. 27, at 6:30 p.m. and again at 8:30 p.m., Friday, Jan. 28, at 6:30 p.m. and again at 8:30 p.m., Saturday, Jan. 29, at 2:30 p.m. only, Monday, Jan. 31 at 6:30 p.m. and again at 8:30 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 1 at 6:30 p.m. and again at 8:30 p.m., Wednesday, Feb. 2 at 6:30 p.m., and again at 8:30 p.m. TWO FINAL MEETINGS WILL BE HELD on Thursday, Feb. 3 at 6:30 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

New England fishermen face worst winter hardship in years

GLOUCESTER (UPI) — Michael Orlando has been fishing for 25 years, but this has been one of the worst winters he can remember.

"We've had nothing but winds, and I mean big winds, 50 to 60 miles per hour," said Orlando, 54, director of the Fisheries Union in Gloucester, Mass. "This is one of the worst winters I can recall in all my time on the waterfront."

Winter is causing hard times for fishermen all along the Atlantic coast.

In New England, many fishermen have been forced to keep boats docked because of severe cold and winds.

Farther south, in Maryland, bone-chilling cold has gripped Chesapeake Bay and thousands of fishermen are out of work.

"It's just one of nature's ways to put you in your place," said Larry Simms, 39, president of Maryland Watermen's Association. "It's a little frustrating. You know that you can't fight nature, but it's a little hard to accept when the bills keep coming in."

Orlando said winters usually are bad for fishermen.

"If they go out the wind is high, the seas are high. Everything freezes. Boats ice up. A boat can capsize," he said.

Orlando said fishermen in his union grossed $20 million last year. If January is any indication, 1977 will fall far short of that total. "They haven't even got $200,000 yet. We should be getting $1.5 million a month," he said.

The freeze on Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries has put at least 5,000 fishermen, clammers and oystermen out of work and cost "probably twice that many jobs indirectly," according to Simms. Those working the northern section of the bay have been unemployed since the week before Christmas.

"We got another cold front coming in again this week," Simms said. "That will put us back another three weeks. I figure the shortest time we might get out there is three weeks and maybe as long as five or six weeks.

"It hurts my pocketbook. I can't work. I haven't got any money coming in at all."

Joseph Favaza, 48, owner Fishermen's Wharf in Gloucester, which sells supplies to fishermen in exchange for wharfing privileges, called the winter "the worst in 10 years."

"Some of the bigger boats can go out," he said. "It's hitting the small fishermen more than anybody else."

In the old whaling town of New Bedford, about 75 miles south of Gloucester, the situation appears to be less severe.

"It's affected us a little bit," said John Burt, head of the 900-member New Bedford Fishermen's Union. "Some of the ice is frozen in the harbors and sometimes they haven't been able to get out."

Pardon protest blocked

CONCORD, N.H. [UPI] — A federal judge refused Thursday to prevent Republican Gov. Meldrim Thomson from lowering the U.S. flag in protest of President Carter's pardon of Vietnam War draft resisters.

U.S. District Court Judge Hugh Bownes said federal laws on the flying of the U.S. flag were "plainfully meant to serve only as a guide to use by civilians."

Thomson ordered U.S. and New Hampshire state flags to be lowered to half staff at all state buildinns through Friday of this week.

Plymouth selectman Robert Crowley asked the federal court Thursday to enjoin Thomson from ordering the lowering of the U.S. flag.

"The flag cannot be lowered to protest anything," Crowley said.

Bownes said New Hampshire has its own laws regarding misuse of the flag.

"There being little probability of success on the merits, the petition for temporary restraining order or preliminary injunction is denied," Bownes said. He noted the U.S. Supreme Court has said in the past that "freedom to differ is not limited to things that do not matter much. That would be a mere shadow of freedom. The test of its substance is the right to differ as to things that touch the heart of the existing order."

Boston has 37th murderless day

BOSTON [AP] — Boston went into its record 37th day without a murder yesterday, the police said.

"We don't know exactly why," said chief of the homicide squad, Det. Lt. Jerome P. McCallum, "but the Good Lord is shining down on us and given us a moratorium on murder."

The city has not recorded a murder since Dec. 22, and McCallum, 16 years on the job, can't recall another time like it.

McCallum and his staff aren't sure why the killing has stopped, but believe a new gun law requiring a mandatory one-year jail sentence for possessing firearms without a license has held down violence.

"To think that 10 lives have been spared," said McCallum, referring to the number of murders in January a year ago. "I'm going to package it if I can find out what is causing it and give it to my brother officers."

The moratorium followed a year in which Boston homicides dropped by 32 per cent to 82 from 119 in 1975, the largest decline of any large U.S. city. It was the first full year of operation of the Bartley-Fox firearms law.

Boston's population is more than 600,000.

"There is no doubt in our minds that this law is working", said Retired Judge John J. Fox, who helped write the law. "It's the first major, viable step in the war against crime. It will be the law of the country before we are through."

He said between 1,000 to 2,000 persons have been prosecuted under the law since it went into effect late in 1975.

Under it, judges have no choice but to sentence an offender.

"It's obvious that there are fewer guns in evidence," Fox said, claiming there were an estimated two million hand guns in Massachusetts.

Not everyone believes the law is behind the halt in murder in Boston.

"That Gilmore out there, he might deter homicide," said Detective Lt. Sam Albany, referring to the execution last week of Gary Gilmore in Utah and the effect of the publicity over the postponements.

Albany found James Drummey, 36, dying from multiple rifle shot wounds in the head at the foot of 13 steps in the Jamaica Plain section on Dec. 22 in the last recorded murder in Boston.

Carter to face early nuke showdown

A bitter nuclear power dispute in this small seacoast town may force the Carter administration to take a clear stand on atomic energy within weeks of the recent inauguration.

The outcome of the controversy — probably the first test of the new Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) chief — will set a precedent for the future of nuclear affecting hundreds of plants, says former EPA deputy administrator John R. Quarles.

The Seabrook project first made headlines last August when protesters staged two occupations of the construction site, triggering the first mass arrests of the anti-nuclear power movement.

The stage for the current showdown was set early in December when outgoing EPA had Russell Train declined to reverse a Boston Regional EPA ruling that the cooling system for the proposed $2 billion Seabrook Nuclear Power Station was "unacceptable."

Regional Director John McGlennon ruled in November that the cooling design for the twin 2,300-megawatt reactors posed a potential threat to marine life and the coastal fishing industry.

The cooling system calls for two mile-long pipes, each 19 feet in diameter, to be extended into the ocean. The pipes are to carry 1.2 billion gallons of water per day into the plant for cooling, returning it to the Atlantic some 40 degrees Fahrenheit warmer than before.

The design is a departure from most operating nuclear power plants, which have self-contained cooling systems.

The Public Service Company (PSC) of New Hampshire, the majority stockholder in the plant, termed McGlennon's decision "arbitrary, capricious and fickle."

"It's just incredible," said PSC President William Tallman. "We simply do not understand how such a decision could have been made, and we intend to fight it all the way."

PSC appealed the decision to National EPA Director Train, who agreed to "review" the regional ruling. But because of the lengthy review process, the final decision will not be made before early February, well into the Carter administration.

PSC, which has some 600 workers on the site and has already spent $300 million, vowed to continue construction during the appeals process and to carry the case to the federal courts if necessary.

Since PSC started planning the giant facility in the early 1970s, the reception in Seabrook, a coastal tourist town of 5,700, has been lukewarm. Last March the townspeople, fearing radiation and possible harmful effects on fishing and clamming, voted 748-.632 against the proposed plant.

But backed by conservative Republican Governor Meldrim Thomson, the utility received its construction license from the Nuclear Regulatory Commission (NRC) in July and began construction.

Anti-nuclear groups from around New England soon coalesced into an umbrella organization known as "The Clamshell Alliance." Representing groups from six New England states, it began organizing a non-violent grass-roots campaign to stop construction at Seabrook.

The first clash came August 1 when the group staged a rally within a mile of the Seabrook site, attracting more than 600 nuclear opponents. Eighteen "Clamshellers" walked from the rally to the construction site carrying saplings and young vegetable plants. When they began gardening, Seabrook police moved in, dragged them away and charged them with criminal trespass.

Four days later, during the official ground-breaking ceremonies, candidate Jimmy Carter stole the headlines when he told reporters in nearby Manchester than nuclear power "ought to be minimized, it ought to be a last resort."

In one of Carter's most explicit comments on nuclear power he said that plants should be "located where people don't live, where the environment will not be destroyed, with the reactor core beneath ground level..."

On August 22 the Alliance staged a second rally that drew more than 1,500 opponents. A group of 180 who had undergone special training for the occupation again marched onto the site accompanied by three lawyers and a swarm of newsmen.

Gaid Guy Chichester, an Alliance spokesperson from Rye, N.H., "We wanted to make it clear that we operate within a strict non-violent framework, and that we bear no animosity to the police or anyone else."

The New Hampshire State Patrol arrested the marchers and charged most of them with criminal trespass. But 10 marchers — who had also been arrested August 1 — were indicated for violating a court injunction against the occupation and were sentenced two weeks later to six months in prison. They are currestly free on appeal.

The Alliance termed the occupation "the shot heard 'round the world." Since then organizations in upstate New York, Northern California and other locations have begun planning mass occupations of nuclear sites — a tactic already common in France and West Germany.

David Hartsough, a representative of the San Francisco office of American Friends Service Committee (Quakers), says that a coalition of organizations is planning a spring occupation of the giant Diablo Canyon Plant in San Luis Obispo, Ca. He says residents there are alarmed by plans and construction for four reactors that are within several miles of an active earthquake fault.

Hartsough says the organizers of last November's defeated anti-nuclear ballot initiatives are "very excited about the movement toward non-violent occupations." New England's Clamshell Alliance has planned another occupation of the Seabrook site for April 30, 1977, an event they hope will attract more than a thousand participants.

In the meantime, the NRC is studying the impact of the regional EPA ruling, which could prompt a construction halt at the Seabrook plant.

But even before that, the new EPA administrator will have to make a decision on the plant's cooling system, putting what may be America's hottest nuclear potato right in Jimmy Carter's lap.

Harvey Wasserman writes for the Pacific News Service.

It isn't safe...

It's quiet. Quieter than it was. It gets quieter every day. It seems, sometimes, that I am the only one who misses the noise. I know there are others, but they stay so quiet. It's not safe to make noise.

At least they don't lock us up anymore. They are even letting some of us out of the prisons and into the country for the sake of keeping us quiet. So we stay quiet. Who are we to fight the powers at hand?

It's sort of clever, the way they keep us so quiet, so placated. Hey, you can't get a job if you don't follow the unwritten rules. It's not so easy finding friends to follow if the media keeps pointing out how human you are. No one ever falls for a human hero. You have to be a god or the son of a god. And nothing gets done without heros. Everything simply stays quiet and progress moves so slowly.

And culture, hell, look what they've done. They've wiped out all we brought here and made us all Americans. And that means jackshit. The only ones with a hint of something real are black or old and with no usable power. Not the way things are.

And how can you get angry when you have never known anything better? Take away the history and you take away the fight. Women have been cheated out of history so long that they've accepted the quiet role. Hell, look how far we've come. Then contrast it with how far we could have come given a rightful history, given the tools we were taught did not exist for us. How can we sit so quiet now? Why aren't we angrier? It is so much easier to be quiet.

And the pressure. Peer pressure is so emphasized. There is such a fear of being different, of standing out. And it's not clothes or style anymore, those definitions have melted away. It's the public self that there is a watch out for. Everything has the aspect of a beauty pagent, where every plastic smile is counted on a magic, all-seeing score card and then torn apart when you're not there.

America is dying. The freedom we drew our spirit from has become the freedom to starve.

Impress them, we are told. Impress them first, and hide your true self. The object now is the Make It and forget about the other guy. If you are out for the public good, there has to be something in it for yourself. It doesn't make sense any other way, does it? The pressure is to succeed the way they want you to, nothing more. Just keep it quiet, keep it down.

It seems strange that only seven years ago the pressure was to become involved, to do for others. It was loud then. The noises were friendly noises, they were well meant. The noises meant that there was action. That there were people who saw that something needed change and then went about changing it. It all ended too soon and the unfinished noises haunt this silence with the could-have-beens and the dying dreams of the people we used to believe in.

America is dying. The freedom we drew our spirit from has become the freedom to starve; to do without; to sit at home waiting for a job; to live in your car when the rent on your migrant-worker-housing is too high; to talk about the freedom and do nothing to attain it. In our easy silence we have given up democracy and the right to control our own lives. We are so easily convinced that we are the richest nation, that we are well off. We have stopped believing that we can do better, for ourselves and for the other struggling nations and nations to be.

We are content in silence, but we are alone in that silence. No one else will support us, if we will not even support ourselves. And we wonder, in all this quiet, where we are, who we are and what will become of us. We have forgotten how to do for ourselves. We are speechless.

It is quiet now. There is no storm cloud of action forming on the horizon. How quiet can it get?

Acting university

To the Editor:

So what's this University coming to? The chief zoo-keeper here was under inspection by the Peanut King of America for the position of Secretary of the Interior. Now, having been outbeaten for the lushy position, Bromery is being considered for Understudy to the Secretary of the Interior, better known as Undersecretary.

Now, should our Chancellor have the job offered to him, what will result is an "Acting" University with understudies of our own. Paul L. Puryear, presently Acting Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs and Provist, will fill Bromery's seat and become Acting Chancellor.

Robert L. Woodbury, presently Acting Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs, will fill Puryear's vacancy becoming Acting Acting Vice Chancellor of Academic Affairs and Provost.

Then an anonymous fact will fill Woodbury's seat as Acting Acting Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs.

And worse yet, there will be an Acting Acting Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance in the cast since we don't yet have an Acting Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance.

And while the ten year search begins to fill all these positions with permanent faces, the Campus Center will probably collapse, it having no director either.

But please, don't let these technicalities outwit you. Life goes on ... and life is an Act ... so who cares if it is an Acting Act?

Captain's log: Star date 7701.28

The crew has safely returned from the pleasure island, relaxia, in the outermost regions of the galaxy. But no sooner did we break orbit, we received a priority one message from star fleet command.

"Coming on main screen captain."

"Thank you lieutenant."

"U.S.S. Intersession, this is command headquarters, Admiral Wood speaking. Captain, I have a rather unusual mission for you and your crew."

"We've been on unusual missions before sir."

"Yes, I know, but none like this. I want you and your entire crew to proceed to the planet Earth and to assume an orbit which will bring you directly overhead the Northeastern section of the United States."

"I believe I know the area."

"Good. Then I want all of you to beam down to the town of Amherst in the state of Massachusetts."

"Purpose?"

"Purpose, captain, is so all of you can become students at the University of Massachusetts."

"Students?"

"Affirmative and you are to proceed there immediately. Star fleet command out."

The large viewing screen on the bridge went blank and Kirk realized he was flanked by Mr. Spock on his right and Dr. McCoy on his left.

"Jim, they can't do this to us!"

"They can do anything they want doctor. Spock, what do you make of this?"

"Unknown, captain. I need more information before I can come to a logical conclusion."

"All right, gentlemen, he said become a student but he didn't say when. Mr. Sulu, plot us a course to Earth, sub-light speed."

"I don't understand this Jim."

"Neither do I, Bones but unless we can do something about it, we're going to school."

"Captain, I believe I have a suggestion."

"Go ahead Spock."

"I refer to an old Earth custom called an 'excuse'.

"Of course! Lieutenant Uhura, get me star fleet command." Moments later.

"Star fleet command, admiral Wood here."

"This is Kirk, admiral. I'm afraid we won't be able to attend school."

"Your orders are quite clear captain."

"But admiral, we're not finished out here in space. We've got more adventures and journeys and narrow escapes to get involved in."

"You have no choice captain and you must get there as soon as possible."

"Admiral, this is Spock. Logically speaking. We are best suited to remain in this quadrant of space. To return to Earth would create innumerable questions and worries. We belong out here."

"Whether you like it out there or belong there is no concern of mine. Your orders are clear. Star fleet out."

"But Jim, what about our purpose here in space?"

"Well Bones, space will always be there and we can always return."

"Are you sure about that Jim?"

"Spock, any last thoughts?"

"Since we have our orders, I suggest we prepare ourselves."

"Logical as always, Mr. Spock. Lieutenant Uhura, send this message to star fleet headquarters:

"Have accepted orders and are proceeding to Earth. Intersession over and out."

Let them eat frisbees!

Tonight's the night, the first Friday night of the semester. Luckily enough, Orchestra Luna and the luna players will be gracing the stage in the Hatch tonight and tomorrow night (in case Saturday night is your bag). If you have the wheels and the time, another option is NRBQ at the Shaboo Inn in Willimantic, Conn. the Q is extraordinary.

What else has the semester got in store for us? Well, the powers that be have finally seen the light and are sanctioning a frisbee course. This wonderful little gold nugget will be held on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 9:30. Prospective students should run down to Boyden, and register before the frisbee team players fill up the opening seats in the class.

For me especially, these little academic highs are particularly enjoyable to experience because I was out in the working world last semester on internship. It feels good to be back with the masses. I hold much sympathy for all of you — running around signing up for classes the other day was a more harrowing experience than my busiest day on the job while interning.

In any event, the semester looks like it will be a notable one. (The spring semester usually is anyway.) The student senate was working like a pack of busy little beavers over intersession and have some wonderful things planned for the spring concert.

The senate also seems to be filled with higher than usual amounts of vigor and spunk. Tommy Kerrins, senate treasurer, tells us that the University administration is trying to buy off the senate by offering a token amount of money if it will stop bugging them about not being permitted to use the University wats line. Ruth Green, Vice Chancellor Woodbury's assistant (he's on the other side) admitted at the senate meeting Wednesday night, that it "was implied" in a monetary offer.

The administration has been trying to buy off the students of this campus for years. They placate, twist, listen but don't hear, and always refuse to bargain with us on anything that has any substance.

Though a recent federal study indicated that students are more conservative than their counterparts of ten years ago, that doesn't indicate that they should always assent in silence to the wishes of a conservative administration. We must look out for our own interests, which the administration does not do.

Every student that attends this great land grant institution of higher learning is a member of the student government association. I would hope that each would make an effort to bother the student senators in their office on the second floor of the student union and make them accountable. Though I do not suspect the senate hierachy nor its senators of any larger than life misdeeds (we all fall prey to the little misdeeds), the keener the interest shown in the work done there, the greater the quality of the work.

I don't want to ramble on too much longer here, but I will say that it's good to have everyone back, classes are a great thing to experience once again, and while I'm looking forward to the easy student life, in order to make it easier still on all of us, let us look out for our own prurient interests and be suspect of the powers that be — even if they are throwing a frisbee course our way.

The tender aged

By DIANNE QUIGLEY

I am watching an old woman walking slowly and cautiously down the street. Usually the young turn their heads away from the elders, afraid to see the wrinkles, the white hair, the feeble movements, the decay of a body once filled with vitality. But today I watch her very carefully and try to look beyond her physical being and into her thoughts.

I wonder about all the experiences she has had, all the learning and knowledge she has acquired, the never-ending river of memories that must continuously flow through her mind. I ponder in amazement the many winters, snowstorms and comings of spring she has witnessed and experienced. She must have known so many types of people, had so many friends, accustomed by now to their many comings and goings.

And then, I wish I could hold her perspective. Oh, how this life must seem to her now. She has seen so many years and decades, so many trends. How she must long for those traditions we so sadly let slip out of style. I know not how she handles seeing so much luxury, the ease of our lives, the super-highways, electric "this and thats" and hobbies ranking a weak second to the almighty television.

If she was close to nature, I could not imagine how she has coped with seeing once beautiful fields of flowers and high grass turned into urban housing, or her favorite apple orchards cut down to make room for restaurants or factories and a river she sat by each da, left still and discolored by careless pollution.

I envision this old woman as a symbol of strength and endurance to have survived so many losses. I regard her with a respect so often not given. I cannot help but see her as precious to our human race as the infants and children.

Daring not to wonder how she perceives the younger generations, I, tearfully, see her now stop and hesitate, before entering the loneliness and isolation of her rest home institution.

Energy Administration program alleviates high prices on East Coast imported oil

WASHINGTON [AP] — The Federal Energy Administration proposed yesterday to include No. 2 home heating oil in a cost-equalizing program to keep the highest cost of oil imports from driving up East Coast fuel prices.

A spokesman said that if the plan is adopted, after public hearings, it would be applied to "middle distillate" heating oil imported in February and March.

As now proposed, the effect would be to limit price increases on imported heating oil to about three cents per gallon instead of letting them jump some seven or eight cents, the spokesman said.

Crude oil already has its domestic and import prices smoothed out by the FEAs so-called "entitlements program"

Crude oil produced in the United States is still under federal price controls, at lower prices than those commanded on the world market for imported crude oil.

To prevent an unearned and unfair competitive advantage for refiners with greater access to the price-controlled domestic oil, the FEA assigns to oil importers proportional shares of "entitlements" to part of the domestic oil.

The entitlements have a financial value depending on the difference between world and U.S. oil prices, and the importers can sell or trade them around so that all refiners end up paying about the same prices for their crude oil, imported or domestic, on the average.

Now, the FEA proposes to apply a similar "entitlements" program to imports of home heating oil, whose prices are higher than those of domestic supplies.

The spokesman said the nation's cold weather has both increased demand for home heating oil and strained the delivery systems, stimulating greater imports to the eastern states.

He said that while domestic heating oil was selling in the neighborhood of 40 to 42 cents per gallon, imported heating oil cost about 47 or 48 cents per gallon.

Under the proposed entitlements, importers would be entitled to a share of domestic heating oil worth about $1.56 per barrel, or nearly four cents a gallon, which could be subtracted from their import costs.

role from Henry (7 assists) while Ginny Peebles and Maura Supinski dominated the boards. The reserves kept the same fast pace against the tired Lancers, coming within one point of becoming the first women's team in UMass history to reach triple figures.

Ozdarski was obviously very pleased with the Minutewomen's play. "You saw our finest team effort of the season tonight," she said. "Everyone played and everyone played well."

Versatile Balletta added, "We really played together tonight. There was no individual, one-on-one play — just excellent team work."

The 99 points was a single-game record for UMass women's basketball, demonstrating the explosiveness of this year's quintet. They can break a more important mark tomorrow night — Providence's undefeated record — as they fight for supremacy in New England women's basketball.

The offense hasn't been potent as Babson has only scored 26 goals this season and the goaltending tandem of Hunteer Judson and Scott Bethel has allowed 30.

Last year the Minutemen bombed Babson, 7-1, in that team's 2-14-0 Division II season.

"Babson is playing well now," Canniff said about Saturday's foe. "They're playing pretty good as they beat Amherst 6-2 and lost to both Salem State and Merrimack in overtime. They also have the advantage of playing at home."

For the Minutemen, Canniff said John Peters is a big question mark after trying to play hurt against Williams. Other than that, the team is relatively healthy.

definately capable of going under 3 minutes. Now our only problem is to find someone to run the mile. We've got the depth at talent though, to find the right person at the right time."

The team will be trying to qualify two relay teams, a mile and two mile squad. The two mile unit has already been qualified up to the New England level, but the mile group hasn't reached even that stage yet. The absence of Mark Healy with a hamstring pull and Joe Martens with the flu has depleted the mile relay corps to the extent that the event may not even be contested.

On the bright side, Bob Fitzgerald will be returning in the high jump after recovering from a skiing accident. Weight man Ron Melkonian is throwing well, approaching 50' in the weight and getting out to 52' in the shot.

Otherwise, the post intersession picture is pretty bleak. With no facilities, most of the field event men and women tend to lose some ground over this period. Sprinters and middle distance runners also suffer to an extent.

"Intersession is tough for us — we lose all our continuity, which is important in track," said Morse.

A full squad will be traveling up for the meet, with 34 men and 23 women scheduled to make the trip.

Matmen flattened again

By BOB HASKELL
Collegian Staff

The UMass wrestling team lost a tough decision to Springfield College last night, 25-13, at Boyden Gym. UMass coach Dave Amato summed up the defeat by saying, "We just lost some close matches."

The turning point of the match, according to Amato, was a close contest at 126 pounds. "It really hurt when Harry Conforti lost in a heartbreaker after leading for most of the match, and when Steve Jabaut lost after giving a solid performance at 150 lbs. it seemed to take something out of the team," he said.

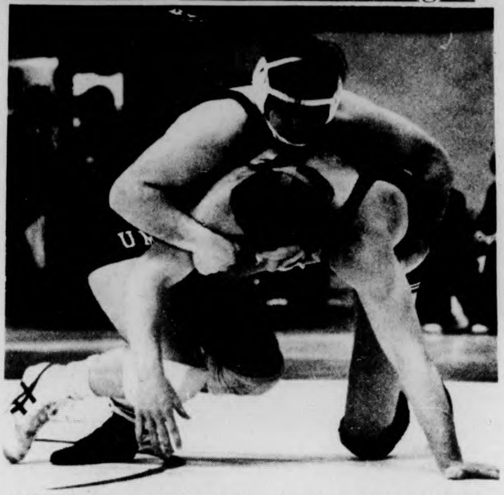
Heavyweight Dennis Fenton, despite looking sluggish in his match with a surprisingly poised opponent, won 2-1, but not without creating some consternation on the Minutemen bench.

"Dennis needs to get more aggressive," noted Amato. "He told me earlier today that he wasn't feeling well, but tonight he just seemed reluctant to take the fight to his opponent."

The outstanding performance of the night for the UMass team was undoubtedly that of Larry Otsuka who won his match handily by a score of 10-1. "Larry had control of the whole match," noted Amato in reference to the 134-pounder. "His was definitely the best overall job."

Other winners for the Minutemen were: Kevin Griffin at 158 lbs. and Mike Riley at 177 lbs. In the preliminaries, the UMass JV squad lost to the Springfield JV's, 31-18.

Tomorrow the UMass grapplers, now 1-8, will travel to Albany, N.Y. to participate in a quadrangular match. Their opponents will be the wrestlers from State U. New York at Albany, Coast Guard and C.W. Post. Their next home match will be against Mass Maritime on Feb. 5.



This UMass wrestler seems to have his Springfield foe at a disadvantage in last night's match. But it didn't happen often enough for the Minutemen, as they dropped the contest. (Staff photo by Rob Carlin)

Tracksters traveling time

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

The men's and women's track teams will be mainly looking ahead to the championship meets when they travel to Hanover, New Hampshire tomorrow to compete in the first annual Green and White Invitational at Dartmouth College.

"It's basically to allow the kids to get some qualifying times and run at a fast facility," said coach Arnie Morse. "They'll be running some events such as the 440 and 880, as well as the distance medley relay to give teams and individuals a chance to qualify for the championship meets at the end of the season."

These events are not usually included on the dual meet program but they are run in the New Englands, IC4A's and nationals. Generally the 600 and 1000 are run, with the 440 and 880 considered outdoor distances.

The distance medley has been a particularly strong event for the Minutemen this winter. The IC4A qualifying standard has already been met, and Morse feels that the team will try to stack this event in future meets to try to reach a national level of competitiveness.

Right now the trackmen have a best time of 10:00. They have to get that down to 9:53 to qualify for the nationals. Morse feels that time is well within their reach. When that mark was set, Jim Hunt ran a leadoff half-mile of 1:54, which was followed by Joe Martens 49:5 440, Chris Farmer's 3:02 three-fourths mile and Frank Carroll's 4:14 mile.

"We can count on Jimmy cutting a few seconds off his time," said Morse. "Martens time is nowhere indicative of what he can do.

Chris' time is excellent but he is

Gymwomen home again

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

If you thought your intersession seemed short, you should consider yourself lucky.

Members of the women's gymnastics squad returned on January 4 to prepare for their upcoming season, and the long-awaited opening of the home season has finally arrived for the gymwomen. Their first home meet of the season is against Westchester tomorrow at 1:00 at Curry Hicks Cage.

The gymwomen bring an 0-1 record to the competition while Westchester is untested this year. Back in early December the Minutewomen turned in a very impressive showing in a dual meet with Penn State but lost. Penn State, like UMass, is nationally ranked and the gymnasts are already planning revenge during the Eastern Regionals when they will undoubtedly face the Nittany Lions again.

During the "vacation," the gymnasts competed in two scrimmages. The first was with Hampshire Gymnastics School. Coach Virginia Evans took the opportunity to try a few different things and she was pleased with the results. The final score for the gymwomen was 140.10, an improvement over their Penn State total. Last Saturday Evans held an intra squad scrimmage to firm up the lineups and prepare for the upcoming competitive atmosphere.

Evans plans to use virtually the same lineup that competed against Penn State. Susan Cantwell, Stephanie Jones, Karen Hemberger, and Jill Heggie will compete in all four events for the hosting team. Diane Laurenson will vault and perform on the floor, Julie Myers will compete on the balance beam and on the floor, Barbara Burmeister will vault, Jean Anderson will see action on the bars and Cheryl Morrier will compete on the beam. The only questionable starter is Keeley O'Rourke, who has a minor hand injury.

Coach Evans is confident about tomorrow's meet. "I'm not anticipating much closeness," she said. Last year the gymwomen defeated Westchester by six points.

Stephanie Jones, who Evans expects to show the most improvement since the Penn State meet was more enthusiastically optimistic about tomorrow's meet.

"We'll clobber!! We have a strong, strong team," Jones exclaimed.

The Westchester is the first of a rapid succession of meets for the gymwomen. They will compete in three in the next two weeks, working up to the Easterns in March when they hope to better their third place finish of last year.

Rimwomen romp in record runaway

By JOHN LOWNEY
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's basketball team used its height advantage and superior depth to outclass Worcester State, 99-61, at the Cage last night. Starters and reserves combined pressure defense and timely shooting to put away the fiery but outmanned Worcester squad.

"A complete team effort" was coach Mary Ann Ozdarski's description of her team's fourth consecutive victory. A similar effort will be needed tomorrow night as the Minutewomen tangle with undefeated (9-0) Providence College at 5:15 in the Springfield Civic Center.

Ozdarski was able to play everyone, experimenting with different combinations in preparing for Providence. Substitutes played throughout the second half, extending the lead against the Worcester regulars.

The Minutewomen did not start as quickly as they finished, however. Sparked by some deadly outside shooting, the Lancers actually led 16-13 several minutes into the game. Then guards Sue Henry and Cheryl Carey went to work, stealing passes at midcourt and hitting front counters Lu Fletcher, Nancy O'Neil and Jo Balletta for driving layups.

After that 10-point spree the Minutewomen never looked back. Fletcher and O'Neil controlled the inside game while Henry and Sue Peters hit from the outside. Worcester continued to drop in long outside shots, but its smaller fowards could not penetrate the Umass frontcourt.

As they have done in several games this season, the Minutewomen came out of the locker room red-hot. The starting five returned to turn a 12-point halftime lead into a 30-point margin in just a matter of minutes. Fletcher was devastating underneath, hitting everything she put up. The guards harrassed Worcester into throwing wild passes while the forwards prevented the Lancers from taking any close shots.

The rest of the game was experimenting time for UMass. Jo Balletta (6 assists) and Julie McHugh took over the playmaking

Pucksters prepare for key weekend set

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

As the Division II hockey season starts to wind down, teams find that every game gets more and more important. The UMass hockey team is no exception to this rule. The Minutemen are set to play two key games over the weekend. UMass faces Hamilton College Friday night at 8:00 at Orr rink and travels to Wellesley to play Babson College at 1:30 Saturday afternoon.

A sweep by UMass would help its playoff guest greatly, but a double loss would do serious damage to the Minutemen's 5-4-1 record and their post-season hunt. A split would just keep the team even and really wouldn't help in the long run.

Hamilton is in a similar position to UMass as a loss would reduce the visitors record to 5-4. Hamilton is ranked seventh in the Division II West Division while UMass is ninth. While Babson is only 3-5-1 in the Division, it is sixth in the Eastern loop.

Last year Hamilton beat out the Minutemen for the last playoff spot with a 9-7-1 record in Division II and a 12-8-1 mark overall. Hamilton was ninth in the league and UMass eighth, but the deciding factor was the 10-0 loss the Minutemen suffered at the hands of Hamilton.

Back from last year's playoff team, which lost to Bowdoin 7-3, is Phil Hildebrand, all ECAC right wing who tallied 51 points. Hildebrand is joined by Tom Griffin and George Gillmore to make up its high-powered line.

Hamilton has scored ten more goals than UMass this season, 49-39, and has given up about the same amount.

"They're a good team, no question about it," said coach Jack Canniff. "They shellacked us last year, and it's basically the same young team.

"It will be a definite plus to play at home," Canniff said. "We haven't played at home since December 14."

Fourteen hours later the icemen will have to ready themselves for a 1:30 tilt with Babson. "We've go to be sharp," said Canniff, commenting on the team's marked tendency of not performing at peak capability in back-to-back situation.

The 4-6-1 Babson team's last victory by a 6-2 score over Amherst Wednesday night. Freshman defenseman Tom Halpin is an intimate part of the offense as he likes to rush the puck. Halpin tallied a goal and two assists. Peter Manning had two goals and an assist in the contest.

Minutemen face Huskies

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

The rivalry doesn't mean as much now as it once did. Conference titles and ECAC tournament berths no longer hang in the balance.

But the feeling is still there, and when the UMass and UConn basketball teams get together tomorrow night at the Springfield Civic Center, you can expect the same intensity and drama that has marked these contests since the early days of the Yankee Conference.

A week ago at the Hartford Civic Center, 7000 fans were treated to just such a contest as UMass eked out an 81-80 decision on a last-second bank shot by Derick Claiborne.

Despite the victory, UConn shot ahead of the Minutemen in the latest ECAC New England Division I coaches' poll. The Huskies trail Providence and Holy Cross, and UMass follows in fourth place. A UMass victory could vault the Minutemen back past UConn.

But history is against the Minutemen, since you have to go back five years to find an instance where either team has won two games in a row from the other.

The Minutemen, 8-6 on the season after Wednesday's easy 93-77 win over Vermont, are preparing to embark on a treacherous second-half of the season which includes games with ECBL foes Rutgers, West Virginia, George Washington, and Pittsburgh, as well as a tough University of Rhode Island squad.

UConn, behind forward Tony Hanson, has climbed to 11-6 on the season, and played Boston College last night. "Connecticut is playing much better now," said UMass coach Jack Leaman before his squad practiced yesterday. "They're bigger than we are and they're very deep."

Hanson is the leading scorer in New England (23 points per game), and the second leading rebounder behind UMass' Jim Town. According to Leaman, Mike Pyatt did an excellent job defending against Hanson at Hartford until the UMass forward fouled out late in the game.

Pyatt will be on Hanson again tomorrow night but, "You don't stop a great player, and Hanson's a great player, according to Leaman.

Guard Joey Whelton, he of the 25-foot bomb fame, is UConn's second leading scorer at an 11.8 clip. Erratic forward Jim Abromaitis follows with 10.6, and center Jeff Carr averages 7.4.

One pitfall of this UMass squad was evident in the last contest, when a tough UConn press forced the Minutemen to blow a 15-point lead. "We got sloppy — that shouldn't really affect us, said Leaman. "We made careless mistakes because of mental problems, which we've hopefully taken care of."

With the disappearance of Steve Mayfield and Eric Williams, Leaman has been working new men into the lineup. Brad Johnson, Jim Maguire, and George Dennerlein have all seen more action, and all are looking good, according to Leaman.

WMUA will carry a special doubleheader of UMass basketball action tomorrow night. Grant Baxter and Charlie Holmes start things off with the Minutewomen-Providence game, starting at 5:05. Then, right after the close of that contest, the Minutemen-UConn game comes your way. Bob Paquette and Dave Starder are set to call the UMass sports, WMUA, 91.1 FM in Amherst.

Jobbing the modern athlete

With Dave Cowens inability to cope with his job at New England Harness Raceway, it seems apparent that athletes cannot adjust to employment in the "real" world; they only know how to play a game for a living. This fact, coupled with the revelation by many sports figures — indeed many of them stars — that if sports had not been around, they would have turned to lives of crime, has set a dangerous precedent in our society.

It is incumbent upon us, therefore, to find suitable employment for these poor unfortunates...either when their playing days are over, or upon their decisions to take brief, Cowens-like sabbaticals.

Since job opportunities are scarce, however, new lines of work, in sports, must be created. It is in this spirit that the following vocations are offered for the following athletes.

LUIS TIANT: PROFESSOR OF LANGUAGE — Baseball has a lingo particular unto itself. Certain phrases such as "a walk is as good as a hit" and "take two and hit to right" can produce pronunciation difficulties for even the brightest rookie. To help alleviate this problem, which could result in acute learning disabilities when conversing with a third-base coach, El Tiante would tutor each new man, on a one-to-one basis, to help the fresh players enunciate clearly.

Tiant would take care to include such explanatory phrases as "I covered all the bases" and "See your California Paint dealer".

JOE NAMATH: TEAM CHAPLAIN — All professional athletes need spiritual guidance in some way or another, and if they don't get it in the locker room they'll just get it on the street — or even worse — in the home. Joe could help bind a player's moral wounds by administering the lost soul a month pass to Bachelor's Three and arranging him a date with Miss December.

MACK HERRON: PERMANENT GUEST LECTURER ON THE TOPIC "HOW BLOCKING FOR MY QUARTERBACK LENGTHENED MY CAREER" — The key to success for any football team still lies, in great part, with the man who throws the ball. Last season, however, was a particularly hazardous one for QB's, as many were sidelined by inconsiderate onrushing defensive linement. Running backs and offensive linemen alike could benefit from a detailed lecture series by one of the greatest gap-fillers of all time.

TERRY O'REILLY: DIRECTOR OF DIPLOMACY — Clearly, the era of the hockey fight is over. The minute tempers flare, modern-day fans even go so far as to jump out of their seats and lament, "Look at that!" To keep the fans' interest and save costly penalties, Mr. O'Reilly would rush down onto the ice, place himself in the midst of the disturbance and placate the combattants by talking sense to them.

MARVIN BARNES: DIRECTOR OF FATHERLY ADVICE — Difficult as it may seem to the sports fan who idolizes his favorite athlete, many of them folk-heroes are still in need of guidance; still "wet behind the ears" as the nauseatingly old saying goes. To ensure that these lads don't stray from the path of goodness and righteous ness, Marvin would take each player aside during practice and utter such reassuring-but-tempering phrases as "now, now" and "there, there".

LANCE RENTZEL: TEAM PSYCHIATRIST — Many clubs have proven that a little head-shrinking goes a long way towards blocking out your troubles and building confidence. Mediocre athlete's have even convinced themselves of their greatness in front of jeering fans who knew the truth. A perfect healer, Lance could help a sick player unload his problem on a healthy teammate.

It came to pass in days of old
When knights were long on tales they told,
And halls were filled with songs they'd sing
To entertain their lords and king,
That those of high and noble line
Were near their lord when sat to dine.
Only they of the highest rank
Ate with their earl and with him drank,
Spoke of wond'rous valor and deed
And drained gold cups of endless mead.
Now those of lesser title and name,
Whose grace and manner were not the same,
Were placed along this table of oak
Far from the proud and gentle folk.
A bowl of salt did mark the line
That distinguished class when there to dine.
Now in the court of a righteous king
The tables were round; they sat in a ring.
With the salt at the center, they sat to eat
And no one claimed a higher seat.
They ate and drank and spoke of truth.
No stronger voice than came from youth;
From elders' voice the same was heard,
No futile system could stop their word.
Here all was known, their virtue and their fault,
Here, where all in the kingdom took their seat

food is a four letter word

By Alice E. Horner

It never fails to amaze me that in this world where sensual pleasures abound, where the delights of the flesh vie fiercely with the cravings of the intellect, UMies are indifferent, yea blasé, about food. Usually highly discriminative about what is allowed into your mouths, when it comes to food, you show a marked lack of concern. Gone is the connoisseur who discerns without hesitation the subtleties between Bud and Schlitz; the devotee of fine Columbian who wouldn't set a match to anything less; the appreciater of freshly ground java who flinches at the sound of "Maxwell House". And where did they go? To satisfy a "Mac Attack" ...

I had a roommate once who cooked the same thing for supper every night, day after day, week after week: one slightly overdone hamburger, some frozen peas and carrots, and one small mound of white rice. One night I couldn't stand it any longer.

"Is this living?", I screamed. "Is one slightly overdone hamburger, some frozen peas and carrots, and a small mound of white rice living?" Fearing for what was left of my sanity, she agreed to be adventurous. The next night, she had frozen broccoli.

Granted, this culinary aversion might be a reaction to force-fed D.C. meals or to fast food cheese-thicker-than-the-meat-burgers, but I suspect that it's more a matter of habit. And so, dear reader, I invite you, may challenge you, to leave behind the shackles of suburban dietetic convention and experience the succulent pleasures of the fork. The restaurants, cafes and foreign food shelves await you and I, I, will return to introduce their legion possibilities to you.

Just call it a gut reaction.

Critique and Reason

The Arts, the Elite and Clive Barnes at Mount Holyoke College

D. Schater photo

by William Brett Parent

There is something contradictory in the performing arts. There is a fine line to be drawn between art for the sake of entertainment and art for the sake of intellectual growth. This line is clear when comparing a movie like "Nashville" to "King Kong" or the "Music Man" to "Hamlet". However, more often we are constantly faced with the grey area in between.

There is something unsophisticated about television most of the time, yet a production like "Roots" this past week defies this premise. It is hard to be patient with amateur actors when professionals fill out TV screens nightly, yet there is a beautiful feeling given by members of the City Studio Theater during even their most mediocre performances.

We, the consumers, are caught in the middle of this contradiction. There is no shortage of entertainment in this 'global village'. Because of this, art has become a matter of choice, a matter of preference and a matter of influence.

Clive Barnes of the New York Times is perhaps one of the most prominent peddlers of this influence. This past week, Barnes visited Mount Holyoke College and exposed the man behind the pen, the anonymous critic who is partly responsible for the success of Godot and the failure of Hellzapoppin; one of the people who, because of his love for the medium, has lifted our appreciation of dance during the past decade.

Addressing a small reception over tea at Mount Holyoke on Tuesday afternoon Barnes defined his role as a critic.

"I want to make people think for themselves. I want to stimulate an interest in the arts without being a tipster for the hits," Barnes said. "My role is, in part, to assist the artist, to draw attention to the piece."

"The artist takes himself: playwrite, painter, and combines all he is; genetics, experiences, intellect and creates an art object. It is a synthesis.

"The critic, with his different influences, does the opposite. He takes it apart, hopefully with compassion, for the benefit of the audience. The critic uses his greater experience to build a bridge between the writer and the audience."

Barnes feels that critics work for the artist. "Usually artists are quite remote people, they need the critic. But I am not trying to tell people how to write plays. If I knew, I would.

According to Barnes, the critic merely uses his impressions to teach.

The influences behind Clive Barnes are varied at at the same time unique. Genetically there is a mixture of keen Jewish intellect, mischevious Irish wit laced with a generous amount of refined English grace.

Barnes is a native Englishman. He decided to become a critic at the age of fourteen when he realized he would never be an actor. The one time he tried dancing, he did "very badly — it was called Disneyesque by a critic." As an undergraduate at Oxford, he began writing dance reviews for the campus paper and quickly started working for various London papers including the Spectator and the Times. After writing for the New York Times as a London correspondent, he was invited, in 1965, to move to New York to take over as chief dance critic for the Times. In 1967 he became daily drama critic and remained the foremost authority on dance.

The critic uses his greater experience to build a bridge between the a writer and the audience

Barnes is also unique in his approach to his craft.

"I seldom take notes, and when I do it's only to fulfill the playwrite image," Barnes said, "I usually have about an hour to produce a review and I use a certain formula."

However, Barnes is often forced to write three or four reviews a week and because of this, there is challenge to keep from generalizing. "There are certain words I overuse, but I really try to keep my responses fairly fresh. That's very important for any writer." At the same time, though, Barnes admitted that he remains "beautifully and sublimely arrogant" about his own opinions.

The criteria which Barnes uses to review are not at all poignant. When reviewing dance the things he looks for are simple.

"I wait for the moments of blockage which surprise me, but I wait until I am in front of the typewriter to write them down. I also look for the way that very simple movement flow into each other in a production. Very few directors accomplish this well."

Politically, Barnes defines himself as a socialist. A term he uses a number of times, which carefully, like his education, draws a line between himself and the masses of people who read his reviews.

"I believe that plays should be socially conscious, but they aren't. Not since such playwrites as Brecht have there been social plays for the masses."

For this reason perhaps, simpler musicals do not excite Barnes. "I hated "Godspell" but I knew it would be a hit," he said.

For this reason also, he is a champion of government subsidized theater and an advocate for eliminating racism in performing arts.

"I am afraid for our culture, like the ancient Greek culture that had no poets and it died. Intent on being Rome we forget some of the advantages of being Athens," Barnes warned.

According to Barnes, subsidizing art is subsidizing a part of education. "We wouldn't say; Charley can't have an education, but by forcing theaters to raise ticket prices we tell Charley he can't see "Hamlet." People are not prepared to pay for the real arts."

Barnes also repeated that drama and especially dance are extremely racist. He cited the New York City Ballet Company as a prime example." Ballentine (director of the NYC Ballet) refuses to use blacks.

"Many people still feel that Black dancers are not fit for classic European dance. I think it's outright prejudice. They can't picture Blacks as the white swans in "Swan Lake," he said.

According to Barnes, racism in art is also a reflection of society. "The way of life in Harlem is not one in which parents can send their kids to a ballet school." However Barnes is optimistic, "Arthur Mitchell of the Harlem Ballet has 400 kids training now, doing a marvelous job and they are all Black. Also, as the Black middle class rises, part of the problem will be alleviated."

At the same time, though, there is another Clive Barnes.

"Art is elite," Barnes said. "Arts are for all people, but not all people are for the arts. The performing arts are not populist; they are elitist."

It's like the tea served from a silver platter at the Mount Holyoke press conference; like the radical chic of Amherst and Manhattan who quietly spend their Sunday mornings reading and contemplating the Sunday Times. (Are you finished with the book review section yet?)

It's like the fine line which separates Bill "Bojangles" Robinson from Rudolf Nureyev and Neil Simon from Sammuel Beckett, Glenda Jackson from Katherine Ross and yes, Clive Barnes from us.

"How do you feel about amateur theater, Mr. Barnes?" a woman from the audience asked.

"It's good for the people participating and for their blood relatives, but not the general public. It is a poor spectator sport," Barnes answered.

Earlier, Barnes had defined television as the populist art form because it is a passive form of refuge.

And yet, still earlier, Barnes expressed personal despair over the problems of the full length, uninterrupted drama recently presented on public televison.

"I sit there in front of the TV, knowing there are no commercials, wondering 'how the hell' am I going to get myself a beer?"

And so, with those words and many more for which there is not enough room to print, Clive Barnes disappeared to return to his typewriter, his plays, his conversations with the woman he calls his guru, Martha Graham. Back to the mysterious identity of the by-line: by Clive Barnes, leaving us with nothing but a keener appreciation of the contradictions, the compassion and the plight of not only the arts, but also its critics.

But perhaps, a slightly better understanding of the critic provides a clearer perception of the question: Where should we, the consumers, draw our fine lines? The answers were not provided by Clive Barnes. He only provided us his own criteria and saves us just a bit more insecure in our contradictory culture with its contradicting art. We are forced to depend a bit more on our own experiences, our own genetic differences, our own intellect to form our opinion on the performing arts. And as our experiences build, and our intellects mature...so may our art.

TV or not TV

By Greg Tarlin

And just what, you may ask, is a column on that lowest of entertainments, that cultural wasteland, that opiate of the masses, doing in a University Fine Arts newspaper?

Well, that question would only be raised because of TV's uncertain position as an art form. But television is indeed an art form — it is a creative entertainment performed by few and watched by many. And, although all of us at these bastions of higher learning prefer to tell others that we never watch television; that we cannot, in fact, 'get into it', we know this to be at least partially false.

For television is everywhere — in our dorms, in our parents' houses, in the homes of our friends and relatives, at bars (giant screens in many), even in the bottom of our own campus center, where dozens of our classmates gather each day to watch the 'soaps'. One would almost have to walk through life deaf and dumb merely to avoid television.

We grew up with television, we live with or near television, we talk about television, we read about television. TV has been part of our lives since the beginning (quite possibly there was a TV set in our mother's hospital maternity wing).

And yet, instead of television being the old friend it so rightfully is, we deny any affinity with the monstrous boob tube, criticizing and ridiculing it, and holding in contempt those whom we discover to be secretive idiot-box watchers.

Television is one of the few cultural entertainment mediums which we consider unworthy of our attention (country and western music is another). What causes this seemingly mass disgust? Do we feel television is only a business disguised as entertainment?

Television is, of course, a business, but so, too, are movies, plays, books, concerts, and recordings, and yet we attend these openly, paying hard-earned cash to do so and, afterwards, discussing each objectively. .

Thus the possibility that the business aspect of television is the cause of its disrepute should be eliminated. What then could television have possibly done in these brief years since those Saturday morning cartoon marathons in which we gorged ourselves on animated annihilation to deserve such scorn and ridicule? Have we grown away from television's lowly intellectual capacity, or has television grown away from us, as an advertising market? Probably both.

For various reasons, most importantly our expanding social night life, we gradually watched less and television. The networks realized this and aimed their programming towards other markets. We are left with a great gap between their shows and our tastes.

Most business, upon finding that their product is not reaching the intended market, adjust that product so it will do so. Television found it was easier to adjust the product towards other markets. Therefore, the less we watched, the less programming was produced for us. Sort of a 'Catch-22' of the TV industry.

So, what we're left with is a large group of people (us — 18-24 year old college students) and an entertainment medium which we all, with very few exceptions, watch at least occasionally. Affter all, who amongst us can truthfully say that they saw no Red Sox — Reds World Series games, no Presidential debates, no Sunday, Monday etc. Night Movies, no Olympics, no Johnny Carson, Mary Hartman, Monty Python, Star Trek, Archie Bunker, Patriots — Raiders Playoff games, Fonz, and no Super Bowl.

Very few of us, I'm willing to bet missed every part of every one. It is a rather sobering statistic that of a U.S population of 220 million, an estimated 100 million were watching TV at 4 o'clock on January 9th (75 million watched the Super Bowl).

Television is obviously a large part of our culture, and, as is the case with every other aspect of that culture, it should be dealt with and commented on openly, not hidded from view like some wart on our supposedly refined college taste buds.

Television needs to be dealt with. It has tremendous potential, not only for entertainment, but for education and communication as well. At present it is young, still in its formative years. Many mistakes have been made; many more will come. In this column I will attempt to comment on those mistakes, and also on the occasional successes, and to so both intelligently and objectively.

Electron Movers

Electron Movers was established in the Spring of 1974 to provide a center for the artistic and humanistic application of electronic media in our society. Due to the great variety of skills that electronic media demands, the center provides an opportunity for individuals of different disciplines to collaborate on projects. In the past, projects have involved dancers, musicians, puppeteers, and visual artists. The final step in the artistic research of electronic media is in the presentation of a particular work. Using public spaces such as parks, art museums, galleries, and schools, projects are presented as prerecorded taped performances, live performances, and environmental installations that are activated by audience participation.

The three weeks of installations at the Student Union Art Gallery at the University of Massachusetts represents the work of eight artists. All of the installations were developed during the past year. Some of the members of Electron Movers have been collatorating on video installations with each other since 1971. This show represents both new individualized approaches to electronic media and the fine tuning process of years of collaboration. The show will run from January 31-February 18, 1977, with a live performance on February 10 at 8:30 p.m.

The Literary Life

by S.T. Comberback

During intersession I was hailed on a Cambridge street corner by Andrew, an old acquaintance, currently a record reviewer for a monthly Beantown ad-sheet. He maneuvered me into a dimly-lit guzzling den for old-time's-sake and a double whiskey, and invited me to a literary tea and booze-up on Beacon Hill several evenings later. There, he assured me, I would meet a talented young man, a writer, for whom were anticipated wonderful things.

Curiosity, coupled with visions of sipping mulled claret in oak-panelled rooms, found me in front of the State House steps at the appointed hour. As we trudged through the snow, Andrew did his best to answer my flurry of questions: Who was giving the party? Who was the writer? What had he written and where had he been published?

Our hostess, it turned out, was a writer herself, of fourteen unpublished novels. Or was it thirteen novels and a book of stories? Her name was Molly or Milly, Andrew couldn't be sure, but did it really matter? She had once kicked in Brendan Behan's hotel door in New York brandishing an armload of the gargle. Perhaps it was Dylan Thomas's basement window? What's the difference?

The writer, Andrew told me, between hurried slugs of ginger brandy, was one-hell-of-a-chap. They had met only once, at a party a week or two previous to our meeting in Cambridge. The party had been given by Suze, Andrew's ex-woman friend, who was not attached to the writer whose name Andrew couldn't recall. Andrew did recall that he and the writer had matched each other shot for shot from a half-gallon bottle of Old Grand Dad. He recalled, too, being impressed before crumpling into a heap and splintering a hand-varnished orange crate.

Andrew informed me that the writer had written a novel, a thinly disguised biography that was, in part, a searing condemnation of his home town in Fairfield county, Connecticut, his father, the commodore, his old boarding school, his ex-fencing instructor, and a number of other individuals who would rue the day they ever had the meanness to tamper with the writer's delicately balanced psyche. Counter-poised against the expose' of those various blackguards was a loving evocation of the town drunk, a peripatetic bootblack and self-styled Socrates, who, while polishing the writer's Guccis one day after the lad had been bounced from Choate, wept at the long and bitter tale of injustice he had listened to, and told the future novelist, "Hang in there, kid."

Andrew admitted to me that he had only skimmed the manuscript, and had not actually read every one of its 1,500 pages. He did say that the writer and the wino became fast friends, soul mates, so to speak, each determined to stand his ground in a cold and thankless world. The novel, entitled Up Yours, was to be issued in three volumes by a very good press located in Chelsea or Everett. Or was it Malden?

A stone's throw from the offices of The Atlantic Monthly, we were admitted into a fashionably appointed apartment by a woman in a blazing red muu-muu, who was drinking gin and tonic from what appeared to be a gold fish bowl. This was Milly or Molly, who turned out to be Maggie, a Comstu prof at a tax-supported institution. The writer wasn't there yet.

Cases of liquor had been piled (perilously close, I thought) in front of a china closet. Maggie handed me a sherry and I leaned on a column of half-gallon jugs of port, four cases high. Andrew took up position close to me and for the next hour I met those friends of Andrew's who were there, including Suze. She was twenty-one with long red hair. There was some small talk about the Black Cat Cafe' in Tangier; Paris, the green gardens of the Luxembourg. The writer had not shown. Suze, I found out, had written a review of the novel, but was going to wait until it was published before handing out mimeod copies up and down Charles Street.

The wine flowed. The chatter increarsed; punting on the Thames, mariolatry in Nausicca. Maggie collapsed into an overstuffed chair, but kept her bowl filled with the help of a bucket brigade to the sideboard. Andrew and Suze melted away. The talk became thicker; Plato, Aristotle — dragging out the heavies as a silver cigarette case was passed round. No sign of the writer.

People were taking flight to my right and left, sitting there on the floor. I had a final sherry and made a cup of tea before putting on my coat to leave. Keentown, Beantown.

Down the hill two figures sat ina snow pile, rotto with drink, as was evidenced by their posture, two empty bottles of Canadian Club stuck in the snow, upside down, and a noise, a kind of humming, a harmony of sorts, coming from the two dark shapes. I whipped past them, then heard in the wind — I'm pretty sure it was the wind — the words, "Up Yours!"

Five Into One Can Go

By Leila Bruno

The Five College Dance Faculty & Concert presented at Smith College last semester provided a variety of the styles and techniques taught and performed at each school.

The first of its kind, the concert could be an impetus towards a possible merger of all of the dance departments in ultimately establishing themselves as one department.

Such a program would offer serious students a greater scope of training while also helping to place dance in a due supportime position in the general academic curriculum.

Included in the concert was choreography by Francis McClellan of Hampshire, Susan Waltner of Smith, Andrea Olsen of Mt. Holyoke; and Richard Jones, Dan Peterson, and Andrea Watkins of UMass.

The different styles includes modern works with elements of mime, comedy, jazz, and drama all interpreted differently in various ways by each school.

The event was effective in bringing students and faculty from the five college areas together in seeing each other's representative works.

A champagne reception planned by Jean Cohen followed the Saturday's night performance which gave both the faculty, dancers, and audience members an opportunity to meet and compare dance-views.

A unified dance department as such would provide interested students the opportunities to use the available facilities within the five colleges.

In addition the diversity and number of instructors totalled would give the program a broader creative perspective.

Judging from the enthusiastic responses from all concerned with developing the program as well as the interested people the idea of a merged Five College Dance Department may materialize within the not too distant future.

FILM / SMALL CHANGE
Directed by Francois Truffaut

Survival at an Early Age

By E. Patrick McQuaid

It seems that during any extended stretch of boredom such as intercession, when the backlog of books and scraps of other put-asides for future attention never get touched and "incompletes" remain that way, Francois Truffaut steps in.

The critics as well as the director himself claim that he has returned once again to his favorite subject: children. But to simply say that it is a film about children is to severely underrate Truffaut's latest production, Small Change. Moreover it is difficult to accept the fact that it is a film, a piece of fiction. At no point did I consider that these short, mostly humorous episodes were not real and that I was a privileged spectator into this subculture comprised entirely of children.

It is the very center of France and the very center of French life in which we are immersed. We glimpse into a seemingly secret, underworld society controlled by the little people; but this is no fantasy world nor is it in any sense "childish". It is very real and deals with very real issues of children managing in an adult world; of education, poverty, and child abuse.

The plot, if any, is very loose and the heroes and heroines are too numerous to count. The youngest is a new born infant, Thomas, and the eldest is a 14 year-old man-of-the-world, Bruno, who has discovered the opposite sex. Among the episodes are the standard school room pranks such as in Fellini's Amarcord. In one a student is called on to recite Mollaire and gives a so-so performance but when the teacher is called out of the room and the class is left unattended, he rushes to the front and gives a mock, overly passionate rendition of the same lines screaming "Murder! Murder!". Overhearing this the teacher comments to another, "They're born actors."

And indeed they are. Placed in front of a camera, some for the first time in their lives, they act as natural as though they were not acting at all, not following a set script of rehearsed dialogues written by Truffaut and Suzanne Schiffman. It is hard to believe that "Petite Gregory", only two-years-old is acting when he dangles from a ninth-floor window while trying to push his cat off the ledge. Everyone sighs and holds their breath hoping that his mother will return in time to snatch him from danger. Even when we see his little body sailing down the side of the apartment building we realize that all is well; the children wear the white hats in this film and they can do no wrong. "Gregory go boom!" he concludes cheerfully, picks himself up out of the bushes and proceeds to kick a wire basket along the gutter while his mother is being revived.

"Children are in constant danger," says the compassionate schoolteacher, played by Jean-Francois Stevenin, who is also playing Truffaut's part. His wife disagrees and remarks: "Kids are in a state of grace. They stumble through life, they fall down, they get hurt, and they bounce right back."

These are the children of Small Change and not of the director's earlier The 400 Blows. The evils and dangers of the adult world are background only and we are not allowed to see any more of this background than is necessary. It is not important that we see inside the home of the battered child, Julien, because that is not what we are concerned with.

In the end it is all tied together in one neat package. The episodes are linked together via the school room scenes and concludes with the last day of classes and a final word from the school teacher, a political statement in which he postulates on the advantages of giving the children the right to vote. The kids are sent off to summer camp, and we are assured that the abused Julien will have a more promising future when we see his mother and grandmother lead away by police in the style of a TV news film.

So in the end we can say that it is a film about children afterall. But there is more. It is a statement, sometimes political; a heartwarming experience, and somewhat of a mental vacation; regardless of your sentiments about children. It is a film for adults and not one of those for children-of-all-ages that frequent American cinema.

There have been a number of excellent films about children in the past; Lord of the Flies for example. The opening scene from Small Change is reminiscent of the famous chase in Oliver Twist where from out of seemingly nowhere, from cracks in the pavement and dark alleys hundreds of children emerge and race through the streets. It is their film and perhaps this is what makes it so charmingly different from any other film about children. It is not, in this reviewer's opinion, Truffaut's finest, but it is Truffaut at his best.

The Second Shepard's Play

By James F. B. Sawyer and Ann Grant

The Tooth of Crime, by Sam Shepard, is appearing at Stage West in West Springfield as the second Shepard play to be produced in the area in slightly more than a month. Another of Shepard's works, a one-act play titled Chicago, was produced at Northampton's City Studio Theatre near the end of last semester.

After opening at Stage West on the twentieth, The Tooth of Crime moves to Harvard's Loeb Drama Center in Cambridge for a run from the twenty-sixth to the twenty-ninth. It will then return to West Springfield to be run in repertory with Henrik Ibsen's When We Dead Awaken, February first through the nineteenth.

Sam Shepard as playwright, is critical of society's influence on the individual. In Chicago, he deals only with the present. However, in The Tooth of Crime, Shepard deals with the future as our past and present might affect it.

By drawing on elements of young American sub-culture, such as rock and jazz, the status symbols of souped-up cars, flagrant abuse of drugs and a punk-like thirst for blood and power, Shepard organizes a Game complete with rules, referees and Keepers, and then calls on the audience to view the action from both inside and out.

Hoss, played perceptively by Clyde Burton, is an aging "Marker" protected from the game that made him famous by that very fame. Insulated from the outside world by his groupies, Becky (Sharon Ernster), Star-Man (Renos Mandis), Cheyenne (Chris Romilly) and Doc (Wyman Pendleton), Hoss, a deadly cross between Elvis Presley and James Dean, tries to come to terms with the conflict of growing old in a punk's world.

This conflict is brought to a head by the arrival of a Gypsy (Crow, played by Mark Metcalf) a Marker who plays outside the Game, who is bent on wiping Hoss out, both as a power and a person.

As is often the case with many new ideas in theatre, some concepts were presented somewhat unclearly. In this case, the fault seemed to lie with direction and not with the individual performers. Granted, the late substitution of the second lead character of Crow, would have contributed to problems in the development of characters.

At the places where things worked well, they worked extremely well. But, where they didn't work, they detracted from the otherwise first-rate efforts of the company.

One example of an exceptional moment, a good synthesis of well placed direction and unique acting ability, came in Act Two. Sharon Ernster as Becky presented a rape memory so real that involuntary gasps came from the women in the audience who could see bits of their own lives falling apart onstage. This, by contrast, simply served to make Becky's weaker moments that much weaker.

Special effects played an important part in the entire production. From the dry ice opening, through the Star

Hemoglobin Horror vs. Phagocyte Phoreplay

By E. Patrick McQuaid

"Well, at least we may get a scare or two thrown into us," I said as we began the long climb up the winding, seemingly endless staircase of the Boston Arts Group Theatre. DRACULA promises to be a totally new adaptation of the ancient legend depicting the vampire as an "angel of seduction" and playing down his role as the Prince of the Undead.

We were not aroused by this seemingly "sensual" Transylvanian played by Stephen Guntli. Although we were forewarned not to expect the pale-faced, pink-lipped fly-by-night that we've felt safe with over the years of late night reruns we were not prepared for this newfangled Dracula who moved from neck to neck with the agility of a Mr. Tux mannikin. The famous "Blah! Blah!" accent was toned down and the result was an asthmatic Charlie Chan. We feel that the production suffered with this half-way attempt and would have done better to dispense with the accents altogether. Particularly disturbing in this vein, was Spiro Veloudos' portrayal of the Teutonic Dr. Abraham Van Helsing, the stout garlic bearer who eventually drives the stake home.

Unlike most Draculas that we are used to, the plot did not stray too far from the original by Bram Stoker. The novel is narrated through a series of personal diaries relating the peculiar ongoings at both Castle Dracula and an English sanatorium. The Daedalus II production has attempted to do the same via a series of some 20 episodes but unfortunately these scenes are much too short and do not allow any time for any good acting. Lengthly blackouts between scenes, embellished by long, sometimes erotic moans and an annoying piano composition entitled "Carnival of the Insane" by Bruce Kushnick fail to lend any creedence to the stage action, or raise the chill factor.

Following the intermission the scenes tend to get a little longer and the actors have a chance to breath and get a feel for their parts. David Watson plays the part of Dr. John Seward, the sexually repressed father of the victim and director of a sanatorium in a small, seaside town in Sussex. The true terror and madness of what is happening is reflected through Watson's outstanding portrayal of Seward a prudish Victorian who breaks-down at the sight of his daughter under the influence of the Count and declares her "Unclean!"

Also of note is the performance of William Welch who played the first of the Westerners to fall prey to the powers of darkness, Jonathan Harker. It is the character of Harker, and not of Mr. Welch, who in his diaries dismisses the bizarre actions of his strange host such as Dracula sucking the blood from Harker's shaving wound or later when he sees the Count scaling the castle walls from his window like a spider. He attributes these strange goings-on to "shadows" and his own restlessness. This is no lack of acting for the script does not call for "dramatics" here;

GIRAFFE RAPS

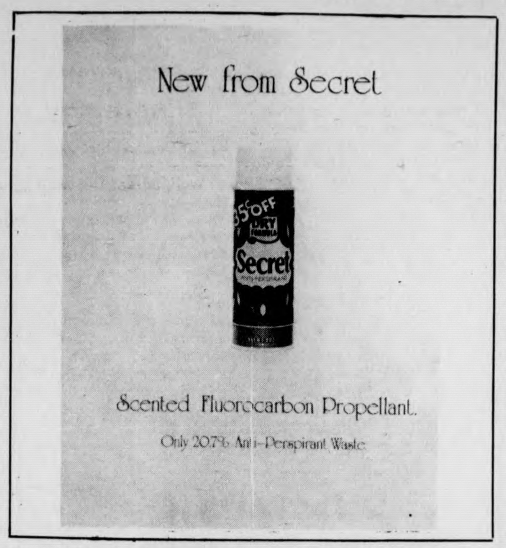
by Terrance Shukle
Metatron-Street Fiction
Press, Inc.

By E. Patrick McQuaid

Giraffe Raps (the editors didn't explain that part) is cataloged, according to the Library of Congress under "Commercial Art" and "Advertising - Psychological Aspects". We happened across a copy on the oversized-paperbacks table of a Harvard Square bookshop. It seems that a good number of books that take on controversial issues that rate an occasional essay in the likes of Time Magazine end up on either oversized or ahead-of-its-time tables in Harvard Square.

The Library of Congress may disagree, but this reviewer thinks that Giraffe Raps should be classified under a heading such as political photojournalism; if such a compendium exists.

It's a fun book, a lampoon of national advertising at its worst, but to call it "humor" would be a serious error.



New from Secret

Scented Fluorocarbon Propellant.

Only 20.7% Anti-Perspirant Waste.

Giraffe Raps has taken actual brand-name ads and de-slicked them down to a level that is most times laughable matter and sometimes outrageously offensive and occasionally sickening. But there is a point, a very strong political statement is being made here. The ads are all familiar to you and you'll never be able to look at the original promos that grace billboards or magazine backs with the same indifference.

All the research that went into Subliminal Seduction, or his most recent Sexplotation can be found on these pages without the lengthly social comments. Nothing need be said; Giraffe Raps is a little too serious to be funny. But laugh. You will laugh if you have any sense of humor but leafing through this oversized paperback is a lot like watching the original M-A-S-H. Sooner or later you realize what you're laughing at and you have to catch your breath or choke.

We've reprinted a few of the ads here to accompany this review but we've also slipped one in with the other, "legit" ads somewhere else in Below the Salt. If you can't pick out the joke from the real ads than you have been Giraffe Raps a much better and deserving review than I could ever write.

COMPLETE ISSUE OF NEW YORK MAGAZINE INSIDE
Q. DO YOU KNOW THE WOMEN'S MOVEMENT HAS NO SENSE OF HUMOR?
A. YES

"Titters" is meant to make you laugh, whoever you are."
—Deanne Stillman
and Anne Beatts

Humor is a very subjective thing; what you find hilarious may offend someone else, and vice versa. Many of you will most likely find some of the material in Titters to be not funny, even offensive. But whoever you are, I dare you to read Titters and not laugh at least once.

You won't be able to do it. This is a funny, funny book.

This "first collection of humor by women" includes parodies, songs, visual gags, comic strips and just about anything else you can think of. Editors Deanne Stillman (founding editor of Bitch, humor magazine for women) and Anne Beatts (formerly an editor at National Lampoon and now an Emmy winning writer for NBC's "Saturday Night") are no strangers to comedy, and in Titters they have let loose a flood of creative energy.

Sometimes the humor in Titters succeeds, sometimes it doesn't (we could get along nicely without the "Sylvia Plath Cookbook" and its ground glass recipes, thank you). It is rude and insulting in spots, but when the humor is good it is ... brilliant.

I dare you again to read this book and not laugh at all.

Stillman and Beatts wrote much of the material themselves but female (not necessarily feminist) wits like Erma Bombeck, Gail Parent, Phyllis Diller, and Peg Bracken (just to name a few) are well represented here. Although the humor in Titters is written entirely by women, it is not "women's humor" or humor only for women. "Is there such a thing as women's humor?" ask the editors in their intro. "Hard to say. Is there such a thing as women's mathematics?"

There are parodies of women's literature, including Ms. magazine, Fear of Flying, and the Tampax instruction brochure. It is lewd, crude, and rude but more importantly it is women laughing at themselves and really getting off on the hilarity of their situation. Sometimes life gets so absurd that you just gotta laugh, right?

So Titters is not necessarily humor for women only (I know a few men personally who think it is quite funny) but I suspect that women will get more out of this book than most men. As the editors state, " ... we (women) know far more about what guys really talk about in the locker room than they know about what any four women, chosen at random, say to each other when there are no men around."

Reflect, women, on your junior high school gym class for a moment then pick up a copy of Titters and read "Phys. Ed. Phunnies." It's a subject that only a woman who has been through it could write about and that most likely only a woman who has been through it would find it all funny. Like much of the humor in Titters "you had to be there" or you won't get your full dose of laughs out of it.

Yes, Virginia, women really do have a sense of humor. And Titters proves it. At last. All this time you thought that the women's movement had no sense of humor, now isn't it nice to find out you were mistaken.

One final note: Titters' male nude centerfold, Pat Oleszko, is actually a woman.

Man's fireman's-pole entry and hinging on the referee's cutting of Hoss' microphone cord, special efforts enhanced the creation of the conjured moods.

Stage West's production of The Tooth of Crime is mysteriously empathy-instilling. For no nameable reason, its adrenaline remains after the house lights shine on the vacated seats. The energy evoked by the play alone is one very good reason for taking it in. For ticket information, call the box office at 736-7092.

however, later during the performance, Welch's composed Harker becomes a delirious psychopath who is locked away at Seward's asylum. Here is a much more believable character and a credit to Welch's acting abilities.

Like the rest of the cast, Karen Ross seems to be locked into a role that allows little room for breathing. As the dainty daughter of Dr. Seward she is quite believable; she also has the later role of a crazy and like Welch she does not faulter. Unfortunately author John Adams has assigned her with perhaps the worst lines of the script: "I'm no Desdemona dazzled by tales of daring-do!" she tells Dracula.

Least convincing was the part of Van Helsing by Spiro Veloudos, the kind-hearted vampire killer who struts his way across the stage dragging behind him a pseudo-limp that only served to draw attention away from his bellowsome speech givings. His appearance in the first scene as an irate innkeeper is his peak performance.

It would certainly appear that director Barry Magnani has focused too much attention on the idea of his Dracula being the energy source of a sex cult rather than working with an obviously talented cast to produce, at best, a believable adaptation.

Informed sources tell us that the cast gave a much more chilling performance at a Boston based Red Cross Blood Donating Center staged by promoter Charles J. Cohen. For this bogie, Cohen has been nominated by the Boston Phoenix for the 1976 Clarabel Barton Plasma for Publicity Award.

We second it.

Puffton 17 given continuances

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

Seventeen people arrested Dec. 1 in Puffton Village while attempting to block a tenant's eviction were given continuances without findings for 6 months and assessed $50 each in court costs by Hampshire County District Court Judge Luke F. Ryan Friday in Northampton.

The court costs must be paid by Feb. 11.

Jean Cahill, the tenant being evicted, and 16 others were arrested by a group of Amherst and Hampshire County law enforcement officers, and charged with disturbing the peace and being disorderly persons. The additional charge of conducting an unlawful assembly was added before the group's trial Dec. 10.

The Amherst Tenants Association Legal Defense Fund is in the process of collecting money to pay the $850 in court costs for the group, said Ralph Daniels, one of the 17 arrested.

Ryan had originally continued the hearing from Dec. 10 to Jan. 7 so probation reports could be completed on the defendants. The case was not reconvened, however, until Friday because Jan. 7 was an inconvenient day for many involved with the case.

All the defendants submitted to the sufficiency of the facts, and the prosecuting attorney and probation reports concurred on the recommendation for the continuances.

When a defendant submits to the sufficiency of the facts on a charge it means the facts are enough to warrant a finding of guilty but that the judge will not enter such a finding in the record. The judge then continues the case for a specified period of time, and at the expiration of that time, the defendant is left without a criminal record. Because the defendant has not been found guilty, no fine can be assessed, so the court assesses court costs in place of a fine.

Knowing that Cahill was to be evicted Dec. 1 after a long and protracted struggle to keep her in the federally subsidized housing with her son and a number of other people, 65 friends and tenants' rights advocates gathered outside the apartment in an attempt to block the eviction. They held placards and protested the eviction for a number of hours despite being asked a number of times by Amherst police to disperse and leave the area.

Early in the afternoon, Donald Maia, chief of the Amherst Police Department, declared the gathering an unlawful assembly and ordered the protesters to leave or be subject to arrest. Town police and officers from the Hampshire County Sheriff's office then proceeded to arrest the 17 people who were blocking the door to Cahill's apartment, but made no attempt to arrest other protesters who had formed a picket line outside the apartment.

After the police had arrested the 17 and were inside Cahill's apartment with movers, the protesters deflated a tire on the moving van to be used to move Cahill's belongings and continued to move in a picket line. Cahill's belongings were then moved out on to North Pleasant Street in accordance with her request where friends kept watch over them in shifts until they were moved to various locations.

The involvement of representatives of the Massachusetts branch of the United States office of Housing and Urban Development, as well as a letter from Massachusetts Sen. Edward Kennedy promising Cahill there would be no eviction, failed to halt the proceeding.

It was a case of "stuffing the Huskies" for UMass cheerleaders, but the UMass men's basketball team was a bit less convincing as it squeezed by UConn, 65-64. See story pg. 16. (Staff photo by Rob Carlin)

Tenants Association steps back for a rest

By JERRY ROGERS
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Tenants Association (ATA) is catching a breather. Following the arrest of 17 people who were trying to block the eviction of Jean Cahill from her Puffton Village apartment Dec. 1, the association has stepped back from their activities and taken a long look at their politics and tenants organizing tactics, said Ralph Daniels, one of the 17 arrested, and an ATA member.

Daniels explained that the association took January to reorganize and solidify its politics. The group of 100 card-carrying members is planning to hold clinics in various apartment complexes in the area, is negotiating with WMUA for a weekly radio spot to report on tenants' rights and is raising money for its defense fund to pay the $50 court costs assessed each of the 17 people arrested in Puffton.

The defense fund has collected about $500 so far, Daniels said, and has not yet begun to receive responses to a letter to Hampshire College, Amherst College and UMass staff and faculty, which outlines the case and asks for donations for the defense fund.

The letter says, in part, "The Puffton 17 appeal to you for financial assistance. The protection of one tenant means the protection of all."

The defense fund has had numerous bake sales and will be showing two movies at Hampshire College to supplement the fund. The first is a documentary on the Chilean junta made by two East Germans who traveled through Chile posing as two West Germans sympathetic to the junta's rule. It will be shown at Hampshire Feb. 8 at 7:30 and is entitled "I was, I am, I will be". Donation is $1.

The second film is scheduled for Feb. 12 at 7:30 and 9:30. It will be "Cool Hand Luke" and the donation will again be $1.

Daniels said he even walked around town and in the Campus Center with sandwich board signs explaining the case and was able to collect $25 to $30. The defense fund, through the ATA, will be taking donations at 47 So. Prospect St., and will continue to staff a table in the Campus Center, he said.

"We all meet, as many of us as can make it, every Wednesday and discuss our dealings with the press, our statements and raising money for the fund. The educational aspects of our work have been secondary lately," Daniels explained.

Daniels stressed that these meetings were held for those that were arrested, and that the defense fund will disband when its work is finished, but that the ATA will continue with its work.

The ATA will work on clinics, a radio spot on WMUA and other educational activities in the future, rather than expend inordinate amounts of energy on something like last fall's rent control referendum, said Daniels.

He explained that the rent control work took too much energy and time and that rent control is not an issue people can experience an immediate effect from. They will, therefore, be less responsive than they would to such things as organizing for enforcement of the state sanitary code, he said.

In a press release issued Friday, those arrested Dec. 1 explained that the only reason they accepted the continuances rather than fight the charges was because fighting them would have taken too much time that could be better spent organizing tenants.

It said, "... primarily we will be encouraging all tenants to organize to fight evictions, unfair leases, arbitrary rent raises and inadequate inspection systems for securing safe living conditions."

NE vet school comes to a vote

By MARTHA KIMBALL
Collegian Staff

The fate of the proposed New England Regional Veterinary School will be decided when the trustees of Tufts University meet on Feb. 5 and vote on whether to proceed with the planning recommended by the Tufts' Feasibility Committee. This committee presented their proposal to the trustees last November.

The passing of this proposal and the founding of a New England Regional Vet School will open many gateways to pre-vet students at UMass and the other five land-grant universities in New England. Presently there are only 19 colleges of veterinary medicine in the United States, making admittance to those schools extremely difficult unless the applicant's state has contracted seats at the schools.

Henry T. Wilson, director of public relations for Tufts New England Medical Center, expects the university's president to give positive recommendation that planning for the vet school continues.

Formal arrangements with the six New England states regarding financing and curriculum will be made pending the decision of the trustees Feb. 5.

One authority cited 1979 as an optimistic date for the program to be underway, pending approval of the Board of Higher Education as well as financial support.

The proposal to date, explained by UMass Professor Russell Smith, pre-vet advisor, involves spending the first two years at the medical and dental schools of Tufts University. The last two clinical years are coordinated with the six New England land grant universities, Angel Memorial Hospital in Boston and the Primate Research Center in Southboro and Woods Hole, Falmouth.

Smith said the Cornell University vet school and the University of Pennsylvania vet school want to cooperate. They have proposed a shared resource program during the elective years of study combined with a contract arrangement among the New England states.

The Massachusetts State Legislature purchased 10 student spaces, five at Cornell and five at Pennsylvania last year. The Commonwealth has contracted to pay $8000 annually for each of its residents accepted by those two schools.

Over the past decade New England students have had increasing difficulty regarding admittance to vet schools. The decision of the Tufts' Board of Trustees on Feb. 5th will be a sink or swim decision for many students.

'Roots' ends run; many on campus view TV series

By BERNIE DAVIDOW
Collegian Staff

"Roots", ABC-TV's ambitious production of Alex Haley's best-selling book, ended last night, but not without the notice of millions of viewers across the country, and a large part of the UMass population.

"It's the best and most meaningful portrait of a black family ever on television, said O.C. Bubby Daniels, associate dean of students here and instruction of a course on interracial apperception and ideology.

Although critical of television for continuing some of the sexual and racial stereotypes often exhibited in elementary school textbooks, Daniels said the 12-hour production of "Roots" is a "great step forward" for television.

"Roots", which Haley calls the saga of an American family, traces the ancestry of the book's author back to Kunta Kinte, an African abducted from his village and taken to the United States as a slave.

Many people around campus are saying the dramatization of the oppression of Kinte and his descendents made them "angry; empty."

One student watching the program said the brutality of slavery as depicted in the show made him "tee-d off".

"It's taken years for something like this to come out," he said.

At least 25 people, half of those in his fraternity, crowded into one room in their house to watch the program every night. "We usually have a meeting on Tuesday, but last week we scheduled it around the show," he said.

Aside from anger, the show has brought out other emotions.

"People here were crying yesterday became some guy got killed," a waitress at the Top of the Campus (TOC) said Saturday. She said "Roots" was tuned in on the TOC television every night last week.

After the first evening of the eight-night show, "I couldn't even speak for 45 minutes," one faculty member said.

"I broke down three or four times" during the first program he said, when the episode Kinte was taken from his village and forced aboard the slave ship. "I think I'd be worried if I wasn't moved by a show like this."

The faculty member, who said he spent three years in Mandingo, the area in Africa where Kinte lived, said the show was especially significant in that "It shows that black people have a history — a heritage," and portrayed the African family "not as if it were the subject for some anthropological study."

One student watching the show on Saturday night with more than 20 other people on the bottom floor of the Campus Center, said, "I'm sure back in my dorm (MacKimmie) every TV is turned on to it."

According to The New York Times, "Roots" should have, by last night, amassed the largest cumulative audience for any single television program ever.

The Times reported the Tuesday night episode garnered the third largest audience in television history, second only to the two parts of "Gone With the Wind" shown last year. Seen in 31,900,000 homes, "Roots" had a mass audience of over 80 million viewers.

Women plan Women's Week

By MELANIE JOHNSON

International Women's Week moves into the planning stages tonight with a recruitment meeting at 8 in room 168 of the Campus Center.

Concerts, speakers, workshops and theatre presentations are scheduled for the week-long festival to be held March 6 through 12. Tonight's meeting is an opportunity for interested persons to help organize and promote events.

The Distinguished Visitors Program (DVP) has donated $5,000 for speakers. Steering members plan to meet with DVP this week for confirmation of proposed speakers. On the list of possible candidates for speaking engagements include Adriane Rich, Yvonne Wanrow, Grace Lee Banks, Rita Mae Brown and Helen Rodriguezs.

The Program Council has allocated $2500 for a Student Union Ballroom concert tentatively scheduled for Friday, March 11. Potential performers include Buffy St. Marie, Jane Aldeman, Chris Williamson and Ellen Macowane.

In addition, the Undergraduate Student Senate has funded a Fine Arts Center performance by black jazz musician Betty Carter. Charlotte Allen, steering committee member, said she hopes the March 6 event will draw a large crowd and spark interest in remaining events.

The committee also hopes to have women's bands in the Hatch, Top of the Campus, and the Blue Wall. Jade Sasparilla, Lillith and the Deadly Nightshade are under consideration.

In addition to scheduled workshops, March 8 has been designated "China Night." The Little Flag Theatre "San Shen," and "Tanya," on March 9 and 10 respectively. These plays focus on the roles of women in revolutionary governments.

A dance concert will be sponsored by Ahora, a Spanish-speaking organization, on March 12.

It is hoped that childcare can be provided for mothers during the festival week. Allen said that groups and community organizations could display crafts at a Resource Fair in the Student Union Ballroom.

Blood drive hopes to better fall total

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

Most people who give blood come back and give again and again; it's just the initial time that most people are afraid," says Fred Shea, one of the people in charge of this semester's Red Cross blood drive now at the University Health Services.

The drive began the first day of classes and has so far collected 46 pints of whole blood. However, Shea says this has got to improve significantly and urges people of all blood types to come in and help out.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is sponsoring this week's blood drive. During the Collegian's week last semester, 15 per cent of the fall's total amount of blood was gathered with a weekly high of 114 pints.

Shea said he is hoping the maximum amount of 30 to 35 people show up to give blood this week. Appointments for Tuesday through Thursday this week between 5:30 and 9:30 p.m. can be made at any time in the Collegian business office.

The UMass blood drive helps to fill the daily needs of western Massachusetts which Shea says are critical this year.

He said that any person from ages 18 to 65 may donate blood if he or she weighs more than 110 pounds, has not had either hepatitis or jaundice, taken medication in the past 24 hours or had an operation in the past six months.

Shea told the Collegian what happens to donors upon arrival at Health Services: "A registration form is filled out with the person's basic data. Their temperature is then taken and if normal, they are then sent into see a nurse who questions the donors about their medical history as the donor's blood pressure is taken.

"A small sample of blood is then taken from the left earlobe. Blood from the fingers used to be taken but it was found that blood taken from the earlobe is much less painful. The blood sample is then dropped into a solution to check for hemoglobin."

The actual giving of the blood which takes from 7 to ten minutes follows. Donors are then sent to a small canteen for refreshments where they are free to leave. "Normally, the whole process takes an hour from walk in to walk out," Shea said.

Last semester's 32 days of collection netted an average of 22.5 pints per day Shea said, which was an 87.5 per cent increase over the 1975 fall semester.

The blood donor center is on the ground floor of Health Services.

Shea said UMass is the only campus in the Northeast with its own donor center and, as such, is being watched very closely by the Red Cross to determine the visibility of centers elsewhere.

Video Project produces satire

By K.L. PHELAN

The lights raise in a corner room on the nineteenth floor of Lee Harvey Oswald Tower. Burt Buttkiss, scrum half for the rugby team, is looking out his window with a pair of high-powered binoculars. He is wearing a pair of skin-tight track shorts and tennis sneakers. The camera focuses on the twitching and rippling muscles of his back. He gives a series of low moans in response to what he sees in the women's dorm across the parking lot.

His roommate enters. He is wearing a white chiffon robe, decorated at the sleeves and throat with maribu feathers. He starts dusting the room, eventually working his way in front of Buttkiss, obstructing his view.

"Out of my way, you snow queen," Buttkiss says furiously, knocking him down with one powerful sweep. A young woman runs in, obviously upset with mascara running all over her face, and touches Buttkiss lightly on the shoulder.

Without turning around, he viciously shoves her on top of the man in feathers.

"I told you never to touch me, you creep!" he yells.

"But Burt," the woman says, with hysteria edging in her voice, "the rabbit died!"

The Student Video Project is currently programming two new shows for this spring. The first is a weekly soap opera satirizing campus life. It will be viewed in various spots on campus, and is scheduled to run with a video magazine.

"Fran DeVasto, director of the weekly soap said, "the show promises to be very interesting and funny. It'll be a real firecracker and will give a chance for the iconoclasts in the college community to sound off."

David Skillicorn, who heads the video project said he would like to see more people involved. He will be editing the weekly Video Magazine, which will be a series of light documentaries of any topic of interest to UMass students.

"This is an opportunity for females as well as males to become involved in the technical aspect of production," said Ann Hadley, technical director of the soap. "It's a chance to try something I've always wanted to try, and I'd like to see other women get involved even if they have no experience. That's what we're for — to give students a chance to get some working experience."

Mark Gunning, the show's producer said, "I see stars." He urged all interested individuals to come to the general meeting at 7:30 tomorrow night.

All you want to know about groundhogs...

By ALAN SHEPARD
Collegian Staff

"Every dog has its day" so to speak and on most calendars Feb. 2 this Wednesday is designated as Groundhog's Day. This distinction puts the rodent in the elite group of notables such as Washington, Lincoln, Mother, Father, Columbus and St. Valentine.

On this day the groundhog sets out to do what meteorologists have recently been unsuccessful in accomplishing: predict the weather. While our weather reporters rely mostly on maps, tides, graphs and satellites, the groundhog has a simpler approach.

As legend has it, at about 11 a.m. the groundhog ends its hibernation and emerges from its den. If the sun is out and casts a shadow, the groundhog returns to its hole and we're stuck with five more weeks of winter. But if no shadow appears, spring is here and we can shed our down parkas, trade in our skis, break out the frisbees and start cutting those late afternoon classes.

Of course, scientists ruin the fun, stating the groundhog does not begin spring activity until late March or early April. Once it emerges from its habitat, the groundhog's main concerns are finding food for its body, which has lost half of its weight in hibernation and locating a mate.

One skeptic tells of his younger days when he and a few colleagues formed an unchartered Groundhog Society. They approached the den to observe this historic event. Eleven o'clock came and went and when high noon approached, they decided to take matters into their own hands. With pickaxes and shovels they opened the earth only to find a small ball of brown fur, alive in flesh but dead to the world.

Several years later this same skeptic was fortunate enough to observe a groundhog after it had just emerged from its hibernation. He described it as, "drugged by no mere lost weekend, but by nearly six months of blotto, the animal seemed partly blind. His legs unsteady, he reeled, lurched like a drunkard, and as the vitality of his body was slowly restored with the efforts of exercise, he collapsed several times."

The Museum of Science in Boston challenged the credibility of the groundhog. "Sorry", the report said, "but you better not depend on this little fellow for any weather forecasting. After all, who can rely on an animal with an alias. He's really a woodchuck and as a matter of fact, he's even called a marmot by some people."

There are conflicting reports as to where this custom originated. There's a possibility that it existed back in Europe in pre-Christian times, when the hedgehog was the weather prophet of the day. Or it might have been brought to this country by immigrants from Great Britain and Germany. Others say it originated with the blacks of the eastern middle states.

Missouri was the first to declare February 2 as Groundhog Day. In that state lives the Punxsutawney Groundhog, said to be the nation's official weather forecaster. Gobbler's Knob is the home of this legendary prophet. This story was traced back to 1882, and was the creation of some card-playing men who were supposedly sitting around a keg of beer frying a groundhog in butter when they thought of it.

In the early part of the century, a group of merry men in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, organized the Slumbering Groundhog Lodge. These men set out on this designated day with silk hats and canes in search of the woodchuck. When one of them found a burrow he would signal the others and they would surround the hole. After observing its behavior, they would return back to the village to inform the people.

'Roots' breaks records

[AP] — "Roots" is causing a phenomenal reaction across the country and, with two episodes to go, is already the most-watched television series of all time.

It's Super Bowl every night. People are bringing TV sets to work, watching in airports and bars, leaving meetings early and emptying movie theaters and restaurants to get home in time for the nightly episode. At least 250 colleges are offering credits for watching the series and reading the book by Alex Haley.

Based on Haley's fictionalized history of his family, from freedom in Africa to slavery in America to freedom again, "Roots" opened last Sunday with an audience of 75 million, according to ABC, and has gotten bigger every night.

The 12-hour, eight-part series is already the most-watched TV series and ABC hopes that its Sunday-night conclusion will become the highest-rated single show. The Tuesday night Neilsen ratings — 44.8 and 68 per cent of the audience — is exceeded only by the two-part showing of the film classic "Gone with the Wind" as the highest-rated TV presentation of all time.

"Television will never be the after this," said ABC's Brandon Stoddard.

The TV version of "Roots" has shown a realistic portrayal of slavery in which blacks are casually and deliberately dehumanized and brutalized by whites.

Although widely praised by civil rights leaders, the series has been controversial. Viewers in some cities complained and it was blamed for racial incidents at schools in Harrisburg, Pa., and Detroit. David Duke, head of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, called it "highly inaccurate".

Despite nudity, violence and a strongly emotional theme, many schools are encouraging students to watch. Los Angeles schools have distributed hundreds of copies of the book for a study course beginning next week.

In Inster, Mich., Supt. of Schools Cleveland Hammonds said he found no objection to nudity, most of which occured during scenes showing life in Africa. "I think the series handled those scenes appropriately," he said.

He said some parents were apprehensive when it was made required viewing, but "we have had no complaints from parents so far."

Stoddard, an ABC vice president, said the reaction has been so overwhelming it cannot be analyzed for weeks.

Festac 1977

The First World Black and African Festival of Arts and Culture was held in Dakar, Senegal, in 1966. It was then known simply as the World Festival of Negro Arts. At the end of that first festival Nigeria was invited to host the second festival.

At the end of the Nigerian civil war, the idea was resuscitated, and the festival was rescheduled to be held at the end of 1975. But because of changes in the Federal Military Government of Nigeria in July 1975, the festival was postponed in view of the obvious difficulties in providing all necessary facilities. Nigeria accepted the invitation, but because of the internal situation in the country, it was not possible to hold the festival that year.

Aims of the Festival

The principal aims of the festival are: (i) to ensure the revival, resurgence, propagation and promotion of Black and African cultural values and civilization; (ii) to present Black and African culture in its highest and widest conception; (iii) to bring to light the diverse contributions of Black and African peoples to the universal currents of thought and arts; (iv) to promote Black and African artists, performers and writers and facilitate their world outlets; (v) to promote better international and interracial understanding; (vi) to facilitate a periodic 'return to origin' in Africa by Black artists, writers and performers uprooted to other continents.

Venue of events

The main venue is Lagos, capital of the Federal Republic of Nigeria. But one major attraction, the Durbar, will take place in Kaduna, in the northern part of the country.

Governing body

The governing body for the festival is the International Festival Committee representing the present sixteen festival zones into which the Black African world has been divided. These sixteen zones are: South America, the Caribbean countries, USA-Canada, United Kingdom and Ireland, Europe, Australia-Asia, Eastern Africa, Southern Africa, East Africa (Community), Central Africa I and II, West Africa (Anglophone), West Africa (Francophone) I and II, Northern Africa and the liberation movements recognized by the Organization of African Unity. President of the committee is nominated by the Head of State of the host country (Nigeria).

Secretariat

An International Secretariat, established in Lagos to service the International Festival Committee, is the principal instrument for implementing and executing the Committee's decisions and generally organizing and running the Festival.

The Festival emblem

This 16th century ivory mask from Benin has emerged through the years as one of the finest examples of known African and Black art. It was worn as a pectoral by Benin kings on royal ancestral ceremonial occasions; and was last worn by King Ovoramwen who was dethroned at the fall of the Benin Empire in 1897. The same year, it fell into the hands of the Consul-General of the Niger Coast Protectorate, Sir Ralph Moor, and now rests in the British Museum.

The tiara formation at the crest of the mask is made of ten stylized heads and symbolizes the king's divine supremacy and suzerainty. The two incisions on the forehead which were originally filled with iron strips are royal tattoo marks. Round the neck, the artist has carved the coral bead collar which is a common feature of the king's paraphernalia.

Festival flag

The flag of the festival is a tricolour flag of three equal perpendicular rectangles.

The two outside rectangles are in black and the central rectangle is in gold. Over the gold is superimposed centrally the festival emblem. The black colour represents the Black people of the world.

The gold colour represents two ideas. It represents the wealth of the culture of the areas and peoples embraced by the festival. It also stands for the non-Black people associated with Black people in the festival.

Desegregation report 'fixed'

BOSTON [UPI] — A massive report compiled by the Boston School Department was deliberately slanted to blame federally ordered desegregation for deficiencies in teaching and learning, according to a court-appointed expert.

The 900-page report was put together to support city application for $8.4 million in federal aid.

"Desegregation is not the problem," said Dean Robert Dentler, head of the Boston University School of Education. "It is the stick that lifts the rock that obscures the problem."

"The problem is ignorance and its embodiment in educational policy and practice," he said.

The report, issued this month, gave officials opposing the desegregation orders of U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. more ammunition.

Dentler said only 46 per cent of the teachers polled by those making the report answered, while only 34 of 190 administrators' queried responded.

"the sample is biased and the response rate is low for an obligatory survey," said Dentler.

The report concluded racial tensions have not been relieved, that the learning process has been retarded and that minority students have not profited by the desegregation orders, which Garrity first issued in 1974.

Another first

ATLANTA [AP] — Horace T. Ward has become Georgia's first black Superior Court judge.

Ward, 49, was appointed to the State Court bench in Fulton County in 1974 by then Gov. Jimmy Carter. Earlier he was in the state Senate for 10 years.

He was appointed to the Superior Court in Fulton County by Gov. George Busbee to fill a vacancy created by the resignation of Judge Jack Etheridge.

Freddie's dead!

HOLLYWOOD [UPI] — Freddie Prinze, 22-year-old star of television's "Chico and the Man," put a bullet through his head Friday in despondency over a recent divorce action brought by his wife.

Neurosurgeons fought to save the gravely wounded comedian's life by surgery some six and a half hours after the suicide attempt.

Prinze was kept alive in the hospital's intensive care unit on life support systems until taken into surgery.

Shortly before 4 a.m., according to police, Prinze pulled a medium caliber foreign pistol from under a pillow in his luxurious Wilshire Boulevard apartment and pulled the trigger.

The bullet crashed into his left temple as his horrified business manager, Marvin Snyder, looked on.

"I did not see the gun until it was too late," Snyder said.

Police found a note reading: "I can't take it any longer."

Before attempting to take his own life the 6-foot-2 star telephoned his parents and estranged wife, Kathy Elaine, to tell them he intended to kill himself, police said.

Paramedic Tom Gilmartin was called to Prinze's apartment near Beverly Hills shortly after 4 a.m. He told UPI, "We found Prinze in the living room with a gun across his lap.

"The wound was what we call a through and through. It entered one side of his head and went out the other.

Police said Prinze's action was not altogether spontaneous. He had apparently fired a "test shot" earlier in the day which struck a wall and tore through a medicine cabinet.

A spokesman for Prinze said the young man had telephoned friends most of the night to relieve his depression.

In addition to the divorce, which was filed last December, Prinze was disturbed by a forthcoming court appearance on a charge of driving under the influence of drugs. Tests showed his blood contained a tranquilizer when he was arrested last Nov. 5.

Friends said Prinze, who was to be buried at Old North Church of Forest Lawn, was just too young to cope with the pressures of stardom.

James Komack, executive producer of the "Chico and the Man" television series that made Prinze a star, said Prinze was "the most gifted entertainer of his time" but was uncomfortable in the real world.

"Unfortunately, he had to grow up in the glare of the public spotlight and everything he did while approaching maturity was magnified," said Komack.

If Prinze had been older when he reached stardom, Komack said, "he would have been sure enough and seasoned enough to look at the world properly."

Prinze's parents, for whom he bought a Southern California home recently, waited with several friends at the hosptial.

Jack Albertson, who costars with Prinze in "Chico and the Man," was surprised and saddened by the news. He told UPI, "Freddie didn't talk about his marriage to me. We moved in different circles but we were very close to one another.

"This impending divorce was preying on his mind. And he did have some trouble with a former manager. I guess these things more or less piled up on Freddie."

Prinze, normally a happy, upbeat youth with a running line of gags, was born and reared in New York's Spanish Harlem. He was born June 22, 1954, of a Puerto Rican mother and a Hungarian father.

PITTSBURGH: President Carter flew to Pittsburgh to dramatize the seriousness of the winter energy crisis and to point out that "We're all in this together."

Fuel emergency occupies Congress

WASHINGTON [AP] — The bitter weather and fuel emergency dominates Congress this week as both chambers work on legislation to give President Carter the natural gas rationing authority he seeks.

Votes may come in the House and Senate by tomorrow.

The House Commerce Committee planned to finish work on its version today so that leaders could schedule it for handling under speedup procedures tomorrow.

The corresponding measure is already on the Senate floor, but faces a series of attempts to amend it. Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va., said he would try to bring it to a vote today but the odds appeared against action that fast.

Carter's energy chief, James R. Schlesinger, earlier pleaded for passage of the measure without major change so that Carter could act quickly to control gas supplies in hard-hit states where nearly one-half million workers have been idled by shutdown, many schools are closed and, Schlesinger has said, heating supplies for residences may be threatened if the cold continues.

Urging Congress to act immediately on the stopgap bill, the new administration has promised to submit longer-range legislation to increase energy supplies by April 30.

Both chambers have internal problems to cope with after disposing of the energy legislation.

The House may vote Wednesday on a resolution recreating its special committee to investigate the assassinations of President John F. Kennedy and Civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.

Controversies have arisen about the committee's staff, proposed methods of operation and budget. Richard Sprague, who was the committee's counsel, has insisted it requires $6.5 million for the first year to conduct a proper investigation.

The Senate will probably return later in the week to a proposal for drastic overhauling of its committee system and jurisdiction.

The House Ways and Means Committee begins Wednesday to consider the tax aspects of Carter's $31.2 billion, two-year economic stimulation package. First witnesses will be Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal, Budget Director Thomas "Bert" Lance and Charles Schultze, chairman of the council of Economic Advisers.

Carter shows concern for energy conservation

WASHINGTON [AP] — Wearing a sweater and long underwear, President Carter toured a chilly, partially shutdown factory near Pittsburgh yesterday to emphasize the nation's deep-freeze energy crisis. He called upon Americans to make even greater sacrifices to ease the fuel shortage.

Carter urged persons with fireplaces to burn logs, turn their thermostats as low as 50 degrees and follow his long - underwear - and - sweater example. He called on businesses and institutions to switch to a four-day work week of 10 hours each day, saying it's more energy efficient.

At the Pennsylvania turbine plant and in a wide-ranging conversation with reporters on his return trip to Washington, Carter said he wants authority to take natural gas away from industries that employ few persons and make non-crucial products and allocate it to industries that employ many persons and make more essential goods.

He promised a comprehensive energy policy by April 20. He said he would telephone and meet with Congressional committee chairmen later in the day and Monday to discuss amendments, if any seem advisable, to his emergency energy legislation before Congress. The legislation would permit Carter to direct the distribution of natural gas from areas with abundant reserves to areas where shortages exist.

One such amendment might be the authority to allocate natural gas among industries, Carter said. "I would like to have it on a multi-state basis," he said. "Also the authority to authorize governors such as Milton Shapp of Pennsylvania, Jay Rockefeller of West Virginia and Hugh Carey of New York to do the allocating within the states."

The President said he is hopeful that his legislation will be approved today or tomorrow.

Carter flew by helicopter to Pittsburgh shortly after breakfast and rode by car to the East Pittsburgh Westinghouse plant, which manufactures turbines for electrical power plants. He spent nearly an hour at the plant talking to about two dozen workers.

BUZZARDS BAY, MASS.: The Cape Cod Canal was closed because of the ice-choked waters of Buzzards Bay. The 350-ft. barge Frederick E. Bouchard carrying some 3.5 million gallons of home heating oil lies in ice as another barge takes off oil.

Heating oil cargos trapped in frozen Cape Cod Canal

BOURNE, Mass. [AP] — The Coast Guard, fearing a stricken barge would become locked in ice at the Cape Cod Canal, decided yesterday to tow the vessel to Boston where the remainder of its cargo of home heating oil — enough to heat 1,000 homes — would be removed.

Already trapped in the ice covering Buzzards Bay were tugboats with two loaded barges, one carrying 10,500 tons of No. 2 oil and the other laden with 1,600 tons of cocoanut oil. The Coast Guard said neither vessel was damaged or in any immediate danger.

Coast Guard spokesman Mark Bourbeau said about half the barge Bouchard No. 65's 3.1 million gallon cargo had been pumped into another barge while tied up at the Massachusetts Maritime Academy at the canal's western end. But the operation was cut short by unspecified problems with the pumps and fears the barge would be caught in ice.

The damaged barge was bound for Boston's Castle Island dock. It was to be surrounded by a containment boom when unloading resumed, Bourbeau said.

A Coast Guard plane found two pockets of oil during a flight Sunday afternoon. The larger pool was spotted near Cleveland Ledge where the barge ran aground Friday night. The smaller puddle was near the shore at Wing's Neck where the unloading was first attempted Saturday.

Bourbeau said the Coast Guard had received permission from state and federal authorities to ignite the larger pool. He said it had not yet been decided how this would be done, but a chemical agent would probably be used. The attempt could be made today if the weather permitted.

"This oil's a lot lighter than the oil from the wrecked Argo Merchant, and they believe it will burn quite well," he said.

The Coast Guard considered burning the huge slick from the Argo Merchant after it broke up off Nantucket last month, but discarded the idea because of the rough seas.

Cleanup crews were to attempt to reach the Wing's Neck spill with a hose from a vacuum truck, he said.

The Coast Guard said very little oil appeared to be leaking from the damaged craft, which dumped an estimated 100,000 gallons of oil into the bay. Four of the 3,968-ton barge's 12 compartments were believed punctured in the mishap.

The Cannons Engineering Corp. of West Yarmouth and Clean Water of New Jersey have been hired by the barge owners, Bouchard Transportation of Hicksville, N.Y., to clean up the mess.

The barge ran aground near Cleveland Ledge Light, about 10 miles off Marion while being towed from Providence to Portland, Maine. The vessel was later towed to shallow waters near Pocasset Harbor, and from there to the academy.

Meanwhile, the Coast Guard cutter Yankton was to attempt to free the tugboats and barges caught near Cleveland Ledge. The Coast Guard said it would be difficult freeing the vessels because the ice was about two feet thick.

The average home needs about 1,500 gallons of No. 2 oil during a winter, oil industry sources say. With 100,000 gallons gone, half the remaining 3 million gallons on the Bouchard No. 65 would heat 1,000 homes.

The unusually severe ice conditions have closed the canal for the first time since 1972. The U.S. Army Corps of engineers, which maintains the waterway, said ice had completely blocked the western approaches through the bay.

The Donor Center needs YOU

What sets UMass apart — that is, besides having the world's tallest library...? One thing is the Blood Donor Center located at the Health Center, which is the only campus donor center in the Northeast.

The basic objective for donor centers is obtaining a fairly consistent supply of blood. Unlike bloodmobiles and periodic blood drives, a donor center can theoretically process new blood continuously and thus avoid the 'floods' and 'droughts' that often plague the blood business.

Last semester the UMass Donor Center was relatively successful, collecting some 718 pints on 32 dates — an increase of 87 per cent over the previous semester. The blood collected here was used mainly in Western Massachusetts hospitals, with some going to Boston and other areas during emergency situations. A recent severe shortage made that blood all the more important.

The shortage is over now, but the maintenance of a constant pulse of donations remains essential. In the hopes of getting the donor center off to a smashing start of the semester, the Collegian is helping sponsor a blood drive this week. The Center will be open Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday evenings from 5:30 to 9:30.

A sign-up sheet will be located in the Collegian business office, downstairs in the Campus Center, all week. Signing up in advance will help the Donor Center immensely, and will ensure that your stay will be as short as possible. And if you can't make it this week, the Center will be operating with the same hours until May 5. So give as soon as you can. Someone will be very grateful.

Let's tow the bums out of town

Tell me, way-hey tow them away,
The Lincoln Park Pirates are we,
From Wilmette to Gary,
There's nothing so hairy,
And we always collect our fee.

Tell me, way-hey tow them away,
We plunder the streets of your town.
Be it Edsel or Chevy,
There's no car too heavy
And no one can make us shut down.

Tell me, way-hey tow them away,
Now citizens gather around.
And I think its enough,
Then lets call their bluff;
Lets tow the bums out of town

from 'Lincoln Park Pirates'
by Steve Goodman

At a hearing held in Boston on December 6, 1976, under the auspices of John Seely of DPU, Amherst Towing Inc. had their license to two cars in Massachusetts SUSPENDED for two weeks effective January 3, 1977 (pending appeal). The charges: EXCEEDING the maximum fee allowable for police ordered towing in the state of Massachusetts, as established by the DPU. The 'pirates' claim that the provision of their contract with UMass, which agrees on a charge of $15.00 rather than $12.00, supercedes state regulations, and are appealing on this ground.

Also, UMass Legal Services has made time in an extremely tight schedule to represent us in a class action suit against Amherst Towing. The suit is only in the research stages now, of course, but here is how I envision the aftermath. For overcharging their victims (100-200 per week during the school year) a total of $3.75 ($3 per two, $.75 per storage) for two years (duration of the most recent UMass-AT contract), Amherst Towing should make retribution of between $18,000 and $36,000.

A student run tow service will be established on campus before August 1, to be financed by the University. UMass will sever all ties with Amherst Towing, thereby redressing a valid, widely held student grievance, doing irreparable damage to their piracy business, and in effect, towing the bums out of town.

Resurrected Dead

To the Editor:

Thousands and thousands of shapeless figures are parading across every inch of the earth, some are dancing in the streets; some on their feet, others on their heads. It's as if everybody is wasted. The warm air doesn't seem to be offering any resistance. The bees are buzzing their cheery tune as they dance from flower to flower.

The butterflies are reflecting the sunlight on to the passing gulls as they float by each other nodding their little heads in approval of all they see. The flowers seem to be almost enjoying the delicate sensation they feel, as the many insects stick their mouths deep into their supply of pollen. It's as if the energies of everything and everyone are tuned in on the very same beautiful thing. I'll ask that elated longhaired flower child standing over what the hell's happening.

"Hey, do you have any idea what's going down all around me? Everywhere I look there's babies laughing, children playing, parent's singing, even Louise Day Hicks resigned today saying she was too prejudiced to stand public office."

"Haven't you picked up a paper in a week. Where have you been, man? Man where have you been? The Grateful Dead are back, they've been resurrected. Some of the closer disciples even say Jerry (spelled with a "J", not a "G") rose playing his steel string pedal. They even go as far as to say he was singing Friend Of The Devil. La la la doo da do trailed by twenty hounds....."

"The Dead, I thought they died."

"The Dead can't die. Ya, know what I mean, as long as there's people alive that dig'm as much as I do. Besides they're coming out with a new album in a month or two. La da da da do dee do got a wife in chino baby, one in Tennessee, first one says she got my child but it don't look like me....."

Giving radical thinking a bad name

To the Editor:

I just finished reading "Behind the Death Penalty" by Messrs. Charles Bagli and Joel Weissman of the Student Revolutionary Brigade. It offends me that the Collegian's standards of what it will publish do not exclude articles, such as this one, which are so rambling and illogical as to amount almost to a tantrum. Although there are dozens of criticisms that could be made regarding the article's style and content, I will limit myself to the refutation of the two main points asserted by the authors.

The revolutionary government of Angola executed a convicted mercenary about a year ago. Many people were executed during and shortly after the successful revolutions in Indochina, Cuba, China and the Soviet Union. Soviet law today provides the death penalty for a second conviction for drunk driving. It is therefore apparent that the taking of life by the state is not limited to capitalist countries.

Further, to equate Gilmore's crimes and other capital crimes under the various state laws with assaults on the capitalist system is ridiculous. A rapist-murderer does not think of Rockefeller and DuPont while he does the deed.

I believe that capital punishment is primitive, pointless and immoral. I also believe that humanity stands in some danger from excessive technology and concentrations of wealth. However, nonsensical drivel such as the Bagli-Weissman column serves only to give radical thinking a bad name.

Complacency leads nowhere

Two years ago this winter I, along with many other students across this sprawling campus, went through a racial transformation in the way which we viewed and responded to the University's deteriorating fiscal situation. Then as now the Iron Duke of Massachusetts state government had proposed a UMass budget which threatened to cripple the quality of education on this campus. But then, unlike now, UMass students moved in mass to express their displeasure with the governor's recommendations. We were all up in arms in the face of spiraling fee bills and budget cutbacks.

Now let me state right off that I am disgusted with the way students on this campus have changed. I am appalled at the complacent attitudes which have come to dominate their lifestyles. It seems any sense of a common cause has been cast to the winds and has been replaced by self-serving ideas and ideals. Damn it! If we ever expect the quality of education at this University to improve we must once again get up off our posteriors and complain long and loud to those who have sullied us into these acquiescent ways.

My criticisms deal not only with the feeble student response to Gov. Dukakis' recent budget proposal, and they go beyond the $271 increase in tuition and fees the University is projecting for next year. Indeed the reality of this crunch all boils down to the price of a cup of coffee in the CC-SUplex. For wherever students have quietly refrained from expressing their viewpoints, administrators and management personnel have responded by shifting the economic burdens to those who can least afford to pay — you and I.

The Whitmore snack bar is a beautiful example of how students are taken advantage of. There in the building's bowels, around the corner from the churning computers, administrators and staff lounge daily over the same cup of coffee and donut that you purchase in the Hatch, but at an 11 cents savings. Why? Because just over a year ago we surrendered any semblence of control over the CC Food services to a profit conscious management corporation name Saga. Consider this: next year you will pay $79 to use that building but they didn't even consider consulting you before they decided it was time for another price hike.

Yet no one questions, no one reacts, no one screams out in disgust! We have come full circle from the days when their word was the only word.

My purpose then is to remind you of your past. Like Kunta Kinte passing on the ways and words of his African home, I believe that it is important to remind you that there was once a day when students expressed their opinions on University decisions which affected their lives, that there was a time when administrators made decisions wary of the response which they might invoke from the students.

In a recent edition of the University Bulletin, an administration public relations rag sent monthly to our parents, Vice Chancellor Robert Woodbury stated that student invovlement in the University decision making structure was at an all time high. Bullshit Mr. Woodbury, you know that decisions are all too often made in a vacuum of student input.

Moreover I'm tired of the ludicrous subject matter which has come to dominate this media's pages. I'm disgusted with the self-serving student government officials who pretend to represent our viewpoints to the Woodburys, Bromerys and Woods. If we shall do anything in the Spring of 1977 let us individually examine the problems which face us all as UMass students and the way we approach them.

Unfortunately, I like Kunta Kinte will not be around to see the present situation change. But I, like that beautiful Black man, believe that reminding you of your roots, informing you of the ways of your predecessors, might inspire you to initiate a needed change in campus attitudes. There is a tradition of student radicalism on this campus. All it really lacks is people like you and I to jolt it from its present standstill.

Close to the edge

Editor's note: The following letter arrived at the Collegian recently postmarked "Arctic Circle".

Sometimes I get the feeling. I mean, not very often anymore, but it's there. It's inside of us all — maybe it's instinct, I don't know. I've been in school all these years to combat it, that desire to rush off a cliff into the sea with my brothers and sisters.

These are bad times for everybody, even lemmings, what with the budget cuts and all. Of course there was a time when we didn't have any universities, and for a long time came into existence. Now many lemmings go on to college, because many of us are beginning to think that a higher education is a right, not a privilege.

I suppose that may sound stupid to some humans, so perhaps I should explain why a good education is so crucial to us. Historically, lemmings have had some difficulty dealing with times of economic and social crisis. We have periodically escaped our problems through the use of mass suicide; jumping into the ocean in herds to drown.

I don't know much about people, but we lemmings suffer from food shortages now and then. And when there isn't enough, some invariably get more than others.

But we go to school to learn how to deal with shortages, grow more food, and be civil to each other. And most importantly of all, to battle the ignorance that leads to those trips to the cliff. I guess some of the more conservative lemmings just don't believe there are any problems. Or maybe they figure they'll be the ones who have plenty to eat when things are really bad.

You know, a lemming's most valuable resource is its mind, despite the malicious rumors about rodent intelligence (or lack thereof). And when you come right down to it, education is the development of that resource in order to avoid self-destruction.

So we don't much appreciate the recently proposed cuts in our school budget. We know damn well that the best faculty members aren't about to stick around when they must fear for their jobs and can get paid better elsewhere. And some departments could even lose their accreditation, putting the education of entire groups of students in jeopardy.

I'm sure things aren't so bad at the Univeristy of Massachusetts. After all, you have developed a rather good academic reputation among your country's colleges. And besides, students there are probably active in the fight to maintain that reputation. Among the lemmings there is a tremendous problem with apathy, often to the extent that the vast bulk of the population merely follows its leaders' commands — even to the very brink of the precipice.

Well, I hope I haven't bored you terribly with the troubles of a society so far removed from your own. Just thought I'd let you know how lucky you are to have such a coherent and involved student body and to live in such a warm climate. Oh God, there's that feeling again....

Washington: District of contrasts

By PETER WALLACE

Washington D.C., Our Nation's Capital, is a city of disturbing contrasts. Although the traffic from elongated Cadillac Fleetwoods, as they whisked their Very Important Passengers through Washington's decaying neighborhood, might have been at its heaviest on January 20, I am sure this social contradiction occurs quite often, regardless of inaugurals.

The Washington area is the home of two remarkably dissimilar groups. The city itself is 95 per cent Blacks, whose incomes range from low to moderate, while perched outside in Virginia and Maryland reside the thousands of white commuters who man the government offices each day for salaries that place them in the middle to upper class bracket.

Many Blacks work in the Capital building, the Senate and House office buildings too, but to find most them you have to stroll through the maze of basement corridors where they work, emptying trash, cooking cafeteria chow, and sorting dirty laundry. A few lucky ones make it upstairs to the legislative offices, but only a few.

At night when the day's work is done the well-to-do workers split back to Virginia, Maryland, or Washington's only exclusive neighborhood, Georgetown. The less well off head back through the blocks of huge opulent architectural monstrosities that house such organizations as HEW, the Departments of Commerce and Transportation, and so on. Suddenly, thr rows of gigantic government buildings end, and beyond lies the part of crumbling Washington D.C. the pols and bureaucrats would prefer to forget about.

The boundary where the grandeur and magnificence of the hundreds of government office buildings ends and where the weary retrogression of Washington's Black neighborhoods begins is shockingly abrupt. Next to the towering Department of Labor building is a delapidated tenement sticking up pathetically amid rubble, broken glass, and rusty old beer cans. Contained within the Labor building are the people who will make decisions affecting the lives and dollars of millions. In the creaky old tenement next door is a taxi cab business which probably boasts a few battered taxis for the labor people to get around in.

At night the boundary between the governmental section of Washington and the poorer neighborhoods dissolves in a social sense that is. High-powered bureaucrats and minor office workers who populate the street corners during the day are replaced at night by squads of hookers. Even President Carter would have to walk barely a block if ever in need of an evening's entertainment. I personally witnessed in the sacrosanct innards of a McDonald's a whore solicit a client in the hamburger line under the bemused gaze of two cops. If only Ronald McDonald had been there....Our elected representatives have it a little easier. Rather than prowl McDonald's they merely scoot off to Georgetown with some Liz Ray type for fun.

In the White House the National Security Council plots making the world safe for democracy while homeowners several blocks away are forced to install iron bars over their doors and windows in an effort to keep their possessions and lives safe from thieves. In the Department of Labor building 'experts' plot to get the nation back to work while practically next door there are people without employment. In the HEW building more experts plot to feed the poor and move them into modern housing while blocks away people in ancient rundown apartments barely survive on government peanut butter.

The problems Washington is saddled with are no more different from those other large American cities face. But, because Washington is Our Nation's Capital, the unequalities appear even more outragous and unforgivable.

Congress raises standards

WASHINGTON [UPI] — The chairman of a special commission set up to improve the House's image said yesterday Congress is likely to propose an ethics code for members that is tougher than the public wants or expects.

"The standards that members of Congress want written into an ethics code are stronger than those that the public considers desirable," said Rep. David Obey, D-Wis.

Obey, who chairs the House Commission on Administrative Review, was questioned on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation." He said details will be disclosed this week of a Louis Harris poll which the commission financed to determine what the people expect of their congressmen.

"This poll isn't meant to ask people whether they love us or not," Obey said. "The answer to that is they think quite a bit of us individually — they know us — but they don't think much of us collectively.

"The main reason Congress is held in low repute as an institution is because it's perceived to be organized in such a way that it is not dealing with the problems that affect people directly. I think people are very much concerned about what we are going to do on energy and the economy. I think they feel we have blown both of them."

Pope opposes Women's Sunday

VATICAN CITY [AP] — Pope Paul VI defended yesterday his stand against the ordination of women Sunday, telling Roman Catholic women they can still occupy first place in charity and social fields.

He told a crowd of several thousands in St. Peter's Square there must continue to be a division of functions within the Catholic church.

Woman was exhorted "to carry out, with a new conscience and increased strength, her mission of piety, wisdom and virtue of love that made herself, like Mary, teacher and queen."

Pope Paul's comments were an apparent answer to critics of a document issued Thursday by the Vatican Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith reaffirming the ban on priestly ordination of women. The document was issued on the Pope's orders.

The world leader of Roman Catholicism said the woman priest issue has been made "unduly fastidious by some forms of unmoderate feminism."

"The true reason for the ban," the 79-year-old pontiff said, "is that Christ, by giving the church its fundamental constitution, its theological anthropology — always followed by the tradition of the church itself — has established" the rule.

"In a choir of human voices," the Pope said, "there are the tenor and the soprano... It is not a preference for one and a wrongdoing for the other but an order based on the essence of the person who makes it the choir...."

The document of the Congregation of the Faith, the Pope said, has given "a negative solution to the question which has become pressing in these last years, regarding the admission of women to priesthood."

This document, the Pope said, "deserves to be known even if it does not say nothing new."

The 6,000-word declaration noted that Christ was and remains a man and his apostles, all men, chose other men as their successors. Quoting St. Thomas Aquinas, it said a priest must bear a "natural resemblance" to Christ.

"Modern feminism, even that healthy and regligious kind to which goes our respect and favor," the Pope said, "insistently demands an explanation for this inequality between man and woman.

"Why only men and not also women can be invested with priesthood? We can reply quickly: the disparity of functions does not mean a diversity of dignity in the objective order of grace and, as a result, a reduction in the hierarchy of charity, where woman — and Mary is an example — can occupy a first active place in the exercise of so many virtues... such as in the charity and social fields."

"Let us invite women, even in untying this knot made unduly fastidious by some forms of unmoderate feminism, to understand how the church does not intend to emarginate her precious function in the integral design of God's kingdom and even in the temporal kingdom," the Pope said.

Secret weapons imply threat of war in space

SACRAMENTO, Calif. [UPI] — Russia and America are quietly developing "a horror of weapons" that could be used for a war in space, according to Sen. Alan Cranston.

And, he says, the U.S. public has not been told the truth about the possibility of a space war.

Cranston, D-Calif., said Saturday a "horror of weapons which only the most advanced science fiction writer can imagine," lies ahead.

"Now the talk is of war in outer space — laser beams destroying surveillance and communications satellites and space shuttles capturing satellites," he said.

"And there is talk back here on earth of conventional bombs loaded with lethal or crippling radioisotopes....

"Somewhere, in U.S. and Soviet laboratories, scientists and engineers are working on those weapons."

Cranston said the public has "not been told the truth about the dangers of worldwide arms buildup" and the chances of a space war.

"It's not really a secret, but the information has not all spewed out to the public," he said.

"We are being propagandized by our Pentagon and those with a vested interest in the arms industry of the need for ever-increasing expenditures for weapons systems of ever-increasing cost," Cranston said in a speech.

Cranston said government and private firms are both working on development of space weapons technology.

He said the private firms were working "not necessarily under government contract," but were hoping for sales to federal agencies.

"I know that kind of work is going on," he said.

He refused to identify any firms working on such projects but said he received the information from "reliable sources."

New birth control device approved by Roman Catholic Church

BOSTON [UPI] — Two Massachusetts doctors have designed a small, inexpensive birth control device which has the approval of the Roman Catholic Church.

The viscometer developed by Dr. Harold Kosasky of Harvard Medical and Louis Kopito of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology they said can pinpoint the time of ovulation, the fertile period of a woman's cycle.

"We call it a go or no go," said Kosasky.

"We lay no claim to discovering the theory, the relationship between cervical mucus consistency and fertility," he said. "We've just developed the hardware for professional and at-home use."

He said the device is based on the Billings' Method of determining fertility, approved by the Catholic Church.

The Billings' method determined that thick cervical mucus prevents the natural flow of sperm, while thin mucus aids the flow. The mucus is spread on the so-called "Ovutimer," which is comprised of plastic plates set at right angles.

If the plates stick together, the mucus would serve as a barrier to sperm, and if not, pregnancy is possible.

"We're developing a Tampon-size application with a disposal plastic plate, maybe the size of a thumbnail, to be inserted into the cervix," Kosasky said. "After its withdrawn, the applicator slips into a receptical about the size of a package of cigarettes."

He said the Ovutimer would be on the market early next year at a cost of about $10, with 25 cent disposable plates.

The doctors hope to gain Federal Drug Administration clearance by June for a larger and similar machine for use by gynecologists.

While the larger version can pinpoint ovulation within hours, the at home model signals a four-day danger period, Kosasky said.

Nader to debate NEPCO

PROVIDENCE, R.I. [UPI] — Consumer-advocate Ralph Nader has declined an invitation to debate a nuclear engineer and instead, has challenged Guy Nichols, president of the New England Power Co. NEPCO to debate Feb. 12.

Nader is scheduled to be the keynote speaker at a Brown University energy conference Feb. 11-12. When NEPCO originally heard Nader would be in New England, it challenged him to a "full and open debate" with nuclear engineer Ian A. Forbes.

NEPCO has proposed building a nuclear plant in Charlestown, while Nader is a long-time proponent of nuclear power.

Nader responded to NEPCO's original challenge by saying he does not want to debate any "hired guns". In a letter to Nichols, Nader wrote: "It is you whom I wish to debate at 9 a.m. Saturday at Brown University before the audience and media. You are the chief executive officer of the company that is so committed to atomic energy and you are authorized to speak on its behalf."

"For years, the utilities have offered outside apologists for atomic energy to speak for them and defend their positions, Nader said.

Andrew C. Kadak, NEPCO's nuclear information manager, said, "Our initial challenge was with Dr. Ian Forbes, and that's who we're sticking with for the time being."

Kadak called Nader's challenge to Nichols "a cop-out." Kadak said, "I personally would say Mr. Nichols is not in the debating business as Ralph Nader is. We wanted to put Mr. Nader right on the spot and were hoping a technical expert would be able to do that."

"We wanted to have him answer questions that a person who is an expert in the field would give him," Kadak added. He said if NEPCO officially received Nader's challenge Monday, Nichols would have a response by late afternoon.

What's Happening

Women's week to be organized tonight

There will be a fun-filled gathering tonight in CC rooms 168-172 for all interested, spirited people and campus groups to plan for International Women's Week, March 6 to 12.

Most of the organizational work has been laid out by members of the Title IX Task Force and many other dedicated people. All that is needed now is people power to plug into the various committees: Poetry-Arts, Music, Workshops, Transportation, Publicity, Films, Childcare, Theatre-Dance and a Resource Fair.

If you can help in any way, please attend tonight's gathering. For more information call Irene at 545-3600.

Godspell auditions scheduled tonight

The UMass Music Theatre Guild announces auditions for their spring musical production, "Godspell" to be performed March 31, April 1, 2 and 3 at Bowker Auditorium, Stockbridge Hall.

Auditions are scheduled for today and tomorrow beginning at 6 p.m. in room 101 of the Campus Center.

The Guild is a student theatre group unaffiliated with the UMass Theatre Department. It has produced such recent productions as "Kiss Me, Kate", "Once Upon a Mattress," "Cabaret," and "Pirates of Penzance."

There are 10 parts to be cast, five males and five females, and all will require solo singing.

Those interested in auditioning are encouraged but not required to prepare a song. Everyone will have to sing. An accompanist will be provided.

Auditions are open to anyone in the Five College community. For more information, call 549-3905, 546-5150 or 545-2149.

Education students offer new art program

Youngsters in grades 2, 3, 4 and 5 will explore the world of art this semester in the Experimental Arts Culture Program here. The classes will be taught by art education students who will be involved in an "in-training" education program.

The ten-week session held on Monday afternoons between 3:30 p.m. and 5 p.m. will be for second and third graders. This session will begin on Feb. 14 and run through May 2. Fourth and fifth grade youngsters will meet on Wednesday afternoons between 3:30 p.m. and 5 p.m. These classes begin on Feb. 16 and run through May 4. Each class will be limited to twenty children.

There will be a registration fee of $10 for the ten week session. For registration information call 549-1188 between 7 p.m. and 9 p.m. this week. Applications will be accepted on a first come, first served basis.

Local politicians to teach new courses

As part of its effort to help people become involved and stay involved with local government, the UMass Division of Continuing Education is offering two work-shops. Those People in Public Office: You? Me? is the newest offering in Continuing Education's Communities In Action program.

Two concurrent workshops, one for beginners and another for those with more experience, are intended to help people develop the expertise and skills needed to run an effective issue-oriented campaign for public office on the community level. The workshops are designed for potential candidates and volunteers who will be involved in upcoming election campaigns. Both workshops will be held at the Jones Library in Amherst tomorrow and Wednesday from 7:30 p.m. to 8:15 p.m. and all day Saturday.

Fran McNulty, a city councilor from Northampton, and Ken Musakowski, a veteran of more than 25 political campaigns, will serve as instructors.

Special guest speakers will be Amherst Selectman, Bob Garvey, who was recently elected to the Hampshire County Commission, and Jeanne Kangas, a member of the Boxborough Board of Selectmen. Miss Kangas is also a member of the Republican State Committee and was a delegate to the Republican National Convention last August.

For information call 545-3420.

Taxi Union caucus to speak at Amherst

John Gordon and Paul Ossman of the Taxi Rank and File Coalition will discuss "The revolt of the Rank and File" tonight at 7:30 in the Red Room of Converse Hall at Amherst College.

Their coalition is a socialist caucus in the New York taxi union which has demonstrated between 20 and 35 per cent voting strength in union elections. The discussion is sponsored by the Amherst Action Coalition. For further info, call Karl Seidman, 542-2147.

Ski lift collapses

HANCOCK, Mass. [AP] — At least six skiers were hospitalized yesterday after a brake failed on a ski lift, tossing several persons to the ground.

Dozens of others suffered minor injuries when they jumped from an aerial chair lift at Jiminy Peak as the lift started to slide backwards. All of the hospitalized victims were reported in good condition.

"I'll never be able to forget it," recounted Adam Harvey, 15, of Huntington, N.Y., one of those slightly hurt. "It was almost like a movie — people falling and screaming."

A spokesman for the ski slope in this Berkshire community said an automatic brake failed to engage. Chairs began sliding backwards, spinning around the bottom pole on the lift line and tossing several persons into the snow. Other passengers jumped. Nearly 70 persons were on the lift at the time.

The Jiminy Peak spokesman said it was not known what caused the equipment failure. An investigation was ordered by the Massachusetts Tramway Board, but the ski area remained in operation.

Your Birthday by Stella Wilder

Monday, January 31 — Born today, you are somewhat inclined toward extravagance — not, however, because you are one to long for material possessions or the luxuries of life, but because you are overly generous with those possessions and luxuries on behalf of other people. You find it extremely hard to stand back and wait while others extricate themselves from whatever difficulties they find themselves in; rather, your instinct is to rush to the rescue of anyone in distress — whether or not they call for aid. You may well waste much of your energy and a good deal of your talents in rescue missions both uncalled for and unappreciated.

While others look for practical measures through which to reach their aims, you spend considerable time trying to accomplish goals by way of means either unsuited to the occasion or well-suited but over-taxed. You make an effort always to be in the right place at the right time -- but you are not as successful in that endeavor as you would like to be. Often, you depend upon the influence that old friends wield in order to achieve your ends, even though in so doing you relinquish some of your own autonomy, even in your own home.

Your sympathetic nature endears you to many; at the same time, however, it may cause some to look upon you as an "easy touch." You will have to be on your guard, therefore, not to allow yourself to be taken advantage of. A little personal effort is all that is needed to keep you free of the effects of the persuasive efforts of those by whom you would rather not be persuaded.

Tuesday, February 1

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Take the intellectual approach to problems that others are taking far from seriously. You should win out in the end.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — Your susceptibility to flattery may land you in considerable difficulty before day's end. Be on guard against sweet words.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Pleasure is compounded of good and ill today. Be prepared, then, to enjoy whatever occurs as the day progresses.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Performance counts for more than promise today -- as is the case most days. Don't erupt into emotional furies late in the day.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Keep a date with one whose courage inspires you to great things. Don't be discouraged by a lack of energy toward evening.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — An attitude of encouragement is essential if your relationships with children are to be pleasurable and productive.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Take your cue from the young who are stimulated by the new and different. Don't be bound by your own and others' past.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Make provisions immediately for those whose future depends upon you. Children have a special place in your heart at this time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — The dominance of one who has not taken the lead in the past may surprise you. It may also enable you to make considerable gains by evening.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — A favorable day for the Scorpio willing to concede to the young. This is a good time for bending with the current wind -- or pretending to.

SAGITTAIRUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — You should make a very successful partner today, whether of the business or domestic variety. Keep on your toes near day's end.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — To be frugal is one thing, to be stingy is another. Don't compete with those who are financially better off than you are.

Grapplers grinning after wins

By BOB HASKELL
Collegian Staff

ALBANY, N.Y. — The difference between a winning team and a losing one can often be a simple matter of learning to believe in yourself.

The UMass wrestling team believes. Coach Dave Amato scounded excited himself as he said, "This is the turning point of our season. We've finally become a team."

All this newfound optimism is a result of the Minutemen's strong performance over the weekend in a quadrangular match held here.

After narrowly losing to C.W. Post, 21-20, in the initial match, the UMass matmen kept their composure and came back charging. The hapless victims of their wrath was the host team, State U. New York at Albany.. Before SUNY could wonder what the number of that truck was, UMass had run amok, winning 37-5.

The final match of the evening turned out to be a nailbiter as the Minutemen found themselves needing a win and a pin in the final two contests in order to beat Coast Guard.

"The match should never have been that close," Amato stated. "We got some bad breaks and lost some close matches. That really put Bob Spaulding (190 lbs.) and Dennis Fenton (Hvywt.) on the spot."

And the UMass big men came through in style as Spaulding beat his man on points with a decisive takedown in the last 10 seconds, and Fenton gave his opponent ample opportunity to admire the ceiling as he delivered the crucial pin to beat the Coast Guard, 21-20.

"Everyone was excited," bubbled Amato. "We really needed this win, and I think all the guys knew it. We were not at full strength for this match because Harry Conforti, our regular 126 pounder, was injured, but we nearly swept it all. I'm greatly encouraged. This is a together bunch of guys now."

Other stars for the UMies besides Spaulding and Fenton who picked up three wins apiece were Larry Otsuka (134 lbs.), with three victories and Steve Jabaut (150 lbs.) with two. Also, Dana Cormier (167 lbs.) came through in the clutch with a critical pin against Coast Guard.

Against Albany nearly everyone took a hand, said Amato, even a couple of JV's promoted for this match. "Bruce Rhodes (158 lbs.) and Steve Haskell (167 lbs.) looked good filling in, winning their matches handily," Amato said.

The grapplers are looking forward to the rest of the season, which resumes this coming Saturday, at home, against Mass. Maritime.

"We're ready," warns Amato. "We know we can win now."

Merwomen splash to victory

By SCOTT BUNGARD
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's swim team takes a 4-4 record to Bridgewater State tomorrow following Thursday's split of the UConn (57-74) and Central Connecticut (96-35) trimeet.

The women swimmers were defeated by a strong UConn team, 57-74. Undaunted, the merwomen trounced a weaker Central Connecticut team to the tune of 96-35, to even their slate at 4-4 in what has become a "roller-coaster" type of a season thus far.

Coach Eve Atkinson saw several swimmers qualify for the Easterns in March. Once again, Deb Schwartz qualified with her 1:47.4 time in the 200-yard freestyle-relay heat against the Huskies. Theresa Totin just got under the ETS (Eastern Times Standard) in the 100-yard breast stroke, shaving off a tenth of a second from the EST standard of 1:13.9. She went on to qualify in the 100-yard individual medley and the 200 yard freestyle relay.

the last qualifier in the UConn meet was Lise Hembrough, with a fine 1:47.4 time in the 200-yard free style relay event.

Against Central Connecticut, four time winners (quad winners) Theresa Totin and Deb Schwartz were backed up by double winners Rachel Mack and Mary Ann Totin, Susie Strobel (diving) and Lise Hembrough.

Gymwomen in big runaway; pick up first win of season

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

The UMass women's gymnastics team thrashed Westchester State College, 139.25-122.85, Saturday to win its first home meet of the season. The Minutewomen won all four events and captured the top three all-around positions in the victory.

Junior Stephanie Jones and captain Jill Heggie had some sparkling performances for the 800 enthusiastic onlookers in the Cage. Jones finished first in the all-around competition with a total score of 38.85. She performed solidly in every event, never placing lower then second and earned an average of 8.95 per event.

"I was really pleased with Stephanie today, she's improving steadily," said UMass coach Virginia Evans.

Heggie placed second in the all-around event with a score of 35.65. Her strongest performance was on the uneven parallel bars, where she received an 9.40 for her routine. Heggie had a minor problem on the beam, as she missed a back handspring during her routine but still received a 8.20 for her lowest score. She took first place on the floor with a 9.2 and finished second in vaulting where she received an 8.85 for her Yamishita with a half-twist vault.

"Jill is a real standout, she performed very solidly today," said assistant coach John Calibria.

Junior Susan Cantwell nabbed third place in the all-around competition. She scored a total of 32.95 points from her 8.8 vault, 86. beam performance, 8.7 floor routine and her 6.85 bar routine.

Freshwoman Karen Hemberger was scheduled to be UMass' fourth all-event performer but twisted her ankle during warmups. She vaulted and worked the bars but withdrew from the beam and floor exercise. Hemberger received scores of 8.65 and 8.80 on her vault and bar routine despite the injured ankle. She is expected to recover quickly and be ready for next week's competition.

Evans was most pleased with her team's uneven bars performances. The Minutewomen swept all four top places in that event. Heggie was first with her 9.4; Jones was second with a 9.1; Hemberger was third, scoring an 8.80; and Jean Anderson finished fourth with a strong 8.15.

In the other events: On floor exercise, the gymwomen swept the top five finishes. Besides Heggie, Jones and Cantwell, Diane Laurenson received an 8.45 for fourth and Julie Myers finished fifth with her 8.35 performance. Cheryl Morrier finished fifth on the balance beam and Diane Laurenson was sixth in the vaulting competition.

"I think it's unfortunate that Karen couldn't compete," Evans said. "With her performances and everyone elses we should move well into the 140 range."

The '140 mark' is a goal for the whole team. Other top teams in the nation are scoring in the low to mid-140's and the gymwomen feel that they must do the same to challenge the other teams for national honors.

The Minutewomen now hit the road for two meets before they return to the Cage. They visit Salem State tomorrow and travel to Canisius on February 5 before they return home to meet Temple on February 12.

UMass track teams fare well in NH meet

By DAVE RODMAN
Collegian Staff

HANOVER, N.H. — The UMass men's and women's track teams both shrugged off the effects of the six week intersession break Saturday in the Green and White Invitational as several first places were garnered, and a bushel of personal best times were recorded.

"At present we're just looking for continued improvement out of everybody — to get everybody back after the break," said coach Arnie Morse Thursday.

The Minutemen and women did that and more, as three athletes qualified for the New England Championships in their respective events. Ken Adamson achieved the qualifying standard in the dash with a time of 6.4 seconds, and the long jump at 22'5". He took first in the dash, and finished 2nd in the long jump to Olympic decathion competitor Fred Samara, who won with a distance of 24'. Joe Martens, who competed despite illness and injury problems, and Bob Fitzgerald were second and third respectively in the high jump at 6'6" which got them into the NE's.

In an event which was "stacked" with the best runners available by both UMass and Dartmouth, the Green came up with a victory in the distance medley by just tenths of a second. UMass' time of 9:55.8 was just 1.8 seconds off the qualifying time for the nationals.

In this tension packed final event of the meet, Jim Hunt led off with a 1:53.5 880 to give UM a scant lead over the Green. John Richards took the baton for the 440 and after his 50 flat leg the race was all even. Frank Carroll ran the three quarter mile in 3:01.5 and lost a second to his Ivy opponent, leaving Chris Farmer to run a fine 4:10 mile only to just be nipped at the tape. The Minutemen still have four meets to attain the national standard.

Top performance in the women's events belonged to Chris Perron. The former high school all-American flowed over the 60 yard high hurdles in 8.9 seconds, good for first place.

Other standout performances were turned in by the starry middle and long distance runners.

The 880 saw a sweep of the first four places by Bonnie Bukowski, Karen Zimmerman, Laurie Wolf and Julie Lafreniere. Bukowski's winning time was 2:22.9.

The women also took second, third, fourth, and fifth in the mile run behind Amherst's outstanding freshwoman runner Marina Buckley. Buckley's winning time was 5:02.3 and she was followed by Lafreniere in 5:06, Maggie Crowley in 5:16, Jane Welzel in 5:19 and replay of last year, where we lost, 10-0," Canniff said.

In the second period, UMass was out shot 22-5 and had more penalty minutes, 12 to eight.

Frank Snow scored the first Minuteman goal after a scramble in front of Hamilton's George at 9:04 of the second period. The tally came off a Bob McCormack rebound.

The back breaker for Hamilton was the short handed goal by Mike Merchant at 12:01. With McCormack off for high sticking at 11:37, Merchant stole a pass from Hamilton's Keith O'Brien at the blue line and Merchant and Bob White outskated O'Brien to George where Merchant put a short wrist shot past him on his left side.

Through all this action, Redmond played a sometimes spectacular game in goal. As his team was often a man down, the senior goalie from Bedford made numerous saves.

"Redmond was so sharp," said Canniff. "He was unbelievable. After tonight's game and the one against Williams, he's the best goalie in Division II right now."

The Minutemen's next game is Wednesday night against North Adams State at Orr Rink at 8:00. Chris Lamby will be unable to play because of the ejection in the Hamilton game.

Rimmen hang on; UConn rally fails

By BOB HIGGINS
Collegian Staff

SPRINGFIELD — UMass basketball fans have seen it happen too many times before.

This time, the Minutemen blew a 10-point lead in less than a minute, and UConn's Tony Hanson was at the foul line with four seconds left and needing both foul shots to tie the game.

Hanson missed the first one, but UMass' Mike Pyatt was called for stepping into the lane too soon. Hanson made the next one, but then missed again, Minuteman Jim Town grabbed the rebound and UMass slipped by the Huskies, 65-64, before 6138 at the Springfield Civic Center Saturday night.

"I don't understand it," said UMass coach Jack Leaman after the game, concerning his squad's inability to hold a lead.

"We get a big lead, and then we go into our one-on-one thing," said UMass guard Derick Claiborne after the game. "From now on when we get a lead we're just gonna stall."

"Give credit to Connecticut too," said a dejected Hanson in the UConn locker room after the contest.

Hanson, New England's leading scorer, got into foul trouble and was forced to sit out almost 10 minutes of the second half. Ironically, it was after Hanson returned to the lineup that UMass opened up its lead.

The Minutemen ran off an 11-2 streak in a five-minute span to turn a 54-53 lead into a 65-55 bulge with 1:27 left. But while everyone else was thinking the game was over, Hanson and Company started to come back.

Two hoops by forward Jim Abromaitis (14 points) and a Hanson foul shot closed it to four, and the amazing Hanson came up with the rebound on his own missed foul shot, laid it in, and the lead was two.

After a timeout, UMass attempted an inbounds play. The only open man was center Mark Donoghue, who attempted to dribble upcourt and had the ball stolen by Joey Whelton, which led to Hanson being fouled for his last chance to tie the game.

Hanson led all scorers with 25 points, while teammate Abromaitis added 14. UMass scoring was more balanced, with Pyatt (15), Town (14), Claiborne (13), and Donoghue (13), all in double figures.

The stepping-in call on Pyatt was seen as only one of many poor officiating calls in the game. "You just don't make a call like that with four seconds left in the game," said Leaman.

UConn was equally displeased with the referees, though Hanson would only say, "I better not comment on the officiating."

The Minutemen broke on top early in the contest, using the press to open up a 10-4 lead. But UConn ran off an 18-4 spurt to build a 22-14 margin.

Enter Alex Eldridge, who delivered a turn-around behind-the-back pass to Donoghue for a three-point play which propelled the Minutemen back into the game and into halftime with a 33-31 lead.

While pre-game talk was of Pyatt attempting to stop Hanson, it was Hanson who got into trouble at both ends of the court with Pyatt. Hanson picked up his fourth foul just four minutes into the second half for charging on a good defensive play by Pyatt.

Still, Hanson scored 25. "He's gonna get his points," said Pyatt. "Most of his plays go down low and he's so quick he's either gonna get a layup or get fouled."

Hanson went to the foul line for 12 shots, but sunk only seven. UConn as a team shot just 10 for 20 from the line.

UMASS (65) — Town 5-4-14; Pyatt 6-3-15; Donoghue 5-3-13; Johnson 2-1-5; Claiborne 6-1-13; Eldridge 2-1-5; Kohlhaas 0-0-0. TOTALS: 26-13-65.

Hoopwomen blast Providence hopes

SPRINGFIELD — So there.

If you're one who likes to go by records, Saturday night's UMass-Providence women's basketball game should have been a real barn-burner.

After all, the Lady Friars were 9-0 coming into the contest, while the Minutewomen sported a 6-2 mark. In addition, UMass was riding a four-game win streak.

But there was only one thing wrong. Providence hadn't played the caliber of competition that UMass had, and brother, did it show.

For after a sluggish, ragged start, the Minutewomen get their act together in a hurry and demolished the Lady Friars, 84-56, in the first game of the UMass basketball doubleheader held at the Springfield Civic Center.

Despite playing what coach Mary Ann Ozdarski termed "a tired game," the Minutewomen shot 48 per cent from the floor, outrebounded their bigger rivals, and placed four players in double figures while picking up their fifth straight win.

"We've played five games in seven days, and we played tired tonight," Ozdarski said. "But we worked hard, even though we were sluggish."

UMass did get off to a slow start, and trailed by four in the early going. After a couple of lead changes, though, UMass grabbed a one-point lead on two Nancy O'Neil free throws with 7:11 left and never looked back.

On the strength of 12-13 foul shooting and eight points apiece from Lu-Ann Fletcher and Sue Peters, the Minutewomen went onto grab a 34-22 halftime lead.

Keyed by heads-up defensive play and strong efforts from all 12 players, UMass broke things wide open with 11 minutes left to play. After the Lady Friars decided to make things a bit more interesting by narrowing the gap to 11 with 18 minutes left on a short-range hoop by 6'1½" center Mel Buchanen (16 points), the Minutewomen got going.

They kept the lead fluctuating from between 13 and 16 points until a spree of seven unanswered points upped their lead to 20 (63-43) with 9:30 left.

After that, it was just a little embarassing for Providence. UMass continued to roll up the point total, scoring almost at will on the Lady Friars. Ozdarski's 'shuttle system' of rotating players on and off the court also wore down Providence.

Fletcher, playing another in what has become a series of excellent games, led UMass with 18 points and 12 rebounds. Peters added 15, including a couple of court-length drives after stealing Lady Friar passes. She also added a super reverse layup to her ever-growing protfolio of spectacular moves.

O'Neil chipped in with 13 points, seven of which came from a fine free throw shooting performance, while Sue Henry showed off a smooth outside shooting touch while scoring 12. She also led UMass with three assists.

Providence was led by Buchanen and forward Maryanne McCoy, who hit for 11 points. But supposedly superior guard Paulette Hassett was shut out by the UMass defense (0-3 from the field). She also spent most of the game on the bench after being exploited by the UMass offense.

"We took it to them in the second half," Ozdarski said. "We only put it together then.

"It was a case of sloppy play by both teams," she added, referring to her team's 30 turnovers and the Lady Friars' 36.

"But it was a win, and I'll take a win any way I can get it."

UMASS (84) — Peters 7-1-15; Fletcher 6-6-18; Hutchinson 0-0-0; Supinski 3-1-17; Henry 4-4-12, McHugh 0-1-1; Carey 2-0-4; O'Neil 3-7-13; Martinelli 0-0-0; Balletta 3-3-9; Basile 2-1-5; Peebles 0-0-0. TOTALS — 30-24-84.

Icemen come back; White hits in OT

By TOM CROWLEY
Collegian Staff

Billy White hit a 15-foot slapshot past Hamilton goalie Shawn George at 4:35 in overtime to give UMass a 3-2 win over Hamilton College Friday night at Orr rink. The second game of the weekend twinbill was postponed to a later date when the referees failed to show up for the game against Babson College in Wellesley.

The win over Hamilton upped the Minutemen's record to 6-4-1 while the Continentals now stand at 6-4.

Billy White's goal capped a come-from-behind win for the Minutemen in an often times exciting game in which the skaters were outshot, 49-26.

White's game-winner was set up when he dug the puck out of the corner to the left of George. White fired the unassisted shot to the far right of the goal from the face off circle from Hamilton's goalie's left.

The overtime came after a scoreless third period in which both teams played evenly with nine shots apiece, and with just one penalty.

The one penalty call in the third frame was a marked difference from the first two periods as UMass was short handed for much of the time. Chris Lamby was ejected from the game at 19:16 in the first period with a game misconduct.

The first period was the frame in which Hamilton jumped out to a 2-0 lead. The game was 22 seconds old when Phil Hildebrand scored after a scramble to Dana Redmond's right.

With Lamby off, Hamilton used a delayed penalty to mount a 6-4 power play. Center Len Thomas scored on a wrist shot between Redmond's legs at 19:46.

White UMass entered the second period down 2-0, the icemen skated out the tie.

"The team showd real character, UMass coach Jack Canniff said after the game. "They were down 2-0, played off the penalties and came out tied at 2-2."

"After Hamilton scored the first goal so fast, we thought it was a

[Rudolph Jones]

Classes have begun, a new year permeates the environment. But before we get too heavily involved in the process of studing, let's pause for a moment and highlight a few of the past year's experiences.

As America celebrated its Bicentennial the Black Communities in South Africa erupted in massive violence. This expression of discontent against the fascist regime of John Voster was finally suppressed; the final tally was hundreds of Africans killed and thousands placed in concentration camps.

This uprising in S. Africa was very interesting because it wasn't led by the older people it was organized and executed by high school students.

This incident sent a signal to John Voster and the imperialist regimes that support him that the system of Apartheid will never be accepted in S. Africa.

Zimbabwe was also prominent in the news of 1976. The peoples war for liberation intensified. As the intensity of the war increased and the prospect of another Angola looming, Henry Kissinger shuttled to Africa "to bring peace to the region".

This really wasn't Mr. Kissinger's intention because in an interview in the New York Times before his departure he stated that his objective was to prevent the radicalization of the country.

A Geneva convention conference was convened to transfer power to six and a half million Africans as it turned out this was just a stalling device. The conference has been cancelled because Ian Smith still refuses to abdicate his throne, and John Voster thinks it's immoral to

Mr. Carter faces deeply rooted social and economic depravation, hard core unemployment, the deterioration of the cities and competition between Blacks and put pressure on him to do that. The only alternative left for the people of Zimbabwe is liberation through the military defeat of Ian Smith and his imperialist supporters.

On the domestic scene 1976 signaled the end of the political dynasty of Nixon-Kissinger-Ford, and the emergence of Jimmy Carter. The assumption of Carter to the Presidency has very important implications.

He happens to be the first president from the South and won office by overwhelming support of Black Americans. Mr. Carter has stated that when he finishes his term he wants Black people to say that he did more for them than any president in their lifetime. Mr. Carter will have a tremendous task to perform.

The National Urban League has just published a new report on the state of Black Americans. It draws a very dim picture of the supposed material advancement and asserts that Carter cannot appease Blacks by just naming prominent Blacks to lucrative positions in his cabinet.

The problem of the masses of Blacks will have to be addressed and adequate solutions will have to be devised to deal with them.

First on the agenda is jobs. The report points out that the number of Blacks unemployed augmented by the problem of unemployment is over three million.

While Blacks comprise 11 per cent of the labor force, they are counted for 20 per cent of the unemployed. While 31 per cent are below the poverty line.

Whites at the lower end of the economic spectrum.

To ameliorate these conditions will take some major structural transformation of the social and economic scene. Blacks should not sit passively and await the results of Mr. Carter's prospective good intentions... The way to hell is paved with good intentions.

There are some very disturbing legal challenges to the policy of affirmative action. Whites, especially the Jewish minority are charging reverse discrimination.

One case of prominance is the Dusunis Case involving a Jewish student who claimed that he was discriminated by Georgetown Law School because it had a quota for Blacks who were admitted with inferior credentials. There is even a case involving the School of Ed where it is being claimed that the urban Education Program discriminates against Jews and the other White minorities due to the heavy recruitment of Blacks in this program.

This means that policies and programs that were being implemented by Universities to improve their enrollment of Blacks are being cut or revamped.

Then there is the question of busing. It appears that the courts will be ruling adversely against school desegration. To augment this trend Mr. Carter has appointed Griffin Bell to the Attorney General position. Griffin Bell advised the state of Georgia against desegration.

Blacks should pay very close attention to these developments and remain vigilent in assuring that their rights and freedoms are guaranteed.

The Role of Black Students

BLACKS IN SOWETO MARCH

Too often, Black college students have, upon graduation, adopted a bourgeois outlook and often sought to escape from the harsh realities of the black community by assimilating into the white world. If they returned to their own people's community it was frequently in the role of exploitative businessmen, professionals or politicians who sought to use the black community simply as a means for personal advancement.

While many black businessmen, professionals and politicians continue to play the role of participating as "buffers" between the masses and the while capitalist class — the masses of black people continue to be oppressed. The masses continue to suffer form joblessness, starvation, hunger and disease.

Black students, you are in a position to choose which role you'll play. You may choose the role of acting as "buffers" or you will serve the masses. Will you fulfill or betray your mission? Your responsibility is to your people — to use the skills and knowledge of your education for your people who have struggled through the courts and the streets to get you in college.

During the turbulence of the 1960's, black college students went through an identity crisis. They seriously began to question their responsibility to themselves and to black people as a whole. The black college student was slowly awakening to the implication of the fact that he would not always be a student but he would always be black. Out of the questioning of his identity — black students began to initiate and lead many of the protest movements of the last decade.

Historically students have always "provided the spark needed to set in motion demonstrations, strikes, boycotts and armed insurrections". They have been the initial shock troops who struggled to build the mass parties, trade unions, farmers and wwmen's movements and organizations which organized the mass struggles and activities of our people.

Why students? The answer is simple. During periods pregnant with revolutionary potential or when mass unemployment is extremely high, the response of young people in general, and the particular sector of college youth, respond in a manner which ceases to be individualistic and takes on the form of seeking goals for the entire youth — and eventually the masses. In this situation, college students move first, and then their younger brothers and sisters in high school, in the factory, on the farm, in the unemployment line and on the streets become increasingly conscious of their revolutionary potential.

It was a student based organization — the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) who initiated and lead student and mass struggle throughout the South in this country. SNCC raised the political awareness of black people in the U.S. and throughout the world. SNCC, a student organization developed voter registration drives, solidified alliances with revolutionary forces throughout the world, organized sit-ins, freedom rides and Freedom Schools. SNCC inspired a wave of militant protest activity amongst black high school students and college students and organized a Black political Party in Lowndes County, Alabama. SNCC was the first black organization to oppose the draft and the Vietnam War. This launched the anit-draft and peace movement which brought this country to its knees, mobilized millions of white folks, forced President Johnson to resign and forced the U.S. armed forces to leave Vietnam, insuring an earlier victory for the revolutionary forces in Vietnam.

Fidel Castro and Cuban Revolution of 1959 can be traced back to the wave of student protest that arose in 1952 after Batista seized power and attempted to crush the Cuban Student movement. Castro and the "Class of 1953" waged a six year struggle in every inch of Cuba and in the mountains of Mexico to forge a revolutionary movement, organized the masses of Cuban people and seized power. The Federation of University Students which was founded at the University of Havana in 1954-55 produced the present generation of leaders in Cuba.

It was Cuba, who in the recent Angolan war of liberation, sent thousands of (mostly African) troops to Angola to help defeat the counter revolutionary, U.S. and South African backed forces of UNITA and FNLA.

The African Student Union of North America, the West African Student Union based in London, and the Nigerian Youth Movement, all of which were founded in the 30's and 40's produced a generation of African leaders and revolutionaries which include Kwame Nkrumah and Azikwe.

The emergence of SNCC, the Sharpeville massacre, the youth wings of the various movements, organizations and parties spread throughout the African world, the various national student unions which exist wherever African students are enrolled in college — combined with the world-wide Black Power and Black student movements of the 1960's produced the present generation of young African revolutionaries.

The All-African People's Revolutionary Party recognizes the role that black students must play. We urge you to stand up to your revolutionary responsibility by studying and working for our people who are scattered and suffering all over the world.

You must begin to study the correct interpretation of our people's history of struggle. Out of that correct interpretation of our history will flow the strategy and tactics which will lead us towards the achievement of our ultimate objective — Pan-Africanism. Pan-Africanism is the primary objective of the A-APRP — "the total liberation and unification of Africa under scientific socialism. It is an objective, which when achieved, will bring about the fulfillment of the aspirations of Africans and people of African descent everywhere. It will at the same time advance the triumph of the international socialist revolution".

In Soweto, South African young elementary, high school and college students have sparked a resurgence of political activity amongst the masses of African people. The youth of Africa have taken to the streets. They have joined the guerilla camps of Azania, Namibia and Zimbabwe. They are determined to fight for the total liberation and unification of the continent of Africa, and to build a better way of life for African people who are scattered and suffering all over the world.

Can you be a student and a revolutionary too?

LOVE ADDICTION

Exactly what is this thing called "Love"?.....Honey...it's somethin that gets in your soul and turns you every which way except loose.

How will you know when it enters your particular soul?..."Oh you'll know."...

Or will you? ... Love can heal and it can hurt. It can destroy. It can create. The deepest most dominant emotion the human being possesses, is that amazingly subtle, positive and submissive emotion called love. Love changes constantly and exists not, the same in any two people. It has more variations and species than insects and animals put together. A most complex and beautiful attribute, it seems to be mans' special gift from God. It is the one thing in creation that man cannot artificially recreate; however, unfortunately, man does have the ability to destroy it. .

The mentality that rules this world at present has tampered with the minds of people to the point where, in many people, love is almost an illness...an addiction.

"Love addiction is an illness, which has entered and affected individuals and society, as much or more than drug abuse, alcoholism and food addiction."

It surrounds us daily and we actually rejoice about being blind to the reality of inbalance our sense of reasoning and our sense of emotion. You've hhard of "love ones"... "hooked on a thing called love".... "the power of love". We sing and dance to the melody of the physical words melted together...but never stop to decipher the actual essence of those words.

Those entertainers don't know it...but when they sing their songs about their "blinded love" or "walking in the shadows of love....they are telling the stone truth.

Is being addicted to love such a bad thing to get hung up in?

Being addicted to anything is more serious than death itself, because that's exactly where it can lead you....straight to death, be ihmental or physical.

Being addicted to something when the desires of the body rule the being. The mind is too weak to take over and rule the body with common sense and rational; consequently, the desires of the body guide you blindly wherever it wants you to go. This is quite possible and relevant in the seemingly most intelligent of people.

People who cannot stop smoking, stop drug usage, stop overeating or cease lusting and craving for the opposite sex... are addicted. Their mind is too weak to stand up and calculate wether that particular thing is good or bad for them, and then if its bad immediately give it up. When people know something is bad for them and continue to do it.... they are addicted to that thing. Why doesn't the compulsive smoker have the power to let go of that cigarette knowing its bad for him? The cigarette doesn't jump in his hand and shout "smoke me". He picks it up. Addiction is not bad when it is condusive to your development... otherwise... it could destroy you.

I'm not down on love. Love is one of the most wonderful and powerful forces of man. However, people should not be so hung up on love that they cannot see if their relationship is helping or literally destroying them. People should not fall in love... they should walk into it.

Identity And Unity

Importance of Identity

As black people who are struggling to free ourselves from negative conditions such as racism, police harassment, drug-polluted communities, inadequate housing, unemployment, poor schooling for our children, and no meaningful political voice; it is an absolute necessity to know our correct identity so that we can unify and mmove as one against our common problems. Identity is the first requirement for correct political direction.

Understanding clearly our identity will enable us to answer the fundamental questions — 1) Who are we? 2) Where did we come from? 3) Who are our friends? 4) Who are our enemies? 5) Where are we going?

The source of our problems and the direction that we must take in solving these problems become crystal clear once we understand our true identity.

Basis of Identity: Common Race, Culture & History

All people come from a land and these people collectively determine their identity on this land as they sruggle to control nature and to organize themselves in a manner that will guarantee their survival and progress. As a result of this struggle which took place in different real conditions for different races, the particular people develop a culture and history which belong to and is a reflection of them and them alone.

Their identity or cultural personality is based on the things that they hold in common within their culture and history and it expresses itself in common values toward people and objects, common customs, common mannerisms, common music, common dance, common dress, common living conditions, etc.

The identity of a people is defined by their commonalities although there will be differences oweing to varying climate, terrain, and resources within a land or unusual historical circumstances; however, the commonalities far outweigh the differences and bind the people together as a distinct group.

The people of Afrikan origin are a distinct race with a common history and culture just as the people of European or Chinese origin have unique characteristics as separate groups of people. Although all racial groups hold some general traits in common, they each have developed a culture and history particular to them which makes it easy to recognize the difference between an Afrikan and an European or an European and a Chinese.

Afrikan - Negro - Black - Afrikan

As an intensify our struggle, we must uncover our actual identity to ensure the correct basis and proper course for our struggle. History rewards us best in this pursuit. We were brought to the Red man's land, in what is now called the U.S.A., Puerto Rico, Brazil, etc. over 300 years ago. We were Afrikan captives stolen by European kidnappers who defined us as "Negroes" and "slaves" in an effort to erase the identity of a proud people. This illegal renaming was a key part of a systematic attempt to cut off our culture and history because the Europeans knew that a people's culture and history are the foundations of their identity and their will to live an independent existence free of foreign domination. Although Europeans were partially successful in certain areas such as changing our langueage and way of dress, they couldn't overturn one fundamental natural law — the people are the main ingredient in the development of their identity, culture, and history, and only with the extermination of the people can you prevent the continuance of their identity, culture, and history.

We have survived as a people owing to the courageous struggle of our parents, grandparents, great grandparents, great, great grandparents, and great, great, great grandparents, who are our ancestors. We still hold one identity, culture, and history in common with all black people (alive, dead, and yet unborn) who originate from Afrika no matter where they now live. There are some differences due to the fact that some of us were forcibly taken from the land (slavery) on one hand and on the other hand some of us had the land forcibly taken from us (colonialism and settler colonialism); however, all of us were exploited as Afrikans and workers. The commonalities in our history and culture are clearly dominant. We share a common destiny. We are one people — Afrikans.

During the 1960's in the U.S., the masses of our people pulled most of the covers off our hidden identity as we discarded the term "Negro" and defined ourselves as black people, Afro-Americans, and Afrikan American, with the utmost pride in our culture and history. These more accurate definitions of who we are corresponded to the forward movement of our struggle as we moved to a higher level of political activity. We had a more correct perspective on ourselves as an oppressed people and the direction and requirements for our total liberation. We were reaching for Afrika.

Now it is time that we move to the truly correct definition of who we are. We are Afrikans and our destiny is one whether we live in the U.S., Brazil, or Azania (South Afrika). We belong to the Afrikan nation.

Our destiny was-is-will be forged with the destiny of our homeland and until Afrika is united under an all-union socialist government, the Afrikan around the planet will not be free.

We must clearly understand who we are, where we came from, who are our friends, who are our enemies, and where we are going so that we can unify and charter a course leading to toal liberation.

The Struggle Intensifies

Today the question of identity must be answered correctly by the masses of Afrikan people throughout the world, because today we are sitnesssng Europeans whose ancestors forced their way onto Afrikan soil over 300 years ago with their European identity, culture, and history claiming to be white Afrikans. But is we investigate the culture and history of the white people who are committing crimes against black people in Zimbabwe (Rhodesia) and Azania (South Afrika) on one hand and then point out the oppressor of black folks in the U.S. the other, we will find that the same European with common history, culture, and oppressive systems based on capitalism and racism. History shows us that there is no question of their European identity. It also points out that they can no more be white Afrikans than we can be black Europeans, black Americans, black French, black Germans, and etc.

The white man of European origin is European racially, culturally, and historically wherever he may now reside just as the black man is the Afrikan based on the same criterion. Any other position is at best confusion and at worst a conscious lie.

As Afrikans we must unify around our common interests on a local, regional, national, and international level. We must defend each other whether we find ourselves in the neighborhood or different parts of the world.

Victory will be ours in Southern Afrika and it will mark a qualitative leap in the worldwide liberation struggle of the black man — the Afrikan revolution.

Ours is one interdependent struggle! We as a people have no permanent friends or enemies, just one constant interest — the total liberation and progress of all Afrikans!

Education

"Education consists not only in the sum of what a man knows, or the skill with which he can put this to his own advantage... man's education must also be measured in terms of the soundness of his judgement of people and things and in his power to understand and appreciate the needs of his fellowmen, and be of service to them."

The Brown-Gethers Case

Craeman Gethers

Twenty-nine months has elapsed since the robbery of McDonald (in Hadley, Mass.) on August 7, 1974. Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers, who were convicted on the crime in 1975, are still incarcerated. Basically, we have to ask what has transpired since this time? In extending this question where will the New Year lead us in the Brown-Gether's case? The McDonald robbery which took place in Hadley, was robbed of $1200 by three black males in the summer of 1974. The police were immediately summoned, and the place closed. In interviewing perspective witnesses, three individuals came forward with the clearest description. Within two days Debra Cooke (one of the three witnesses) picked a candidate for the crime. Robert Brown from Cambridge, Mass. was chosen as the only lead in the case. The police in trying to find this individual, made a big mistake by arresting R. Earl Brown from Elmira, New York on August 23. Craemen Gethers' was mistakenly identified on August 26, when we walked in Kentucky Fried Chicken on crutches and was selected by Debra Cooke and Kathy Clark (who were employed for the summer at Kentucky) for the incident. Eventually, this led to a Probable Cause hearing on September 26, 1974 where the two black males were bonded over to the Superior Court. The March hearing tried both defendant before a jury of eleven whites and one black. After fifteen hours of deliberation the jury was hung. Judge Raymond Cross then declared that the case was a mistrial. But the Northampton system did not stop here, because Craemen was tried in July, while Earl was tried in October. Both were convicted by an all-white juries on the flimsiest evidence. Craemen sentenced to an eight to twelve year sentence, while Earl received a three to five year sentence.

Since the conviction Craemen has been unsuccessful in two attempts for new trial motion. In both appearances the judge refused to admit evidence that proved his innocence. Besides the injustice in the court system, the Norfolk State Prison has refused to give Craemen furloughs privileges. Even with the letters of support, Craemen will have to wait until April before the next board meeting. Effort to get him on a work-release program will be viewed in April. In the past month, Craemen has found out that Judge Hayer failed to rule on all motions during his last appearance. Which opens the door for a new hearing on bail, stay of sentence, and a new trial motion.

Earl returned from Walpole and Norfolk State Prison on February 5, where he was remanded to the House of Corrections at Northampton. While in the jail, he became eligible for a work-release program in mid-April. He has continued to be on the program, while attending school at the UMass campus. During the month of December, Judge Tamburello granted a motion for the March transcript, but denied bail because of his belief in the Work-Release program. A new trial motion was scheduled for December 27th, but was scratched by Brown's attorney. In early January, Earl was notified by the Massachusetts Parole Board that he would be reviewed in April. Recently, Judge Tamburello (the trial judge) barred a suppression hearing, but scheduled a motion for a new trial hearing on February 4, 1977.

In summation, the Craemen Gethers-Earl Brown case is taking a new emphasis in 1977. Prior to the school year ending, a petition for the pardon of Craemen was started. Four days produced 1500 signatures, and $160 in legal fees. January 31st is the scheduled date for the petition drive. Secondly, two films will present the case to the television audience. The short version will be ready by early February, while the longer version will be completed in May. Thirdly, a strategy meeting is being set up on January 27th and February 3rd. The meeting will tighten up communications among the funding organization, media outlets, and the legal area. Fourth, a petition to bring Craemen to the Northampton area will coincide with efforts to get the pardon petition signed. Fifth, both Craemen and Earl have continued to write judge's legislators, and other groups interested in helping out. The emphasis, is to make people aware of this case. We ask, that people make an effort to sign the petitions, that will circulate next week. Should any one know of any legislators, judges, or interested parties to contact the Cultural Center in New Africa House (545-0794). Finally, we ask for your support, because we never know who is next.

Livening Up A Dull Month?

By BENJAMIN RIVALTA

"Livening up a dull month" really did a fine job of bringing into focus the cynical way in which historically significant happenings can be projected as being everyday insignificances. Assuming the best, we'll take it for an oversight on Mr. Jan Van Tols' part. We will however comment on what he took to be such trivialities that the "snow and cold" were important by comparison.

The two significant issues in question are the Gary Gilmore slaying and ex-president Ford's bill sent to Congress soliciting that Puerto Rico be decreed by that body a State of the Union.

In spite of the apparent non relationship, both happenings set precedents that bring them closer together than what is evident at first glance.

The Gilmore slaying is probably the most dramatic to most Americans. It entails the reactivation of one of the most archaic forms of punishment (as opposed to rehabilitation) to deal with the results, in specific human actions, of a social system based on inequities.

There is definitely no doubt about the fact that prevailing social conditions and expectations will impose on the individual modes of behavior. From there the recent (and perhaps long overdue) trend towards rehabilitating "criminals" as opposed to punishing them for the actions scientific social research have found to be socially induced.

Of course there are probably very limited alternatives from the system's point of view. One might be negative reinforcement, which actually boils down to punishment (and is obviously the easiest since the required structure is already there). Another might be a combination of negative and positive reinforcement, which would probably be known as rehabilitation in our Social Work circles (and will probably require more resources than the first alternative), and the results of which would be hindered by the prevailing social conditions.

The third alternative — and definitely not one for the system — and the only one that can get at the roots of "deviate" behavior (as it is known to the professionals in the field), is the elimination of the social conditions which stimulate such behavior.

What we're trying to say, basically, is that the elimination of the effect (the "criminal" in this case) will not eliminate the cause of his behavior (the social system).

Ten years had passed since the last official murder of a "criminal" in this country. It could ironically be called the rehabilitation test. Gary Gilmore's killing could possibly be labelled the failure of that test.

The system has chosen the alternative for which it is best prepared: punishment. It's probably the most hardnose way of facing its own incapacities, but then this seems to be the prevailing attitude in all other spheres of political and economic endeavor, which brings us to the subject of Ford's bill to Annex the Puerto Rican nation to the U.S.

Doing a little history, most Americans probably don't know that Puerto Rico became part (or as it is called by most, became a possession) of the U.S. as the result of a war it had little to do with. It became the booty of the conquering nation. Only Puerto Rico was never in the war, except for the occupating invasion carried out July 25, 1898.

Along with Puerto Rico, the U.S. also took control of the Philipines, Hawaii and Cuba. The Philipines and Cuba later became independent nations; Hawaii, on the other hand, was annexted as part of the Union in the beginning of the past decade. Puerto Rico for its part remained in sort of a "limbo" state, which made exploitation a simpler matter.

Along with the economic exploitation of the Island, it is also used as a military stronghold for U.S. "diplomacy" in Latin America.

These two reasons for maintaining U.S. intervention in Puerto Rico have prevailed throughout the years. Sometimes the primary reason for staying is economic, at others it is military.

Today it is a combination of both. The Panama Canal issue taking on grave connotations for the U.S., Cuba's unconditional support for Panamanian sovereignty over the canal, and the left leaning regime recently re-elected in Jamaica, despite the CIA's gross intervention, are factors that are making the Puerto Rican stronghold important for the U.S. military.

On the other hand, the pinch put on the U.S. by the oil producing countries who are demanding that their economies receive their just share of the riches this mineral has produced for U.S. companies, and the very good possibilities of rich oil deposits in Puerto Rico make it even more desirous.

The annexation project Ford had the nerve to submit to Congress, despite the opposition that prevails on the Island for such political status, along with the fact that he apparently did it on the spur of the moment without even consulting the Puerto Rican colonial administration, has caused quite an uproar.

It's not such a simple matter as Mr. Jan Van Tol would have his readers think (or himself for that matter); not the Gilmore slaying, nor the Puerto Rican issue either. Both carry the same hardnose undertone which, if the American people don't identify on time for something to be done about it, will be the way of the near future on all policy setting issues.

More on the Puerto Rican issue will be published in the forthcoming issues of this publication, if the editorial staff permits it.

The Duke Ellington Foundation

The Duke Ellington Foundation, a non-profit foundation whose purpose it is to establish a museum and a "classic Black American music" archives in the home of the late Duke Ellington would serve to permanently commemorate the massive achievements of those who sustained and developed this great cultural tradition in America under the most oppressive circumstances.

Further it will be the purpose of the Foundation to provide a range of educational facilities to serve as vehicles for the advancement of the tradition of "classic Black American music."

The Foundation will do whatever possible, under the direction of its Board of Directors, to advance this great tradition at home, in the U.S., as well as abroad.

It is fitting that the home of Mr. Ellington, perhaps the greatest international ambassador of "classic Black American music," serve to permanently commemorate the massive achievements of Black music and Black musical artists in America.†

† Additional information on the Foundation will be made available on request.

RATIONALE

"Classic Black American music," an original American art form, has never throughout the history of its development been properly acclaimed as to the great and complex art that it is. This is strangely more true here in America than in countries abroad. Particularly in Europe and in Japan, "classic Black American music" has received some deal of recognition where it is looked at as the tradition which best reflects the social and historical peculiarities of the total American culture.

If we compare the achievements of "classic Black American music" with that of European classical music, we see that both have made advancements in music of great artistics merit. Yet only the music of Europe receives proper recognition in its achievements, while the music of America suffers a slighted reputation. Perhaps this is because European classical music was the music of the European aristocracy, supported by the church and the political state, while "classic Black American music" was the product of the group which made up the bottom of the American social strata.

Yet this music, this classic American music is an achievement that all Americans should be proud of. It is an achievement that we should seek to support and to show off to the world, particularly after the reflections of the Bicentennial year.

The role of universities is one of primary importance in any modern society; they are important not only as a place of higher and specialized learning or as centers for scientific and social research, but as a place for the preservation and perpetuation of the arts and of culture.

OBJECTIVES

We offer the University of Massachusetts, through the cooperation of its students, faculty and administration, as well as that of the Commonwealth, a chance to make a major contribution towards the advancement of American arts and culture by:

1. Sponsoring a two-day festival commemorating the achievements of Black American music and those who contributed most to its development, to be held in the Alumni Stadium, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, in May, 1977.

2. Donating the proceeds of the festival to help support the establishment of the Duke Ellington Foundation, to be based in New York City in the home of Duke Ellington at 333 Riverside Drive, New York, New York. The Foundation is endorsed by Ruth Ellington and the Ellington family.

Wondering if you

Dealing with the contradictions
Of you and me
Questioning if you exist
Loud and strong
The cold winds blow
Freezing my body to its core

Dark and deep
Grows the night
Processing the lonely hope
That our vibes will meet
Do you exist
In this time
Or

Something that lives
Only in my mind
Come to life my thoughts
Materialize and make yourself real

Embrace me
With your power
Together we will be Gods
Of our Universe
Masters of destiny
Come to life dream

There is a war going on
The people are dying
From bombs of maddness
Exploding in a pine grove
Plucking up the family by the roots

A native of mighty pines
Wiped away
All because of

Between money and freedom
Like killing off a continent of people
Falling debris
Peering eyes from Village window huts
Animals carried by force
Of the wind
And running for their life

Echoing cries
Of Death moan

YOU AND ME IN PARADISE

All rights are reserved to writer

Many hours have passed
Many laughs have been laughed
Many tears have been cried
The same knees have been skinned
Many times
And through it all
You were there
Under the sky shade
Of patch work clouds
Materializing into the fantasy
Of my mind
Where you would be
To pick me up and spin me around
With mv hand in vours
We would run
Stopping long enough
To roll on the ground
In a child-like laughter
And run again
Trying to touch
That shiny ball
Which hangs suspended
At the end of our journey
We realize the load has gotten heavy
And stop for strength
As we embrace strong and gentle
Just long enough to vanish
Away to the center of our sun
And again we would run
Yes, under the sky shade of patchwork
Clouds in the fantasy of my mind
We live in Paradise
But, when the circle is reversed
And reality is made known
The same game becomes a gamble
Where there is a winner who cries
And a loser who laughs
As the cards fall
The game grows stronger
Knowing that the source must remain
Knowing that nothing
Will stop the source
Because when the last card
Has been played
I hold the Ace of Spade
Yes, I am the Ace of Spade
There is no other who can Bring you to the place you want to be
You must go through me to find peace
I am the one
There is no other in this lifetime
Who lives in the fantasy of you and me
In paradise
No!
Don't awake me
I don't want to die!!!

Afro-Am Presents

The film, The Seven Samauria, more commonly known as the Magnificant Seven, will be shown this Thursday in the basement of New Africa House. It will begin at 7:00. Admission is free.

Feelin' Good

The National Theatre Company will present FEELIN' GOOD, a musical tribute to the black entertainer in America on Friday, February 4, 1977, at the Student Union Ballroom, University of Massachusetts, Amherst. This production premiered last season and went on to received consistent raves and standing ovations wherever it played.

From the minstrel tunes of the nineteenth century to the rock and roll explosion of today, American music owes a debt to that indefinable musical quality that came to America from Africa — that quality we call "soul". Black music was some three hundred years in the making. It is a music that was once a matter of life and death representing the struggles, heroism, and history of a people. Through song, dance and humor, FEELIN' GOOD traces the history of the American black man's massive contribution to the world of American musical entertainment. It is the story of a syncopated beat; a rhythm that became the pulse of America: a sound that was reshaped, re-formed, re-written and expanded into virtually every modern musical form. FEELIN' GOOD is a panorama that traces a tradition and culture to the pinnacles of artistic achievement in our time.

FEELIN' GOOD opens where much of the music we enjoy today had its beginnings — the black man's church. We are taken from a demonstration of the transplanted African rhythms on a Southern plantation to the first black influence on the American stage — the ministrel show. Using music, sketches and narration FEELIN' GOOD travels through the history of jazz, the black vaudeville circuit, the black Broadway stage including a parade of music and personalities which span half a century. From Broadway our performers take us to Harlem's Apollo Theatre, which has hosted practically every black performer of the last fifty years.

Producers Barry and Fran Weissler have chosen a young and talented team to create this tribute to the Black entertainer in America. Sue Lawless has directed our fine cast in spirited and stirring musical numbers and humorous comedy scenes. Ms. Lawless, a seasoned veteran of the New York Stage, most recently directed the hit musical IN GAY COMPANY at the Little Hippedrome. With her comedy partner, Ted Pugh of IRENE, Ms. Lawless formed an act which opened to raves in New York (and Toronto) in Off-Broadway Stage 73. They played all the major talk shows, including The Tonight Show, The Merv Griffin Show, and David Frost Show. Marilyn Stasio of Cue Magazine says of the performer: "Sue Lawless is one of the funniest ladies alive."

Author Sean O'Malley, is a veteran of four NTC productions: The Age of Shaw, A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court, Oliver Twist and Celebration USA. David Sackeroff returns after designing the imaginative setting for NTC's production of Oliver Twist. The costumes have been created by Winn Morton who has designed for the Jones Beach Marine Theatre as well as numerous regional and Broadway productions.

FEELIN' GOOD can be seen on Friday, February 4, 1977 at 8:00 p.m. at the Student Union Ballroom, University of Massachusetts. Admission is Free and open to the public. FEELIN' GOOD is sponsored by the Campus Center Program Council.

Selectmen raise sewer rates

By CHRIS BOURNE
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen voted last night to raise the sewer service charge by 100 per cent over the next two years. A 30 per cent increase will take effect on April 1st. The remaining 70 per cent will take effect on April 1, 1978.

University Budget Director Warren Gulko said last night that the increase will "cause us some problems." Gulko added that this year's increase will only affect one billing since it starts on April 1.

Asked about the increase which will take effect next year, Gulko said "The deferred increase is much easier for us to plan for. We'll have to negotiate our budget with the legislature with that in mind."

Gulko also added that "if the Dukakis budget goes through, it will just mean more people on the street".

The Board took under advisement a motion to grant a license to Pioneer Valley Cablevision and the Center for Community Access TV (CCATV). Blue Carreker, from CCATV, and Gus Lavelli, general manager of Pioneer Valley Cablevision, pointed out that some differences still remained to be worked out in the final agreement.

According to Carreker, CCATV has to work out an insurance system for the equipment. In addition, they want a provison to replace worn out equipment in the agreement.

There is also some disagreement over who would decide if the equipment is being used properly and over who would decide if one group or the other had defaulted on the agreement.

A representative of the Amherst Taxpayers Association read a statement from the association criticizing the municipal budget which was unveiled last week. The budget, which totals $13.8 million, would result in a $4 increase in the tax rate.

The association charged that the selectmen and the school committee must start making some choices in order to hold the line on the budget.

The board decided to ask Town Manager A. Louis Hayward to make some specific suggestions on how the tax rate increase can be eliminated.

Selectman Diane Romer said "This town has been living in a dream world." She also added that there "will probably be a one or two dollar increase each year."

Chairman Nancy Eddy echoed Romer saying "If you think it's bad now, just wait."

The town was presented with the Votingest City Award last night. Amherst is the votingest city in the 10,000-25,000 population range.

The idea for the award was proposed by Alameda, California and was printed in the Bicentennial Times. Phyllis Lehrer of the Amherst League of Women Voters presented the town with a flag symbolizing the award.

The Board also heard a report from Ward Motts of Hampshire Geological Associates. Motts recommended that the town hire a ground water geologist to locate the least expensive and least environmentally damaging water supply for the town.

Motts also criticized the proposal that the town obtain water from Quabbin Reservoir. Motts said that "Quabbin water is approximately 2 to 3 times as expensive as in-town water and may be 2 times as expensive as Hadley water."

In addition, Motts said that a water shortage in Boston might cause a cutoff of Amherst water if the town was using Quabbin water.

Motts said that recent tests indicate that "many times the long term supply needed by Hadley, Amherst, and UMass is present in

Whitmore to comment on bus stoppage

By BRAD GOVERMAN
Collegian Staff

High ranking Whitmore officials will appear at the Faculty Senate on Wednesday and Student Senate on Thursday to give definitive statements as to why the UMass bus service was deactivated during intersession.

The action of the administrators to make formal statements was prompted by suggestions from The Collegian after the paper learned from Student Senate Treasurer, Tom Kerrins, of several inconsistencies in this year's bidding procedure to procure insurance coverage for the UMass bus fleet.

Chancellor Bromery will be speaking at the Faculty Senate and Vice-Chancellor Robert Woodbury will address the Student Senate.

Kerrins was upset over effects of the deactivation of the service as it caused general inconvenience to both students and Amherst residents.

Kerrins claimed that due to negligence on part of the University, Treasurer's Office bids were sent out too late.

Kerrins offered an SGA document to support his allegation. The document stated, "that the bid was not put out until November 24, 1976; the insurance companies originally contended they needed more time to prepare a bid."

In a statement reported in the Collegian on Jan. 23, Robert Madsen, of the treasurer's office said that the integrity of his office was upheld in all his actions concerning the matter and also added that "no stone was left unturned in the pursuit of insurance coverage."

Madsen maintains that negotiations with their old insuror, Commercial Union, had begun early in October through a local independent agent, Thomas Lyons of Northampton.

After negotiations failed, bids were sent out to 12 other firms on November 24. Among those 12 firms was the Marsh and McLennan firm of Boston, who are currently providing the UMass bus insurance, even though they rejected the bid at the time. As a result, by virtue of State law which requires all licensed vehicles to carry insurance, the University was placed in the assigned risk pool.

According to Madsen, none of the firms picked up the bid because of what he called a "bad insurance, even though they rejected the bid at the time. As a result, by virtue of State law which requires all licensed vehicles to carry insurance, the University was placed in the assigned risk pool.

According to Madsen, none of the firms picked up the bid because of what he called a "bad insurance climate."

A professor at the University, who specializes in insurance matters verified that this bad climate did exist. He said that insurance companies took a terrible financial beating from losses in the stock market. Also contributing to the poor insurance climate was the cost of inflation as it pertained to court claims and the cost of insurance companies would be unwilling to take any new comers during such a period.

Kerrins pointed out that bids may not have been quoted because 10 of the 12 firms were small local businesses.

Kerrins is also upset over the

Prepare for International Women's Week

Women's groups hold recruitment meeting

By MARY BETH ALLEN and NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

More than 50 persons attended an International Women's Week (IWW) recruitment meeting last night in the Campus Center.

Representatives from various ethnic, religious, racial and political organizations joined forces and pledged their support to making IWW a success.

Maria Elena Brown, a member of the IWW coordinating committee, introduced the meeting with an outline of scheduled events for the upcoming festival, to be held March 6 through 12. Brown emphasized the festivals "committment to Third World and white working class women's issues."

Brown said that events would focus on women's issues related to consumerism, the family, health, labor, lesbianism and sexuality.

Committee topics were formulated by coordinators over intersession, although initial IWW plans began last October. Final approval was given by coordinators to ten committees: finance, publicity, child care, music, speakers, film - theatre - art - poetry, transportation - hospitality, a resource fair and men's committee.

Financial considerations drew top priority in last night's agenda. Although childcare and workshops have formulated projected budgets, actual funding has not been obtained. Brown urged committee members to "do some legwork" and promote funding from area governments, which have already tentatively promised funds.

The coordinating group has already obtained facilities for up to 50 workshops and hopes that adequate funding will provide payment for workshop leaders, including organization representatives, students, and working women.

"If childcare cannot be provided, activities will have to be cut in half," Brown stressed. She hopes that children can "get involved in IWW even though they will be with their peers."

"Much energy" will be needed to ensure the success of the childcare committee, said Brown.

Hampshire College and Mount Holyoke College are sponsoring women's symposiums the first week in March. Hampshire has pledged support in the form of vans for the newly defined transportation and hospitality committee.

Black jazz musician Betty Carter will kick off the week with a Fine Arts Center concert Sunday, March 6. Women's groups will be appearing at the Hatch, Blue Wall and Top of the Campus on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights of the week.

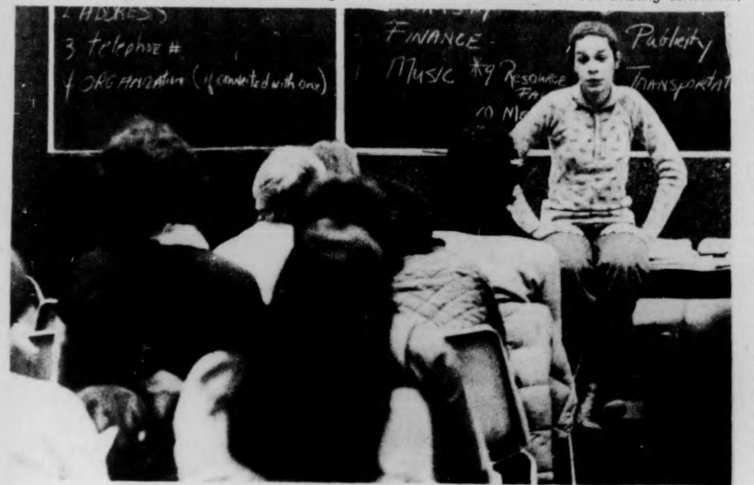
Ahora, Hillel, Chinese Student Association, Student Government Association, Distinguished Visitors Program and the Lesbian Union are all pooling resources for the week's cultural events.

Brown said that a list of nine speakers has been submitted to a DVP subcommittee for selection and approval.

Irene Richards, another coordinator, underlined the importance of planning activities and schedules as soon as possible.

"We have nine days to get it together," Richards said. "February 9 is our projected date to get IWW rolling." Publicity committee members plan to advertise on all local media and to sent out a nationwide bulk mailing to attract as large as possible audience.

"If we all combine our efforts," said Richards, "IWW should be really big."



Last night in the Campus Center a recruitment meeting was held for International Women's Week. Maria Elena Brown, member of the coordinating committee speaks here concerning the event, planned for March 6-12. (Staff photo by Bill Greene)

UMass argues meal tax issue

By PATTI KELLEHER
Collegian Staff

The University administration is still arguing with the state about its liability for an 8 per cent excise tax on student meals, but a bill going before the Massachusetts State Legislature may settle the problem once and for all.

"There was an attempt to collect the tax from UMass last year," says Arthur Warren, director of food services, and "we're still being billed."

For the past year and a half, students on the meal plan have not been charged the 8 per cent tax.

"I didn't believe we were liable for it," said Warren. He also said that they have attorneys working on the case trying to prove the University's non-liability. The University should not have to pay a tax levied by the Commonwealth since "it is the Commonwealth," said Warren.

New legislation, if passed, would exempt student meals, both in state and private schools, from an excise tax. Therefore, the current situation would be solved only in reference to the future.

According to Warren, one difficulty is "that even this legislation passing doesn't mean they aren't going to be looking for back taxes." These back taxes would amount to in excess of $300,000.

"It certainly was a calculated risk not to charge students. If we lose in the courts we will need to pay it," Warren said. Warren added the money would have to come from the students. "We'd need to get it from somewhere. It would need to come out of student fees. Our budget is made up entirely from student board rates. It would come out of our total budget."

Warren said that currently the cash sales in the Dining Commons are paying tax.

Other Massachusetts state schools, such as Lowell University, have been paying the food tax.

Warren said the bill before the Legislature, "certainly would help other schools and re uslieve us from any further conflict."

State Representative Barbara Gray, who is submitting the bill, believes that, to students, the "dormitory is their home," and they should not have to pay a tax to eat in their own homes (the dining commons being their kitchens).

The bill descends from the protests of a 1975 directive from Owen Clark commissioner of corporations and taxation to apply the Massachusetts state meal tax to "any college, university.... whether public or private." Legislators who became aware of that directive felt it was unfair.

Public hearings on this bill will be held early next year. However, at this time no schedule has been made.

Activities head resigns

By JOE QUINLAN
Collegian Staff

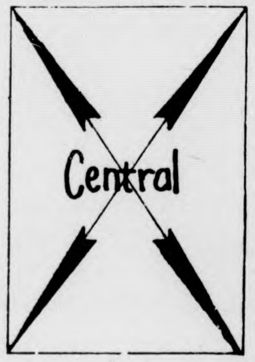
Surprising other Central Area Government members, Wayne Burns announced his resignation as area activities coordinator last night.

"Due to my other commitments in my guitar profession, I'll be unable to devote the amount of time necessary to run this office properly," explained Burns at the government's first meeting of the semester.

"Since I've been involved with the Central Area Government for four years, I still plan to keep in touch and help out wherever possible," he said.

President Janice Perry noted that the position vacated by Burns is open to any Central resident. The job, which pays $10 a week, requires a person who can schedule one activity for the Central area every two weeks and aid any dorm in Central plan functions of its own.

Treasurer Robert Cannon said the Central Area Government will be submitting its budget to the Undergraduate Student Senate today. There should be a vote on the budget sometime in March, Cannon said. $10 for each of the 2,000 students living in Central is being requested from the senate.



Major categories of the budget include $2,900 for the New World Center, $3,150 for area crafts, $1,850 for the Women's Center and $1,400 for the area's counseling center.

In other action, the government allocated $300 to Chadbourne House for its presentation of Alfred Hitchcock's "Family Plot" in the Campus Center Auditorium this Friday night.

Requests for financial aid for other Central area endeavors which were tabled until next week's Monday night meeting, include $300 for a proposed cross-country ski trip in Vermont, tentatively planned for late February, and $200 for a mural colloquium to be held at Brooks. Also on the agenda for next week will be the area's spring concert.

Student taken to infirmary

By MICHAEL McHUGH
Collegian Staff

On Jan. 31 around 1 a.m. a person from Thoreau dormitory in Southwest injected an unknown narcotic drug and had an adverse reaction. The person was brought to the infirmary, was treated and released.

On Jan. 29 at 10:30 p.m. two men were involved in a fight at the Blue Wall. One of the men went to Coolen Dickinson Hospital in Northampton to be checked out. He plans to file a complaint at Hampshire County Court House.

A Sony television receiver, valued at $350 was stolen from 337 Hills North between Jan. 26 and 27. Sometime between Jan. 28 and 29 four mag wheels were stolen from lot 21 next to Southwest.

On Jan. 29 at 11:15 a.m. a defective coffee pot caused a small fire at the Marks Meadows School of the School of Education. The damage is estimated at $50.

Winthrop Cummings, manager of the University Store in the Campus Center, said that he was the target of obscenities after his workers falsely accused a person of stealing a paint brush on Saturday Jan. 29.

According to Cummings, "a person had been seen by one of our workers to have taken a paint brush and concealed it in the person's clothing. When the person was leaving the store, the person was checked for the brush but apparently had put it back. The person proceeded to call me every name in the book. It was an ugly incident."

He added, "Forty two people were apprehended for shoplifting the last year and 11 have already been apprehended this year. One person was found to possess $20 worth of chalk, sun glasses and greeting cards. Two others tried to exit from the textbook annex with hard cover books but were also caught. The store will continue to prosecute shoplifters to deter crime. Students should think twice about shoplifting because it brings fines, court expenses, and could also affect their careers."

Greenough Snack Bar opens under new management

By JAMES DALTON
Collegian Staff

The Greenough Snack Bar reopened under new management last night after being closed last semester due to financial difficulties.

The Snack Bar had been run for the past three years by Greenough students, but was shut down last semester after accruing a debt of over $4,000.

The reorganization and reopening of the Snack Bar is being overseen by John Fisher, economic development coordinator, employed by the Student Senate.

Fisher is optimistic over the prospects of success.

The Senate is backing the reopening in the hope that it can be made into a self sustaining operation that will eventually work off the deficit, which would otherwise have to be assumed by the Senate.

Fisher attributed the previous failure of the operation to the failure to properly meet the demands and needs of the students in the Central-Orchard Hill area.

Formerly run solely by Greenough students, the Snack bar now employs ten persons, including three student managers, chosen from over 80 applicants from the Central area. Greenough remains a rent free host.

Fisher stated that they were "trying to provide the best quality food at the most reasonable price and to make it a pleasant place to come to." He added that he was "pleased with the quality of the employees and the operation."

In addition to some physical changes, the Snack Bar will be sponsoring a naming contest in the near future in an effort to give it a new look.

The menu includes a variety of grill items, deli type sandwiches, ice cream, and an assortment of beverages and munchies.

The Snack Bar, located in the basement of Greenough in the Central area, is open Monday through Thursday 6-12 p.m., Friday 6-12:30 a.m., Saturday and Sunday 12:30 p.m.-12:30 a.m. skyrocketing premium, fearing that fieldtrip services may be cut.

On Jan. 21, a settlement was negotiated with the Marsh and McLennan firm. The extent of the coverage was $1-2 million personal liability, a figure equal to the previous year.

This year's premium was upped from a meager $100 per bus to approximately $2000 per bus. The total premium last year was $3,135, this year's total was $65,100 for payment on 31 buses.

Vice president of the Peter Pan Bus Service said that, in his opinion, last year's premium was incredibly low, and that this year's premium is still a bargain.

Kerrins felt the lateness of the University's bid may have put the University in a position where they were manipulated into paying an extravagantly high premium.

When confronted with Kerrins' allegation, H.J. Littlefield, Director of Planning at the Chancellor's office, flatly denied any such insinuation.

According to Gerald Grady, of the Community Relations Office in Whitmore, the University is planning to alter its business calendar to avoid bidding complications in the future.

the Hadley aquifer system." Motts recommended that the town negotiate with Hadley to use some of this water.

Other methods of obtaining water were suggested by Motts, including artificial recharge, drilling additional wells, and further pumping of water the Lawrence Swamp Aquifer.

In other business, the board heard a report on the continuing negotiations between the town and the Valley Health Plan, over providing coverage for town employees. The proposal would offer town employees a choice between the health plan and the present health insurance system.

The board also approved Donald Capponcelli as manager of the Newman Center, replacing Ronald Buffum.

Cable TV near approval

By EILEEN CUSHING
Collegian Staff

With nearly two years of exhaustive negotiations and hard work behind them, Pioneer Valley Cablevision and the Center for Community Access Television (CCATV) seem to be nearing their goal for license approval with the Amherst Board of Selectmen.

Beginning in February 1975 as an ad hoc committee on public access, the group lobbied for a Center to house a public access channel free from restraints by town government and the existing cable operator, Pioneer Valley Cablevision. As proposed by the committee, the center would be partly funded by the cable company and partly self-supporting.

According to a CCATV publication, the purpose of the Center was to provide "for any person or group in the community to use the medium of television to communicate with and share information directly and actively with others." With growing support for the proposal in evidence, a group of about thirty people formed a group called The Center for Community Access Television.

An application for incorporation was filed and by the fall of 1975, CCATV was fairly organized with ambitious plans for a newsletter, an official logo and various appearances to demonstrate the usefulness of video equipment and information.

With small grants from local organizations, CCATV was able to set up makeshift offices consisting of an answering service and an Amherst post office box.

Following negotiations concerning the formation of a one camera facility, the first public access programming reached local homes in late fall of '75. Through an agreement with Amherst Junior High School, CCATV was able to cablecast several programs over cable channel eight. Attempts were made to cablecast at least one program every Wednesday night at 8 p.m.

By the Spring of 1976, an access center called the Student Video Project was set up on this campus. David Skillicorn, a UMass student, took over this project and Blue Carreker was elected to take his place as CCATV coordinator.

With new energy and help from students and other local people a week of new programming was aired over cable channel eight.

A basic problem facing CCATV was money. Much of the funding for the CCATV projects was coming from the pockets of the CCATV members. However, a small grant and a larger one from the Mass. Council on the Humanities sustained CCATV for as series of television panel discussions in the fall.

Throughout this time, negotiations between pioneer and the town were continuing. The town had asked Pioneer to come up with a proposal for public access facilities, and had considered the possibility of the junior high school being involved with both educational and public access operations.

Finally, in the early summer, CCATV began to prepare a proposal for a draft license. Since that time, the proposal had appeared before the Amherst Board of Selectmen where it is now nearing its final stages of negotiation.

According to Blue Carraker, coordinator of CCATV, the role of CCATV now is "to educate the town about public access. We are responsible for insuring that when the license is finally signed, that it includes sufficient provisions for a public access center and channel."

Last night's meeting brings CCATV and Pioneer Valley Cablevision one step closer to a final agreement and signing of the license that could make the local center a reality.

Because of several differences still to be worked out between the men two groups, the Board of Selectmen have taken the proposal under advisement temporarily. Mary Eddy, a board member, cited a positive attitude among the board and a general eagerness to approve the license.

Careker notes that once the license is approved, CCATV will be looking for help from all sections of the Amherst community, and particularly UMass. She said, "We'll be needing a lot of help from anyone willing to work in setting up the center, working with the equipment and making the project go."

People who are interested in working with CCATV in any capacity may get further information by contacting Blue Carreker, coordinator of CCATV.

Easyrider locates lifts for UM riders

By MICHAEL SIMONS
Collegian Staff

Easyrider, the computerized phone-in, ride referral service continues to match rides and riders this semester.

Located in room 404 of the Student Union Building, Easyrider was created by Charlotte J. Allen and Mark Zimmerman last semester to provide a reliable way for riders and drivers to get together.

This service is free to the entire Five College community by simply dialing 545-0895 and leaving a name, phone number and address along with the zip-code of the destination and date of departure.

The computer does the rest of the work, matching people as closely as possible if the exact distination can't be met.

Allen said that Easyrider can be used both going from and come to Amherst.

While Easyrider is working, it is catching on slowly, according to Allen, who said that many students still use the rideboard located in the Student Union.

In order to help these students, members of the Easyriders staff have to periodically read the rideboard and copy down information to fee into it's computer.

Allen said she hopes that this problem will be corrected as the result of an extensive publicity campaign extolling Easyriders options and virtues.

Easyrider's phone lines are open Monday-3-10 p.m., Tuesday and Wednesday 2-10 p.m., Thursday 12-10 p.m., Friday 11:30-6 p.m. and weekends 12-5 p.m.

Possible damage to shellfish harvesting in Cape Cod town due to oil spill

BUZZARDS BAY, Mass. [UPI] — Shellfish harvesting in this Cape Cod town could be seriously damaged for years due to an oil spill caused this weekend by an ice torn barge, a Massachusetts water pollution official said yesterday.

Sabin Lord, of the Division of Water Pollution Control, made the comment at a Boston news conference as the Coast Guard set of explosives to burn some of the estimated 100,000 gallons dumped off Buzzards Bay by the barge.

Asked if the current spill might prove as serious as a 1969 spill in nearby West Falmouth which virtually destroyed some shellfish areas, Lord said, "The potential is there, but we won't know for sure for some time."

Lord said 700,000 gallons were spilled from the barge Florida in the 1969 incident and added, "some harvesting areas have never recovered."

Explosives were flown to Buzzards Bay by helicopters. Coast Guard Capt. Lynn Hein of the North Atlantic Oil Strike Force said the devices were detonated in a pool of oil off Cleveland Ledge shortly before 4 p.m.

Hein said there was no immediate indication how much of the No. 2 heating oil would burn off.

Hein said helicopter inspection of the area yesterday revealed several pools of oil in addition to the one at Cleveland Ledge where the barge was damaged.

Three firms have been called in to assist in the clean up, he added. He said much of the oil is locked under thick ice and cannot be cleaned up at this time.

Jack Conlon of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency said members of his staff, along with state officials, are attempting to locate areas where oil is trapped and predict where it will flow.

"If we can get this information, then we will know where to direct the cleanup operation to protect the shellfish areas," he said. "But we should realize this is an art; it is really very experimental."

In addition, Conlon said nine sampling stations have been set up in the Buzzards Bay area to test shellfish and monitor for pollution.

The 350-foot barge, en route from Providence, R.I. to Portland, Maine, with 3.1 million gallons of home heating fuel, became locked between thick, jagged ice floes near the entrance of the canal. Six of the barge's 12 compartments were ripped open by the ice.

The crushing force of the moving ice pushed the barge within 100 yards of Wings Neck, an exclusive shoreline resort area. An empty barge, Frederick Bouchard No. 85, was brought to the disabled vessel and offloading operations began.

State processes energy plan to reduce consumption by 1980

BOSTON [AP] — Here is a summary of the state's proposed energy conservation plan designed to achieve a 5 per cent reduction in energy consumption by 1980:

—Establish energy conservation extension service teams to give technical advice on reducing energy use in large buildings and businesses. At least two teams would be deployed, one for eastern Massachusetts and the other for the western part of the state.

—Have the State Building Code Commission revamp the state code by Jan. 1, 1978 to make it more energy-efficient. Provide technical advice to builders and local inspectors on how to satisfy the new code provisions on energy.

—Conduct studies to determine whether right turns on red lights should be allowed at about 500 of the state's 3,100 intersections with traffic lights.

—Have the Department of Community Affairs use federal funds to investigate how to modify public housing projects to conserve energy.

—Have the State Building Code Commission develop mandatory lighting standards for public buildings to reduce electricity costs. This step is mandated by federal legislation.

Congressional leaders vow to get Carter's natural gas bill enacted

WASHINGTON [AP] — Congressional sponsors of President Carter's emergency natural gas bill tried yesterday to fend off major attempts in both the House and Senate to modify the legislation.

Despite numerous proposed amendments facing the measure, congressional leaders vowed to try to get the legislation enacted, with as few changes as possible, by the end of the week.

A Senate vote was expected on the bill late yesterday or sometime today. In the House, floor action was scheduled for Tuesday.

However, despite warnings from Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd that such efforts could kill the bill and aggravate the cold-spawned gas crisis, the Senate became embroiled in attempts to broaden the legislation.

It rejected, 58 to 31, an amendment by Sen. James Abourezk, D-S.D., that would have expanded the President's power to allocate natural gas beyond what he is seeking.

Attempts to change the legislation were also made before the House Commerce Committee.

Carter is seeking authority to allocate gas among interstate pipelines to get it to the areas that need it the most. His bill also would allow the pipelines to buy gas at unregulated prices through Aug. 1.

Abourezk also sought to allow the President to order gas moved from intrastate pipelines systems to the rest of the nation. Gas in these intrastate lines — found exclusively in gas-producing states — currently is not subject to federal regulation and would not be touched by Carter's bill.

But Abourezk claimed that there is adequate gas in intrastate pipelines to meet the current crisis and "the gas should be taken from those that have it" and diverted to areas that need it the most.

His proposal was attacked by senators from gas-producing states, who said it would amount to a federal raid on gas reserves and would produce more federal control on the industry when less is needed.

Some senators from producing states threatened to try to amend the bill to provide for long-range decontrol of natural gas prices.

Byrd, D-W.Va., said the result of trying to add major amendments to the bill "can be no bill at all."

He said he feels Americans want Congress promptly to give Carter the authority he seeks to deal with the crisis.

The House Commerce Committee rejected, 29 to 7, a proposal by Rep. Clarence Brown, R-Ohio, to allow the President to order gas diverted to reopen some plants where many workers have been laid off. The White House bill would only allow President to allocate gas to protect top priority users, such as residences and hospitals, from gas cutoffs.

Carter urges Cabinet to travel more economically than Kissinger

WASHINGTON [UPI] — President Carter, sharpening his austerity drive, told his Cabinet yesterday to travel more economically and with fewer frills than did Henry Kissinger and other past administration officials.

Carter said "there's a natural tendency to accept" such emoluments as first-class accommodations on airlines, limousines at home and armored cars abroad, and special telephone lines.

"I have a natural tendency to accept them," he said. "But I want to cut back on that drastically."

The President met with his Cabinet to continue consultations on the energy crisis and his economic package, which Carter formally outlined to Congress in a special message later in the day.

The economic message merely spelled out what already has been outlined at news conferences and in Capitol Hill hearings, except that the President did say he "will soon announce a substantial strengthening of the Council on Wage and Price Stability" to promote voluntary avoidance of inflationary activities.

Other developments at the Cabinet meeting, as reported by Deputy Press Secretary Rex Granum:

— HEW Secretary Joseph Califano said he had written 50 governors, 50 mayors and 150 representatives of public service groups for ideas on the welfare reform study Carter has promised.

— Carter urged that more women be placed in responsible positions, expressing dismay that in 200 years, no woman has been appointed a U.S. attorney.

— U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young, attending the session before leaving for Africa Wednesday, told the group the black community feels that regional Internal Revenue Service officials "literally tried to persecute" the black leadership.

Young said he hoped that belief would be taken into consideration during the assignments of regional IRS officials. Carter did not comment.

At the start of the meeting, Carter suggested that subsequent Cabinet sessions might be opened to pool press coverage, if the members agree.

Granum devoted most of his briefing to the travel austerity directive, although he said it took up only 10 minutes of the two-hour, 25-minute meeting. He said Carter told the Cabinet to "cut out the ostentatiousness" of past administrations.

Carter said Kissinger used five planes on his overseas trips, including two to carry special armored cars, whereas Secretary of State Cyrus Vance and Vice President Walter F. Mondale, now on an overseas trip, are using only one plane and cars provided by the host nation.

Carter told the department heads his comments about use of chauffeured door-to-door service applied to their deputies.

Long glide-path to mediocrity

By BRYAN HARVEY

Although it seems hard to believe right now, a long, hot spring is near at hand. It has become a tradition at UMass that the rumour of spring brings with it the rumour of Governor Dukakis's annual crusade against the minions of public higher education, and this year is no exception.

The Governor has decreed that UMass will receive "level funding" this year, the same amount of money as appropriated last year. That last year's appropriation was pitifully lacking does not bother the Governor. Nor does the fact that the University will have to swallow the effects of a full year of inflation cause a tear to come to his eye. In fact, the Governor has added a new twist to the familiar litany of cutting and slashing. He has decided that the University, with all other state agencies, will also have to absorb the cost of the recently-negotiated pay increases for state employees.

The meaning of all this is painfully clear. Having decided that he cannot eliminate the University from the face of the Commonwealth all at once, the Governor has decided to do it by inches.

This does not bode well for students. Not only is the University's budget under renewed attack, but there are rumours of yet another tuition increase, this time coming from the legislature instead of the Board of Trustees. Fees will also be going up, as the cost-of-living increases for employees go into effect.

Now, I don't want to sound like an alarmist, but it's time we tried to think of something to do. Our effect on the whims of the legislature will certainly be less than we might wish, but we will certainly accomplish nothing if we simply stand by as spectators.

In the past, the Student Government Association has served to coordinate whatever efforts students have made to stem the tide of fiscal decay, with varying degrees of success. And with yet another SGA presidential election only weeks away, it is safe to assume that the issue, if not action, will come up again.

But this year is different from past years. The potential for damage to the University (and our degrees) is greater than in the past, and the response from students will have to be made with even greater care and energy.

But don't hold your breath. Coordinating that kind of response is an enormous task, one that we have not demonstrated any great talent for. This year, as in the past, we will probably allow ourselves to be washed along with the tide, suffering the consequences later.

Those of us who are lucky (or smart) will probably get out of here before the effects hit too hard. The rest of us will just wonder why our degrees aren't worth as much as they should be, and why there are fifty people in every class, and why the lines in Whitmore seem to be longer than ever.

We are on a long glide-path to mediocrity in public higher education in this state, and I'm not sure what we can do to arrest the decline. But if we don't think of something soon, we'd better try to get in on the exchange program to the University of Hawaii.

Out there in the REAL WORLD

By DUKE SIMONEAU

At all colleges, universities and institutes of higher edjamakation, students (especially seniors) talk anxiously of getting away from school and out into the REAL WORLD.

Having spent more bloody time than I care to think about in the hallowed halls of academia and an equal amount of time on internships and outside co-op assignments, I have learned one very important thing. Like Tolkein's land of Middle Earth, the REAL WORLD is an almost mythical place.

The REAL WORLD always seems to be somewhere you're not. City dwellers swear someday they'll "Get outta all this damn concrete into the REAL WORLD." Country people want to leave the "sticks" to get into the REAL WORLD. Surburbanites know they don't live in a real world. Living in a cookie cutter house, with a major excursion being a jaunt to a shopping mall or a "dangerous journey" into "town" for dinner and a show, they live the relatively peaceful existence of one with a frontal lobotomy.

No one knows where or what the fabled REAL WORLD is, but students always believe that's where they're going after graduation. It's not limitless optimism but quiet desperation that leads them into this vague hope. Why else are they paying thousands of dollars to play frustrating games with a massive beaurocracy designed solely to set them valiently off into the REAL WORLD prepared for "a long and satisfying career"?

All students are convinced the REAL WORLD is in their major area of study. Business majors know the REAL WORLD is commerce. Curiously enough, all businessmen "outside" complain of their "Mickey Mouse" jobs and moan for a shot in the REAL WORLD. Engineering and Education majors aren't exactly sure where the REAL WORLD is, but when they find it they'll redesign and reshape it to fit all their academic concepts. Of course journalism students know where the REAL WORLD is. That's where the vultures gather to hover over the dying sacred cow.

Where is the mythical REAL WORLD? Why not here and now? It's as real as you're ever going to get.

U.S. occupation of Puerto Rico condemned

To the Editor:

On the last day of our Bicentennial year President Gerald Ford announced that he would propose legislation making Puerto Rico the fifty-first state of the union. Ford's statement demonstrated utter contempt for the people of Puerto Rico. Puerto Rico is a Latin American country, with its own history, its own cultural identity. Puerto Rico is a Latin American country that has been occupied militarily, economically, and politically since it was invaded by the United States in 1898.

At the same time as Ford's statement is an attack on the identity of the Puerto Rican nation, it is an action which shows total disregard for the declarations and resolutions of the United Nations. The UN has repeatedly gone on record ordering the US government to do nothing to increase its political control over Puerto Rico. The UN recognizes Puerto Rico as a colony of the United States and has taken under discussion the status of Puerto Rico at its General Assembly meetings this coming August.

For Ford and now Carter to proceed with the idea of making Puerto Rico a state, holds up to international scrutiny the ways in which the U.S. State Department views resolutions of the UN that go counter to its own imperial world designs.

The attitudes of the multinational corporations that have heavily invested in Puerto Rico add to the Ford proposals. The recent discovery of oil deposits off the coastline of Puerto Rico indicate that it could become one of the leading oil producing nations of the world. If it became a state these rich oil deposits would belong to the US government and corporations to exploit as they have all the other natural and human resources of the island.

All progressive North Americans, all working people, all oppressed peoples in the US must condemn this action. If the US government can make a nation a state where will it stop?

Independence and self-determination for the Puerto Rican people needs to be our response to any government action to further subjugate Puerto Rico. Find out more about the political situation in Puerto Rico and the role we can play in building support for the Puerto Rican independence struggle Friday afternoon at 2:00 (904-908 C.C.) when Irwin Silber, Executive Editor of the Guardian newspaper and national board member of the Puerto Rican Solidarity Committee speaks on the subject "Puerto Rico and International Solidarity."

We hardly knew ye!

To the Editor:

The following is an open letter to Joseph Larson, President of AAUP, UMass Chapter.

Why, Joe? Why do you persist in your misrepresentations, your obfuscations, your over-simplifications? Last fall, we attributed such tactics to enthusiasm for your own cause and the conviction that your organization was the best choice — that way you rationalized that the ends justified the means. But you lost, Joe. Now your cause is our cause, and the cause of all faculty. Now you are attacking the very base of all that you said you believed in. Why, Joe?

Don't you know what will happen if we lose, Joe? The Administration will feel itself vindicated. President Wood will feel even more free to do as he pleases, and damn the torpedoes. Is that what you want? Is that what you have always wanted?

Why are you taking the Administration line — along with hook and sinker? You know that the MSP is a faculty organization and is not controlled by the MTA. You know that we will be responsible for what's in our contract, just as the Community College faculty are responsible for what's in theirs — not the MTA. And you know that the University's budget needs all the help it can get in the Legislature — from us, from President Wood, and the MTA.

That the MTA's lobbying record in the Legislature is not 100 per cent does not show MTA's ineffectiveness, because the facts are otherwise; it shows how very difficult dealing with the Governor and Legislature is these days. And you and the CFIF would rather leave the whole ball of wax to President Wood. Why, Joe? Because you are sure he will fight harder than we will for our raises?

Why have you not put your disappointment at losing behind you and joined the fight for a strong faculty, as have almost all other AAUP leaders? Why, Joe? Are the grapes so sour? You have failed us, Joe. No, not the MSP — you have failed the whole faculty, including the AAUP, who have been hurt by your actions. Why, Joe?

School district refuses admittance of foster child attending local school

SHEFFIELD, Mass. [UPI] — An eight-year-old boy, who was turned away by one school district because he was a foster child, began attending classes in a neighboring district yesterday.

Officials said the Southern Berkshire Regional District School Committee voted last week to immediately accept the boy, Stephen, as a third grade pupil after his foster mother agreed to pay his $1,224 tuition.

The Berkshire Hills Regional School Committee had denied Stephen admission to schools in the district where he lives in a foster home because the state has not paid the district tuition for state wards in three years.

But Southern Berkshire School Committee members said yesterday they allowed the boy to attend the Center School in Sheffield because his foster mother agreed to pay his tuition.

"The fact he's a state ward means absolutely nothing to me," Southern Berkshire School Supt. Lawrence L. Giandomenico said, "because he's not claiming an exemption from tuition.

"He's just like any other student from another district who pays the $1,224 tuition to attend our schools. We don't consider him a state ward."

The boy's foster mother, Mrs. Jane Carpenter, had asked the Berkshire Hills committee to allow her to pay Stephen's tuition in his home district. But that committee rejected her request, saying there is no precedent for allowing a district resident to pay tuition.

Officials in Southern Berkshire, which is adjacent to Berkshire Hills district, also said they had no quarrel with the state concerning state ward tuition payments because there were no state wards attending district schools.

They said Mrs. Carpenter would be asked to pay a slightly higher tuition than normal because Stephen has slight learning difficulties.

A spokesman for the state-subsidized Help for Children Office in Pittsfield said it was still considering taking legal action on behalf of Stephen.

SR-56 $109.95*

If you want an incredible slide rule calculator that's also programmable, then this is the one for you.

There're 74 preprogrammed functions and operations. And it has AOS, TI's unique algebraic operating system, the underlying reason an SR-56 is so powerful. It'll let you handle problems with as many as 9 sets of parentheses. Talk about memory. An SR-56 has 10 (11 if you count the T-registered.). And you can do arithmetic with all of them.

Chances are you'll soon discover how really easy it is to program. An SR-56 has 100 steps. Six logical decision functions. Four levels of subroutines. Decrement and skip on zero. Compare a test register with the display to make a conditional branch. And this is just the beginning.

Think about it. Can you really afford to put off getting your SR-56, now?

SR-52 $299.95*

If you want the computer-like power of a card programmable then choose this one.

Techniques like optimization, iteration, data reduction, what-if matrices, mathematical modeling, need not tie up your mind – or your time.

But learning to use it is a hassle, you say. Not true. Prerecorded programs are gathered into software libraries: Electrical Engineering. Math. Statistics. Finance. All you need do is load a mag card, press a few keys and you'll get answers that previously required a computer.

You can make your own programs just as easily. In just a couple of hours you'll begin to prove what a powerful asset you have – right at your fingertips.

And there's not a better time to get an SR-52 than right now.

Texas Instruments will rebate $10.00 of your original SR-56 purchase price when you: (1) return this completed coupon including serial number (2) along with your completed SR-56 customer information card (packed in box) and (3) a dated copy of proof of your purchase, verifying purchase between Jan. 1 and March 31, 1977.

A true story if ever I heard one

Many years ago, here at the University, there was a group of unruly, wicked boys who roamed the campus engaging in unruly and wicked (and nefarious) activities. They were loud-mouthed, aggressive, and rude. They stole candy from babies, mugged nuns, leered at pretty girls, and poked fun at food science majors. A general nuisance, they rarely went to class, and then only to disrupt the academic goings-on.

The chancellor of the school, whose name has since passed into the annals of anonymity, received many complaints about the boys and, not wanting to kick them out, he searched about the school for other, more creative, activities in which the boys could participate.

Have them try out for football squad he thought and he proposed this idea to them. Being a lot that tended toward aggression they jumped at the chance (llor) and beat him into a senseless whimpering fish.

Not one to be put off by such an apparent negative reaction he gathered the boys together and suggested that they join the Student Senate. They took much offense at this and replied that the circus life was not for them.

He urged them to join the newspaper but the boys bridled at the chancellor's suggestion. After he was bridled the boys placed a bit in his mouth and rode the chancellor around his office. Having had their fun at the chancellor's expense, and hearing no complaint from him, they branded him a fine sport, with a red hot poker (with the initials "FS" for fine sport).

"My word," said the Chancellor, "what shall I do with these boys?" He thought well into the night and finally hit upon the idea that the wicked boys might want to join a club at school. He called them in the next day and, after giving them rides for two hours, he politely suggested that maybe the boys would be interested in joining a club. There was the ski club, the hiking club, the leather club, and oh so many more clubs. But the boys explained that if they joined these clubs the temptation would be too great to use the clubs' necessary paraphernalia for weapons. They would sure as not stab a fellow skier with an errant pole, knock someone into putty with their hiking club backpack, or strangle an innocent leather buddy with a newly-fashioned belt.

The chancellor gasped at these lurid forecasts and told the lads that he had given up on them and that they were certain to come to no good end. Then the leader of the group spoke up for the first time, "Under your guidance sir, we hope to form a club of our own, however we lack a name." And then the boys marched out of his office.

Several days later the chancellor trudged to his office, as he did every morning. After an hour at his desk nature beckoned his tender bladder and he skipped to the Men's Room. He opened the door to the Men's Room, only to find, much to his horror, the wicked boys playing with themselves. He screamed "Why you...."

Hence the name of one of this school's most prominent clubs.

The UMass debaters.

Sine of the times

... Breaker one-nine, breaker one-nine, this is the Boston Fox. Come in, Rubber Duck. Do you copy? That is a roger, Foxy. What's your twenty?

There is a new language on the rise — a new cult, and unlike the cults of the sixties, this group is socially acceptable. CBers have private parties, group discussions, their own brand of music and a private way of communicating with each other, and this time nobody seems to mind.

It's the kind of people who comprise this new cult that makes them different than the radicals. It's the 'harmless' people of the road who play the CB roles, and they are not bound to change anything important in the near future. Perhaps.

However, this CB wave is not to be ignored. They are indicators that all is not right in America. We are tired of being isolated, tired of being alienated and the CB voices reach out to each other in reaction to these Future-Shock-type symptoms.

But there are drawbacks to this seemly grassroots movement. One, people are still afraid to get too close and have to hide their true identity behind 'handles' and codes. Two, CBs cost money, so only certain classes can get involved, and as usual, the lower class is left out. Three, you have to know the language, so again, it is an exclusive group. Granted the codes are easy to learn and getting past the 'green apple' stage doesn't require a degree, but the lines are drawn — CB or not CB. This doesn't seem to be a way of drawing people closer together, it could simply bring in a new separation point.

What is really nice, though, is that this cult is based on a form of communication. People do want to talk to each other, to form new communities, to expand their knowledge and grow back to an American spirit. It won't happen overnight and will need constant input from those involved in order to survive the fad-y-ness that surrounds it.

Another interesting factor of the CB trend is that evolved from the working man — the trucker. And the trucker is still the master, the image of perfection for the CB owner. The work ethic is still making itself heard in the voice of the American people. And it seems that this, too, is a rallying point for the CBer. Work is good; to keep America working you need to keep the roads working, the people working.

Though CBers are not really organized, the potential is there for active communication and dissemination of consumer-type information. While people are distrustful of the media, there is a growing closeness among themselves. They are learning that they cannot survive alone and must trust each other.

This, then, seems to be the wave of the future; a future for interclass communication and community action. CBs are just as potentially dangerous to the status quo as the subcultures of the sixties. Already they protect themselves from the 'smokeys', from the arbitrary law of the road. Who knows what their total capabilities are?

For now, the CB is simply a toy to some and a tool of the trade to others. But, it is growing in importance and we will have to watch any legislation concerning its use with care. The truckers know this and almost resent its popular use, because it will cause their private line to face the public light. But, there is always that other hand, they love the company on the long hauls. They know a portion of America is with them, and come strike time, there is another PR source.

It has been said that too much technology too fast has made us distant and detached. We are ourselves becoming fast and efficient to compete with the machines we have created. If this is true, then it is also true that this same technology will bring us closer again over a period of time. Maybe the time is now and maybe CB is the tool. We can only wait and see, wait and tune in to ourselves.

Something lacking in mental health care

"Within hours of the sentencing Robert L. Okin, state mental health commissioner, sent a telegram to (Hingham District Court Judge Alvin C.) Tamkin urging him to 'reconsider his decision' to jail (Debbie) Delaney for pulling false fire alarms, malicious mischief and assault. The telegram did not suggest where Tamkin could send Delaney."

— The Boston Globe; 1-29-77

Commissioner Okin became involved in this common district court proceeding because Debbie Delaney is a 23-year-old borderline retardate who has been sentenced to a year in the Plymouth House of Correction for her infractions of the law.

No alternative to prison was suggested to Tamkin by Okin because there is no place to put Ms. Delaney other than prison. Governor Michael S. Dukakis, Commissioner Okin and other state administrators and legislators have consistently failed to provide a suitable regulated environment for the majority of the state's mentally ill persons.

The state is in the process of building a facility in Worcester along the lines of the Bridgewater State Hospital, a maximum security hospital for men. Of course the proposed Worcester facility for women, scheduled for completion by late August, will only give women the opportunity to live the hell that is Bridgewater State.

The facility was originally scheduled to open later this month, but the state can't even construct an inferior facility according to schedule. If the state was a parent, it could be sued for criminal negligence because of its consistent failure to provide for the mentally ill, many of whom are in the state's custody.

This lack of suitable care has, in a similar sense, led nine patients at the Northampton State Hospital to sue Dukakis, Okin and other administrators in the department of mental health. The patients are lucky enough to have a number of UMass students and some Western Mass Legal Services staff people working for them as advocates, and therefore have the resources necessary to bring suit in U.S. District Court.

Though the nature of the Northampton action is broad-based and claims constitutional as well as statutory grounds, the existence of few and limited alternatives to prison, Bridgewater State or the state hospitals (already overcrowded) has been the impetus for the filing of the suit.

While there are many wrongs to be corrected within the state's hospitals for the mentally ill, the gravest problem is the lack of an adequate number of halfway houses, communal homes with supervision, and other facilities for the mentally ill that do not belong in the restrictive state hospital system which often harms as much as it helps.

A patient's right to the "least restrictive alternative" to hospitalization is barely an enforceable right given the inadequate numbers of alternatives available.

In both the Delaney case and the Northampton suit, the problem lies with the state's failures to provide for the mentally ill. Whether that failure lies with the state's economy, community resistance to the opening of halfway houses or simply a lack of legislative concern, it is not a failure that can be long sustained without a tremendous outcry from the friends and family of mentally ill persons filling the ears of the state legislators.

Hopefully the state will recognize the Northampton suit as the beginning of that outcry and respond to the suit (which it has not yet answered) in a responsible manner and willing to negotiate for the improvement of the state's care for the mentally ill.

Your Birthday

by Stella Wilder

Tuesday, February 1 — Born today, you are a kind, optimistic individual with a very strong tendency toward the kind of leadership that brooks no interference at the same time that it does the very best by those who depend upon it. You possess a fine sense of humor, which you cannot help but bring into play — even during situations that do not really call for a humorous response. Your ability to capitalize on the talents of others in such a way that those talents that you lack are not missed makes it possible for you to be taken as a general, all-around success in whatever you undertake. You are not adverse to taking credit for attainments not really yours -- though you would never put yourself forward as an achiever of goals not really gained by you and, in fact, not attainable through your particular gifts.

Although you delight in doing for others once you are asked to act in such a giving way, you do not often think of being so generous on your own. This is true in spite of the fact that you can think of myriad ways for others to contribute their time and talent to a given need. Fond of diversion, you greatly enjoy travel of any kind. Your interest in strangers, in far-away places, in new and different ways of doing things all mark you as an open-minded, open-hearted person.

You have a scientific bent, but you are at the same time drawn toward any activity that enlarges upon your knowledge of the arts.

Wednesday, February 2

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) — Persistence keeps alive those plans you thought might have to be permanently laid aside when circumstances proved forbidding.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) — It is the Pisces who offers the least resistance to a setback who will earliest overcome it. Swim with the tide.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) — Allow your entertaining personality to take over early in the day and you shouldn't want for company. Progressive action counts.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) — Seek a practical method for gaining -- and keeping -- new success with the present materials. Take a long view of things in the morning.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) — Your aptitude for finance should make it a simple matter for you to select the enterprises that will pay off best in the long run.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) — A time of stress early in the day may leave you with some reservations about striking out on your own. Take a second look at possibilities.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) — Success in the commercial world can be yours today if you are wise enough to recognize an opportunity when you see one.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) — Your natural reserve may protect you from making the mistakes others seem to be falling into these days. Be guided by natural instincts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) — Your earning ability increases today as you gain new knowledge about an old goal and method of attaining it. Listen to an expert.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) — Avoid anything that would give away the fact that you feel animosity toward another person. Try to keep a smile on your face during afternoon hours.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) — Seek to be with others today. To be alone may be to court depression. Time drags unless you have company to pass it with.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) — You may doubt the staying power of another's friendship — but you cannot doubt its appeal. Don't be persuaded by soft words.

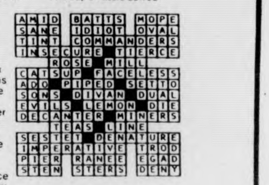
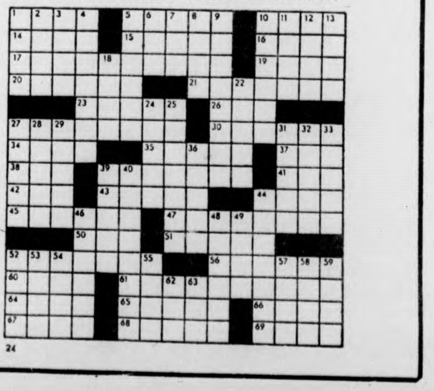
Monday's Puzzle Solved





Intersession training

Skiiers A-OK in Canada

By MIKE WITOWSKI
Collegian Staff

Intersession is the time when most students take a four-week vacation of rest and relaxation. Not so for the UMass ski teams, because when December 20th rolled around, a month of vigorous training began at Haystack Mountain and Berkshire East.

The training sessions were conducted on a Monday thru Friday basis, with the skiers getting weekends to themselves. Haystack Mountain was originally scheduled to be the training headquarters, but a lack of snow forced the festivities to Berkshire East, which has man-made white stuff. The teams have season passes to both mountains.

During the week of January 4-9, the teams traveled to Collingwood Mountain, in Quebec, Canada, for the Can-Am Collegiate Invitational. The Minutemen took a surprising victory in the downhill competition, and a strong finish of second in the overall competition out of 11 teams. The Minutewomen didn't do as well, as the best they could finish was fifth overall out of only six teams.

The men's victory in the downhill has to be the biggest story to come out of Quebec.

"We usually race a careful downhill and just finish second or third, without getting hurt," coach Bill MacConnell said. "The victory just blew my mind."

In the overall men's competition, Queens College (from Canada) was the winner with a total of 466 pts The men from Queens placed second in the downhill, second in the giant slalom and first in the slalom. This marked the first time a Canadian school won the overall since the competition was started in 1975.

Coach MacConnell didn't make the trip to Canada with the team. He stayed behind in Massachusetts, training the substitutes.

T-Bar Chatter — Assistant coach Steve Tonelli traveled with the team ... Top individual finishers for the Minutemen were: Jeff Daugherty, fourth in the downhill; Dale Maynard, fourth in the giant slalom; — Harold Smart, fourth in the slalom.

JV icemen set aim

By SUSAN FAY
Collegian Staff

The UMass junior varsity hockey team will have its hands full today when RPI comes to town for a rematch of their December 8 game in which the Minutemen lost, 6-2. Today's game will be played at 5:00 at Orr Rink.

Conditions with the team remain in a state of chaos due to lack of ice time and loss of players. The Minutemen have skated together only three times since December 15 — but one of those times happened to be an 11-2 whipping of Mt. Herman Prep last Wednesday.

Despite that bright spot, the outlook remains bleak because of the fact that the Minutemen have had only one hour of ice time in preparation for the mostly-Canadian RPI team. Coach Russ Kidd has also had to do some line-juggling because of the loss of forwards Dan Scavone and John Ryan and goalie Frank Cifrino and the addition of center Ken Richards and goalie Mike Smolens.

In their pre-intersession loss to RPI, the Minutemen had problems with two things: forward Louis Mizzati and the physical play of the RPI team. Muzzati scored four of the six RPI goals and the game had 18 penalties.

"If history repeats, this one will be penalty-filled as RPI is a very physical and chippy team," Kidd said. "They also manage to take our players with them to the box."

Look for reserve goalie Paul McCann to start tomorrow (he played against RPI in December), with Tim Haggarty possibly taking over. The top line for the Minutemen should be centered by Johnny Johnson with Bob Gould (who had a hat trick in the Mt. Herman game), on the left and Doug Aylward on the right.

Gymwomen look for depth ; take to road for first tri-meet

By LAURA BASSETT
Collegian Staff

One of the advantages of being a top gymnastics power is there is an opportunity to experiment with different gymnasts to build depth in the team. UMass women's gymnastics coach Virginia Evans is in that situation when the gymwomen travel to Salem State to meet the hosts and Bridgewater in a tri-meet today.

Evans will have a chance to look at some gymnasts that aren't usually all-around performers. This year, a new stipulation says that teams competing at the nationals must have four gymnasts competing in the all-around competition. Thus added depth is important.

"This is one opportunity where we can look at some of the other gymnasts and develop depth in our all-around positions," Evans said.

Junior Keely O'Rourke and sophomore Cheryl Morrier will be competing in the all-around positions for the Minutewomen. Both O'Rourke and Morrier competed last year as all-around performers in some of the meets. O'Rourke competed last Saturday in the victory over Westchester on the bars and Morrier saw action on the beam.

Sophomore Jean Anderson will compete on the floor, vault, and work in the bars. Freshwoman Barbara Burmeister will also compete in three events; balance beam, floor, and vault. Burmeister had problems last year with minor injuries and Evans expects that she will perform strongly for the team this season.

Sophomore Julie Myers will anchor the floor exercise squad after "doing a good job" in the Westchester meet, according to Evans.

Two freshwomen, Laurie Knapp and Martha Lestz, will compete for the first time this season. Lestz has just joined the team and will work bars while Knapp will perform on the balance beam.

"I don't expect a difficult meet," said Evans confidently. "We're not going six deep in all of the events but we still should come through with decent scores."

The UMass women's basketball team will be shooting for its sixth straight win tonight when it travels to Northeastern for a 7:30 game.

The 7-2 Minutewomen are flying high after breaking Providence College's nine-game win streak Saturday night with an authoritative 28-point drubbing.

Despite the big win, UMass coach Mary Ann Ozdarski still sees some room for improvement in her team.

"We have to work on our trap press defensively, and passing the ball quicker on offense," she said.

Ozdarski added that she wants her quintet to move to the hoop better for offensive rebounds.

UMass' opponent tonight, Northeastern, is playing off-and-on basketball. The Huskies are 4-3 on the year, including a loss to Providence.

Northeastern is coached by Jeanne Rowlands, who was the manager of the 1976 United States silver medal winning Olympic women's basketball team.

But unlike many of its foes so far this year, the Minutewomen will not be at a height disadvantage tonight.

Senior captain and leading scorer Joanne Fitts, a 5'11" center is the Huskies' tallest player.

Fitts' 14 points per game average is followed by two starters who average eight points per outing. Sue Paylor, a 5'8" forward, and Beth Peterson, a 5'7" frontcourter, are Northeastern's other leading point getters.

The Minutewomen defeated the Huskies twice last season, 81-55 in their first meeting, and 74-64 in the semifinals of the state tournament.

Since the Huskies appear to be less than formidable foes, (at least not on a par with Providence) could UMass be looking ahead of this game to its contest at Springfield on Thursday?

"No, we're still taking this season one game at a time," Ozdarski said. "We're not looking past them to either Springfield or Brown (UMass' opponent on Saturday)."

An added incentive for the Minutewomen tonight is the fact that they are now just two games shy of tying the all-time UMass women's basketball record for consecutive wins. Seven is the magic number, which set last season when UMass went on a tear in the middle of the season.

Everyone is healthy for tonight's game, with one exception. Ozdarski is sporting a sling on her left arm after dislocating her shoulder Sunday afternoon.

"Everyone's healthy. The coach is just incapacitated," she laughed.

Rusty gymmen face Dartmouth after long intersession layoff

By NICK KOTSOPOULOS
Collegian Staff

After a 51-day layoff from scheduled competition, the UMass men's gymnastics team returns to action this afternoon when the Minutemen travel to Hanover, N.H. to meet their Dartmouth College counterparts in a 4:00 p.m. match.

The Minutemen, currently 2-2 under first-year coach Dick Swetman, competed last on Dec. 11 when they were beaten by Penn St. Now the UMass gymnasts face the tough task that every winter athletic team on this campus has to deal with every year and that is getting back into the swing of things following the intersession break.

"It's tough having to get everybody back into top shape," Swetman said, "especially following a five week layoff."

However, regardless of the long layoff, Swetman doesn't forsee his Minutemen gymnasts running into any great difficulties against Dartmouth.

"Dartmouth just isn't that good a gymnastics team," Swetman pointed out. "You might say that this will be our warm-up for the meeting we have against a very tough Syracuse team this Saturday afternoon."

Swetman will not have his entire squad suited up for Dartmouth today. John Forshay is out of the lineup with a knee injury and Swetman is not exactly sure how long he will be out of action. Also, all-around performer Steve Marks will not be in today's meet because Swetman has decided to keep him out of the meet.

"What concerns me the most," Swetman said, "is that we've been really working hard in certain aspects of our routines, but we have also been neglecting other aspects of it. It's been tough though, we've really been working hard."

Dave Kulakoff, the top sidehorse performer for the Minutemen, will definitely see action today after recovering from a minor wrist injury.

"We should get another strong performance from Dave," Swetman said. Kulakoff was the Farmingdale Open side horse champion in a December meet.

As of now Swetman is pleased with the performances of co-captain Angelo Scuderi, Frank Cohen and Steve Nunno.

"Angelo is probably our most consistent performer," Swetman said "and Cohen and Nunno have really been improving from the first semester."

Swetman also announced yesterday that tickets are now on sale in the UMass ticket office in Boyden for the double dual meet between UMass and Springfield College to be held in the Springfield Civic Center on Feb. 26.

UM hoopwomen coming on strong

I admit it. I'm hooked.

This past week did it. A week ago today, I sat and watched a group of 12 athletes nip one of the best women's basketball teams in the East.

Thursday, the same contingent set a record for most points scored in a single game in UMass women's hoop history.

Saturday night clinched it. The same people made mincemeat out of a heretofore undefeated and supposedly worthy opponent.

If you haven't gathered by now what team I'm referring to, shame on you. It is, of course, the UMass women's basketball team.

The Minutewomen to date simply sport the best record of any UMass winter sports team, 7-2. Their two losses came by a grand total of just seven points.

A year ago at this time, UMass was 4-3. So the question naturally arises: What has made the difference?

I don't really know where to start.

To begin with, a new coaching philosophy has been instituted this year. First-year mentor Mary Ann Ozdarski has taken a cue from the Dean Smith-Al Attles school of basketball coaching. She likes to use her entire squad as much as possible.

Against Worcester State last Thursday, Ozdarski admitted that her starting five wasn't doing the job. So out they went, and in came five other players en masse. And it worked.

Last season, a nucleus of eight players were bound to see action in a game. But everybody and anybody plays this year. The depth factor has made a big difference. It has aided the fast-break running game which Ozdarski likes to use, and it has also worn the opposition down in more than a few cases.

So that's one reason for the success. Now for a couple of others.

The Minutewomen recruited four freshman last season, and they have all added so much to the team. Sue Peters, a backcourt standout, has potential coming right out of her ears. The 1,000 point high school scorer has been leading the Minutewomen in point-getting and is also among the top rebounders on the team.

Sue Henry, another frosh starter, has taken over the role of team quarterback, and has done a fine job running the offense. Her soft outside shot has served notice that she is also a fine outside shooter.

Freshman Maura Supinski is the essence of a power forward. Her aggressive rebounding and defensive work has been a big asset to a team with a height problem.

Julie McHugh, the fourth rookie, came off the bench in a game over intersession against St. John's to help spark a win. It's quite a sight when the 5'3" guard sneaks in to pluck down a rebound.

But what of the veterans? Ah, now that's a sweet topic.

Lu-Ann Fletcher, a three-year starter at center, has been playing perhaps the most intense basketball of her life. It's no easy task guarding people three to four inches taller than yourself, but Fletcher has taken up the job and done herself proud. Her scoring has also been coming around of late.

Nancy O'Neil, the all-time leading UMass women's basketball scorer, is a stabilizing influence on the relatively young team. Her scoring this season has slackened off somewhat, but her rebounding and basketball knowledge has proven to be a great asset.

Chris Basile, the other starting forward, has been pressed for her job by Supinski but is another cool head for the Minutewomen. A four-year starter, she knows the ins-and-outs of the UMass system.

And what would any team have the luxury of not starting a player of the caliber of Jo Balletta? The forward-guard has been coming off the bench this year as the sixth-player, and has picked the team up in several occasions.

With the combination of youth and veterans, the 'shuttle system' which allows all players to see action, the spirit which has been instilled in the team, and its hustle and talent, it appears the UMass women's basketball team can really go places this year.

The Easterns are slated for UConn the second week of March. And the nationals? Well, we'll cross that bridge when we come to it.

Thermostats lowered to 65 degrees

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

Students, faculty and staff at UMass may soon be keeping their coats on while at classes or work after an order from the governor yesterday to lower temperatures in all state buildings to 65 degrees.

The order from Gov. Michael S. Dukakis came as Massachusetts begins a new round of energy conservation measures in response to continued frigid temperatures in the eastern part of the country, according to Associated Press.

At UMass, thermostats have been kept at 68 degrees, and were not lowered voluntarily last week despite President Jimmy Carter's request that Americans do so to conserve energy.

But unlike some parts of the country suffering from a shortage of natural gas, UMass is run 80 per cent on coal and has plenty of it.

Despite the fact that UMass has used 20 per cent more fuel than average so far this winter, the Physical Plant anticipates "no problem" with supplies of coal and expects to have enough coal to last to the end of the year with about 18,000 tons left over.

UMass, on the average, burns approximately 35,000 tons of coal a year.

Meanwhile, temperatures are expected to remain in the single digits through tomorrow.

Jack Littlefield, director of Planning at UMass, said yesterday he had not yet received the orders from the governor, but said he and Physical Plant personnel and technicians would "get to it as rapidly as possibly and study the possible consequences that such a lowering of the thermostats might have."

Littlefield is temporarily responsible for the Physical Plant and its operations until a new vice-chancellor for Administration and Finance, normally responsible, is appointed.

Littlefield said thermostats at UMass have been set at 68 degrees during the winter since the fall of 1973, the time of the original oil energy crisis.

Littlefield said UMass has been on an "energy conservation mode" since the fall of 1973 in response to that energy crisis.

UMass at that time adopted five policies which since then have helped save an estimated 10 to 15 per cent in fuel use, Littlefield said. These policies are:

—reduce thermostat settings in winter from 72 to 68 degrees;

—increase them in summer from 72 to 76 degrees to have less cooling from air conditioning;

—employ stringent heating conditions and air handling circulation setbacks in places of limited activity; —reduce the use of lighting except where safety is involved; and —reduce thermostat settings and the use of air handling systems at night and on weekend.

Dukakis made the announcement about the lowered temperature settings at his weekly cabinet meeting.

"The state's heating bill, just like that of every home owner in the state, is soaring despite our best efforts at conservation," he said.

No state low temps set in January

[AP] — This winter has been colder and crueler than most New Englanders can ever remember yet there were no temperature records broken in either Massachusetts or Rhode Island for the month of January.

The temperature in Boston averaged 23.3 degrees, 5.9 degrees below normal, making it the lowest since 1970. In Providence, R.I., the average temperature was 20.9 degrees, or 7.5 degrees below normal.

It was the second coldest January in Providence since records were established by the National Weather Service in 1905. January in Boston, while severe, was only the 12th coldest in 107 years of record-keeping.

Elsewhere, below-freezing temperatures in the Midwest and East kept fuel-starved factories closed on Tuesday and prompted warnings of multibillion dollar increases in heating and food bills.

A state of emergency was declared in hard-hit Buffalo, N.Y., after fresh snow overnight and an Army engineering battalion from Ft. Bragg, N.C., was ordered to fly into the city to help clear streets.

Mayor Stanley Makowski declared the state of emergency Tuesday morning after another blizzard whipped through the area, packing winds of more than 40 miles an hour.

All but emergency vehicles were banned from the city and violaters were ordered arrested. Police officers were stopping vehicles on main roads leading into the city.

Police also had been having their problems with looters, who had been striking abandoned cars and stores.

"This storm covered the entire spectrum of human response," said Buffalo police commissioner Thomas Blair. "It brought out the best and the worst in people."

Though Makowski declared a state of emergency in his blizzard-ravaged city it didn't matter for a large number of area residents.

"We're stuck in the house anyway," said Mrs. Thomas Gutteridge of suburban Amherst, N.Y. "My husband has been stranded in Albany and there's no moving. We can get out our door, but we can't get down the street."

Mrs. Gutteridge said a house across the street "was covered up

Dancers collaborate in Bowker concert

By LEILA BRUNO
Collegian Staff

A dance concert produced, directed, and choreographed solely by UMass students will be presented on this Thursday and Friday nights at 8:00 in Bowker Auditorium.

Dance majors, concert dancers, and the University Dancers are participating and collaborating their talents and enthusiasm in producing the program.

Student directors Amy Swanson and Virginia Gaunt have been busy since the early fall in preparation.

A total of 12 numbers will be presented reflecting the students' own interpretations of their acquired dance training and their artistic capabilities.

Included in the pieces are the elements of mime, comedy, and drama, applied to the varied techniques of modern, ballet, and jazz.

Several students actually choreographed dances reflecting their personal impressions. The experience that an Outreach internship in New York City had concerns one dancer's self-concept and lifestyle, and will be the basis for a dance.

Most of the student dancers have had extensive past training, here in the UMass Dance Department as well as through technique acquired in earlier years.

Besides technical training the majority of the choreographers have had courses in composition, notation, and dance history. This provides a rather broad perspective and foundation upon which to create and perform.

In addition several seniors including Swanson, Ellen Inkellis, and Michelle Taylor have had professional training in New York through the Outreach Program, which included classes at the Martha Graham, Merce Cunningham, and Alvin Ailey studios.

Working closely with the student dancers and choreographers are the members of the technical crew headed by Susan Van Dyke, with lighting by Jean Cohen, stage manager Margaret Chase, and sound technician Debra Waldren.

The crew, along with several other students who generously volunteered their time, has worked faithfully with the dancers to enhance each individual number and reach its greatest artistic potential through the lighting and sound effects.

Debbie Schafer

The dancers and choreographers have been rehearsing together regularly since mid-October, having been selected through several auditions.

Costume and poster design, ticket sales, and ushering along with the many other complexities of a dance concert have all been handled by the students under the direction of Swanson and Gaunt.

The concert itself is a real accomplishment reflecting the student potential for working effectively as a group in producing an entire dance concert.

From performing on-stage to setting the lights and laying down the floor, everyone involved has maintained an unselfish and good-natured attitude.

The concert should provide both an entertaining evening as well as an opportunity to see the creative personalities of the students as communicated through the dance.

Tickets are on sale now in N.O.P.E. Building (545-2323), and on Wednesday and Thursday they will be sold on the Campus Center Concourse, as well as at the door of Bowker — before each performance.

Theatre offerings varied

By JAMES F.B. SAWYER
Collegian Staff

According to recent polls, attendance at theatres offering live stage performances is steadily rising. Witness the growing numbers of small theatres in the Pioneer Valley alone.

The University Ensemble Theatre has established a reputation among companies in the area as extremely good, non-professional theatre. Performing in the Rand Theatre of the Fine Arts Center, student casts produce well-known, as well as lesser known plays. This semester's offerings include the world premiere of an untitled play by playwright Michael Melton. Call 545-3511 for tickets.

The UMass Music Theatre Guild produces student-run, student-performed musicals in the Bowker Auditorium of Stockbridge Hall. Through auditions, the Guild utilizes talent from anywhere in the Five-College area. Call 545-0783 for tickets.

The Roister Doisters, a great dramatic tradition among college campuses, produces any type of theatre from the one act play to full-length performances, as well as sponsoring visiting theatre. Call 545-0783 for tickets.

Off-campus, the selection is even more varied.

Beginning with Amherst College, the Kirby Memorial Theatre houses student-run as well as outside productions. Also utilizing facilities in the Fairweather Theatre on campus, departmental and outside theatre come to the student audience. Call 542-2277 for tickets.

At Smith College, Theatrre 14 and the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre are the homes of many student-run productions of lesser-known plays and playwrights. Call 584-2700 for tickets.

And this brings us to off-campus theatre.

StageWest is the only resident, professional theatre in the state. On the Eastern States Exposition Grounds in West Springfield, StageWest furnishes theatregoers with professional productions of the works of world-famous playwrights. With guest stars and guest directors, an attempt is made to provide changing perspectives in theatre appreciation among audiences. Exposure to new writers as well as acknowledged veterans is provided by StageWest's variety of play selection. Call 736-7092 for ticket information.

Also off-campus is Northampton's City Studio Theatre located at 25 Main St. With a set company and public auditions working together, and with visiting troupes, City Studio offers a glimpse of the more avante-garde in theatre. Situated above Fitzwilly's, CST provides for a small audience and an informal atmosphere. Unlike StageWest, CST is not professional theatre per se. Nor is it totally amateur theatre. Call 584-3978 for tickets.

UMass police issue plea: return Student Union bear

By TERESA M. HANAFIN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Department of Public Safety yesterday issued a renewed plea to the UMass community for the return of the Student Union bear.

The bear statue was stolen from its perch above the door of the Student Union Building last November, and police say neither hide nor hair of the statue has been seen since.

"We have no idea where the thing is," said Saul L. Chafin, assistant director of the department.

Chafin said the police are not interested in prosecution, only in the return of the bear. He said all efforts to locate the statue thus far have been unsuccessful, including a search of Pierpont dormitory in Southwest last semester.

The wood carving was a gift to the UMass Student Union from the Student Union of Hokkaido University in Japan.

The two universities have had a special relationship ever since William S. Clarke, former president of UMass, established Sapporo Agricultural College in 1876, later to become Hokkaido University.

The statue was presented to UMass students from Hokkaido University students in 1956, in commemoration of the 80th anniversary of the founding of the Japanese school.

Gilbert E. Mottla, director of the Center for International Agricultural Studies here, described the statue as a dark brown, three-foot high wood carving. He said the statue is "quite heavy," and would have had to have been removed by at least two persons.

"The value of the statue is inestimible," Mottla said yesterday. "Not only was it hand-carved, but it was custom-made for the students at UMass. You couldn't put a price on that."

Brown, Gethers discuss strategy

By M. B. ALLEN
Collegian Staff

The ongoing legal battle of Earl Brown and Craemen Gethers, two UMass students who claim they were falsely convicted of armed robbery, takes a new twist this week.

A strategy session concerning the cases is planned for Thursday evening at the Massachusetts Correctional Institute in Norfolk, where Gethers is being held, and a hearing aimed at a new trial for Brown is scheduled for Friday morning in Northampton.

Gethers and Brown were accused of holding up the McDonald's Restaurant on Route 9 in Hadley on August 7, 1974. Both men were convicted of armed robbery. Brown is serving three to five years at the Hampshire County House of Corrections, and is currently attending UMass during the day on a study release program. Gethers is serving eight to 12 years at the Norfolk prison.

Both men have claimed innocence. Brown's defense maintains he was falsely identified from photos of another man, also named Earl Brown, by a witness from the scene of the crime. Gethers has claimed that he has witnesses that were with him at the time the McDonald's incident occurred.

Local media people, UMass administrators, UMass black organizations' representatives, and local black leaders have been invited to attend the strategy meeting at Norfolk. The purpose of the meeting will be to "get commitments" from people who have offered support to the two men, and to gain additional support, according to Brown.

Brown said the meeting will be primarily concerned with communicating news of the case to the university and the community, obtaining funds for defense and publicity, and making the media aware of his and Gethers' court battle.

At Brown's hearing set for Friday at 9:30 a.m., a motion for a new trial will be made. Appearances by three witnesses who testified in the original trial are expected to be present, and the issues of the false photo identification will be brought up.

Brown's current lawyer, David Rosenberg, will also try to show that Brown's lawyer during the original trial was ineffective counsel, which would be grounds for a new trial. If the new trial is granted, Brown will automatically be eligible for bail, which he was denied at a bail hearing last December.

Buses will be leaving from the New Africa House and the horseshoe behind Hampden Dining Commons in Southwest at 8:45 Friday morning. Brown stressed that it is important for supporters to attend the trial.

Further information about the cases can be obtained by contacting the Black Mass Communications Project (545-2425), the Student Organizing Project (545-2415), or the New Africa House Cultural Center (545-0794).

16.5 per cent unemployed

Many recent graduates idle

By KEVIN J. CLAFFEY
Collegian Staff

One of every six 1976 UMass graduates is neither employed nor attending graduate school.

The Student Affairs Research and Evaluation Office (SAREO) sent out 4,800 questionnaires and 1,128 "usable responses" were returned.

The survey found that 186 graduates or 16.5 per cent were unemployed, 53 per cent were employed and the remaining 30.5 per cent were either enrollled in graduate school or expected to be.

Massachusetts has 62 per cent of the graduates working within its boundaries and is followed by New York at six per cent and Connecticut at four per cent.

Sixty-four per cent of those who received Bachelor of Business Administration (BBA) degrees from UMass last year reported being employed while 50 per cent of those with a Bachelor of Arts degree or a Bachelor of Science degree reported employment.

Eighty-eight per cent of the graduates with a BBA found jobs in business or industry, while six per cent of the BBA graduates were employed in jobs in education.

Forty-three per cent of those receiving Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science degrees were also employed in jobs in business and industry. Sixteen per cent said they were employed in the education field.

Thirty-eight per cent of those who graduated with Masters of Science degrees are also employed in business and industry jobs. Twenty-two per cent are in jobs related to education.

Forty-six per cent of the Masters of Arts graduates are employed in jobs related to education.

Business and Industry were the largest employers of the total number of 1976 graduates. They employed nearly 42 per cent of the entire sampling. Education employed 24 per cent of the entire sampling and the federal government six per cent. Thirteen per cent said their jobs were in the "unclassifiable" category.

GRADUATE SCHOOLS

Of the 30.5 per cent who were accepted to graduate schools, 37,3 per cent were in the Arts and Sciences schools, followed by 13 per cent in Business schools.

Thirty per cent of those enrolled in graduate schools had received an assistantship, 23 per cent had received loans, 11 per cent were awarded grants and 10 per cent received fellowships.

Thirty-eight per cent of those were awarded annual stipends between $3000-$4000 for their assistantships. Only seven per cent were given an annual stipend in excess of $6,000.

Twenty-four per cent of those awarded fellowships were given annual grants of between $3,000 and $4,000. Nineteen per cent were given fellowships in excess of $6,000.

SALARIES

Twenty-eight per cent of the employed 1976 graduates are earning between $8,501 and $10,000 and 26 per cent are receiving salaries in excess of $12,000.

"As would be expected, respondents receiving degrees beyond the Bachelor's level tend to be distributed among the middle and upper income levels, whereas those receiving the Bachelor's degree tend to be distributed among the lower levels," reads the report.

Not all graduates were able to find jobs in their fields and some had to diversify and accept jobs which had little or nothing to do with their educational training: a Marketing graduate has found employment as a golf professional making almost $35,000 a year; a Psychology major is now working as a writer making nearly $13,000 per year; a Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration major is working as a forklift operator making $13,000 and a Journalistic Studies major is now working as a bank teller making between $5,500 and $6,000.

Students' religious beliefs stem from diverse reasons

Nikki Aronson's survey of students' involvement with campus religious groups will continue in tomorrow's Collegian.

By NIKKI ARONSON
Collegian Staff

Ask your neighbor, your best friend, or a member of your own family; the answer is all too predictable, "When was the last time I went to church? It's been so long I can't remember.

People today are hesitant to speculate as to their last attendance of a religious service. Do students pray anymore? Who goes to church on campus?

There are more than a dozen Recognized Student Organizations office funded religious organizations on Campus. A majority of the campus population has indicated a spiritual affiliation with one of these groups.

Major religions such as Christianity and Judaism have many students listed among their active members.

Over the years an increasing number of students have become disillusioned with organized religion. Many foundations offer social and cultural activities to attract the interest of students.

The United Christian Foundation (UCF) sponsors a "Theological Brown Bag" each Friday afternoon in room 422 of the Student Union. According to Steering Committee Member Ted Newcomb, students are "invited to come on in no matter what their religious affiliation to discuss issues relevant to their lives."

UCF has initiated the policy that "lets students pursue what they wish to pursue on their own." Although Communion is offered Tuesday evenings, UCF has found a greater response to their "House Church." Between 12 and 15 persons attend religious services at a "House Church" member's home. In addition to a group supper, members participate in support discussions, and scripture readings.

Newcomb numbered active membership at about "30-35" persons, but campuswide effect of UCF's efforts are "impossible to estimate because we do an awful lot of counseling."

After surveying Christian residents of Puffton village Newcombe found that rather than proclaiming atheistic or agnostic religious stances, students were expressing the views, "Yes I feel religious, and I believe I am religious but I worship on my own because a lot of churches don't meet my needs."

Newcomb feels respective churches will take dissaffected student feelings into consideration, and remodel traditional church roles to better fit the needs of the student body.

"Students need more than just faith to provide hope," Newcomb said. "Seniors who haven't been able to get a job ... feel shattered," said Newcomb.

He felt that when seniors realized "a diploma is not going to get them a job, and when feelings are low, religious committment goes up."

Trustees to vote on grad list

By MARY BROWN
Collegian Staff

The UMass Board of Trustees today are expected to approve a list of 1246 degree candidates and one certificate candidate for February graduation at a meeting at the Boston campus.

The Committee on Faculty and Educational Policy will convene 15 minutes before the full board meets to formally approve a list of those who will graduate this month.

The board is also expected to take action on a proposal concerning how the Fair Information Practices Act should be implemented within the University. The proposal is designed to prevent unauthorized uses of personal information the University would have, such as academic records or evaluations.

The proposal would also give "right of access" to individuals who would like to look at information the University would have on file about them.

Also on the agenda for today is discussion and approval of three collective bargaining agreements with three unions representing employees at the different campuses of the University. The agreements included increased salary and other benefits.

The Nominating Committee of the Board will also be proposing trustees to serve as officers of the board and chairpersons of the board's seven regular committees.

Joseph P. Healy is expected to continue as chairperson of the full board and of the Executive Committee.

LUTHER will join Black Affairs on Friday, February 4th. LUTHER is a comic strip, but of a different type because it deals with life as seen from the black ghetto through the innocent, honest and appealing eyes of black children.

Their humorous words and outlook on life will delight you and at the same time expand your knowledge of ghetto life which is so crucial to understanding our nation's racial strife.

LUTHER and his friends — Pee Wee, Hardcore, Lily, Oreo — will find their way into your heart each day as they share the joys, yearnings and frustrations of their community and world.

They will often turn about familiar phrases and sayings and given them fresh meaning, such as when Luther translates "open housing" as a hole in the bathroom ceiling. LUTHER's daily activities will intensify a growing awareness of the black community's plight and maybe even soften tensions a bit.

LUTHER's debut in Black Affairs of the Collegian will further reflect growing recognition of black artists entering all fields of the American media.

LUTHER is written and drawn by a fresh new talent, Brumsic Brandon Jr., who was raised in an eastern ghetto. LUTHER represents the fulfillment of a dream-come-true to Brandon, who learned his trade at New York University after a hitch in the Army.

He gave "birth" to LUTHER in the hospital while he was recuperating from a back operation. Currently he is also known as Mr. B.B. on an inner-city television show in New York, where he teaches black awareness while also performing as an artist.

Watch for LUTHER beginning Friday, February 4th. It is an exclusive feature found only in the pages of Black Affairs.

We are sorry

It has come to our attention that many of our readers felt the headline that appeared on Monday's issue of Black Affairs on the death of Freddie Prinze was insensitive and downright cold.

After careful thought, we too agree that a lack of judgement existed of which we fault no one but ourselves. At this time we would like to apologize to our readers. We sincerely meant no offense to anyone, especially to the brother who is no longer among us.

We too regret his death.

Cox to aid Indians

AUGUSTA, Maine [AP] — The legal team representing two Maine Indian tribes in their claim to 60 per cent of Maine land has received a boost from former special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox.

Cox, a Harvard Law School professor, agreed Tuesday to serve as a consultant without fee for the Passamaquoddy and Penobscot tribes, who have brought suit saying that 12.5 million acres of northern Maine was taken from them unjustly.

The tribal governors said Cox will be a consultant on litigation brought by, or on behalf of the Indians, as well as on other matters relating to the land claim suit.

Thomas Tureen, the Native American Rights Fund attorney who has led the Indians case, announced the appointment of Cox on behalf of the governors.

The lawyer for the Native American Rights Fund and the Washington D.C. firm of Hogan and Hartson also are working without charge in the case.

The 64-year-old Cox has been a long-time summer resident of the town of Brooksville on Penobscot Bay.

A one-time U.S. Solicitor-General, Cox was hired by former President Nixon as the special watergate prosecutor on May 18, 1973.

Cox was fired by the president in the "Saturday Night Massacre" of Oct. 20, 1973, and his dismissal resulted in the resignation of then-U.S. Atty. Gov. Elliot Richardson.

James St. Clair, who was Nixon's lawyer in the Watergate investigation, is involved in another New England Indian land case. St. Clair is representing the town of Mashpee, Mass., in its dispute with Wampanoag Indians over ownership of land on Cape Cod.

A suit pending in U.S. District Court in Portland seeks $300 million in damages, and the U.S. Justice Department is considering recommendations by the Interior Department to also seek return of the land.

The Justice Department, acting on behalf of the Indians, has until March 1 to inform the court of its plans to pursue the case.

The Indians maintain that their land was taken from them by the state without federal approval, a violation of a 1790 federal law.

Maine Atty. Gen. Joseph E. Brennan, who is in charge of the state's defense in the case, said he had no comment on Cox's decision to join with the Indians.
